The Congress, through one of its Members, has just received a most appalling and remarkable document. It was addressed indirectly to this body from the executive arm of the Government and it suggested that we adopt certain legislation regardless of our doubts as to its constitutionality. In other words, we are asked not to bear true faith to the Constitution, but to bow to the executive arm of the Government in respect to its demands for action. The duty of the Executive, as set forth in the Constitution, is to report upon the state of the Nation and to recommend action for the public good. There is no provision that any law or any act may be demanded. There is no provision for "must" legislation.

If we are to adopt the philosophy that the legislative is to be in any degree subject to the Executive arm of the Government we must accept full responsibility for that act. Whether or not the Executive may wish to lay on the doorstep of the Congress the blame for passage of unconstitutional laws in order that the people may become impressed with the presumed limitations of the Constitution, and thereby amend it, is a matter for grave conjecture. There can be no law of sufficient importance to warrant our ignoring the independence of the Congress. We are the elected representatives of the people and we should represent them within the reasonable limitations established by those who founded the Government. To amend the Constitution is a tedious process. It was so intended in order that we might be protected from rash acts which we might ourselves undertake in a moment of panic.

We are facing the proposition of whether we are to discharge our responsibilities as an independent establishment of the Government, or whether we are to become a voluntary adjunct to that branch which was created to administer our laws. We have already abdicated some of our power to make treaties; we have bestowed upon the Secretary of Agriculture many of our responsibilities in regard to taxation; we have deprived the States of powers expressly reserved for them; we have authorized a department head to interfere with the laws of nature and regulate the marketing and the prices of the necessities of life; and we have approved the production and sale of electric power by the Government itself.

Now, it is proposed that we go further and adopt amendments to the A. A. A. which are an unwarranted delegation of power to the Secretary of Agriculture. These amendments mark a new high in the surrender of our legislative powers and the shirking of our direct obligations to the American people. They give to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to define fair trade practices and to impose them upon industry without even the concurrence of a majority of the industry involved. One man has been given the authority to force marketing agreements on those engaged in industrial and agricultural pursuits and to regulate the manner in which their products are distributed.

Certainly no emergency exists which can justify such extraordinary action on the part of Congress. The Secretary of Agriculture has already demonstrated the utter futility of this program. While acting in the hope of assisting one portion of our citizenry, he manages to virtually destroy another. One needs only to examine the effects of his policies on the cotton and the cotton-textile industries to visualize what will happen to other industries if these powers are granted. Rather than consider legislation of this sort it would seem more to the interest of this country for the Congress to repeal some of that now being administered. The cotton-processing tax has long been the subject of much discussion and complaint throughout the country. The gradual disintegration of the cotton-textile industry is traceable directly to the processing taxes and the numerous regulations imposed upon that industry by this administration.

The manufacturers of cotton textiles are no longer able to compete in foreign markets with foreign producers of these goods, and they are likewise unable to sell their products within the United States because of abnormal prices created by the Secretary of Agriculture. If, instead of pursuing the vicious circle set in motion by the Secretary, we should stop this nonsense and repeal the processing tax, we might be able to rehabilitate the textile industry and at the same time give the cotton farmer some hope of a stable and prosperous future. Formerly 40 percent of all cotton grown in this country was consumed here. What is the percentage now?

In April 1934, about 26,500,000 cotton spindles were in operation in the United States. In February of this year, it had fallen to 25,100,000. In March the number of spindles in operation declined to 24,900,000 and in April 23,800,000 were operated. In the New England States less than 60 percent of the cotton spindles in place were active during that month. In my State which had 1,689,000 spindles in place, less than 800,000 were active. The average number of hours these spindles were in operation during the month was only 114, the lowest in the country. The same situation exists throughout New England.

The strong and highly justified demand for repeal of the cotton-processing tax and for curbing the increasing importations of textiles has been quieted by a special committee appointed by the President to look into the cotton-textile situation. This committee is composed largely of men who have previously expressed strong approval of the cotton-processing tax, one of whom has declared that if anything took place, it would be an increase in the tax. We have heard little of the findings of this committee. What is the meaning of this inertia? Are they attempting to quiet the storm of protest against the policies which are wrecking the cotton-textile industry until the amendments we are now considering can be written into law? Are they trying to wear down the resistance of industries in New England and the South, which are now fighting for their very existence?

With these amendments we make a sort of Delphian oracle out of the Department of Agriculture, with the Secretary of that Department presiding as the sacred prophet. We authorize him to finance his guesses at the expense of the taxpayers of the Nation, and we give him the power to apply any one of several devices for increasing the prices of agricultural commodities. After making his guess as to what the sun and the clouds and the wind and the rain may do next year, the Secretary will use his divining powers as a basis for buying up and storing farm products, or for dumping them abroad with Government subsidies. He may pay bounties on that portion of basic crops needed for domestic consumption and these payments will be in addition to rental and benefit payments. Are these amendments given in answer to the desperate prayer of the cotton textile regions for relief from the burden of the processing tax? Are we answering this prayer by making it no longer mandatory upon the Secretary to reduce processing taxes after parity prices are reached? He may go on and on forever, reaching into the pocketbooks of the American people for money to finance his dictatorship.

Furthermore, there is a question as to whether or not this bill is simply a deceptive move to continue the A. A. A. in spite of its unconstitutionality. There are many who believe that this is one of the principal reasons it is pending in Congress.

New England has little agriculture, and if these wild experiments continue it will have little industry. The people of New England are working almost as hard to earn money to pay the farmers to plow under their crops as they are working to feed and clothe their own children. With one hand the Secretary of Agriculture is emptying our pocketbooks and with the other he is making it impossible for us to replenish them. It is claimed that it is now necessary to put a tax on rayon because it competes with cotton, and it is claimed necessary to put a tax on silk because it competes with rayon. We are setting in motion a vicious circle which has no end—no end unless it be the collapse of our whole economic system.

There is no good reason for continuing any of these processing taxes. Section 15 of this bill seeks to levy a compensatory tax on rayon in direct violation of the mandate of Congress in the original Agricultural Adjustment Act. Rayon is not a basic commodity and any levy must be in the nature of a compensating tax to be adopted after due hearing and investigation. Has a hearing been granted the industry? The placing of a tax on rayon or any product competing with a basic commodity is the responsibility of the Secretary of Agriculture under the present law. Has he been unable to find ground for such a tax and is he now attempting to use the Congress as a means for levying those few taxes for which he can find no excuse under the law?

To place a tax on any commodity without a hearing or investigation is certainly a most unfair and unwise practice and one in which the Senate should not indulge. If the Secretary of Agriculture wishes to do so, that is his responsibility. No compensating tax has been placed on rayon to this date, and it is within the power of the Secretary to do so after establishing a need for it. What is the peculiar situation which prompts an action such as this?

We should delete all these processing taxes and finance our agricultural program from the General Treasury. We can expect nothing from this burden of taxes except an influx of competing goods from abroad and a further curtailment of our domestic market for our textiles. Consumer resistance cannot be regulated by law nor overcome by propaganda.

Not only are we authorizing the executive arm of the Government to impose taxes and to tamper with the natural laws of economics and of nature, but we are as well authorizing that branch to tamper with the orderly procedure of our courts. It is astonishing that we will even consider amendments which are so radical and far-reaching that they will prevent a taxpayer from recovering money illegally and unconstitutionally collected by the processing tax. The administration seeks to prevent taxpayers from securing refunds and to enable the Government to collect and keep taxes assessed even though they be declared unconstitutional. The bill provides that no suit shall be brought or maintained in the courts for a refund of processing taxes previously paid.

It further provides that a taxpayer shall not be permitted to obtain a declaratory judgment nor to secure a decision from the courts as to the validity of a tax. The attempt to deprive the taxpayer of every remedy to secure a refund of processing taxes previously paid is but a bare-faced repudiation of a Government obligation. It is in no way to be distinguished from the repudiation of a Government bond or other legitimate obligation. The proponents of the bill declare this is justified on the ground that the taxes paid have been passed on to the consumer. Is Congress possessed of such rare wisdom that it is able to determine that taxes have in all cases been passed on to the consumer? Those cotton mills that have lost hundreds of thousands of dollars during the past 2 years since the A. A. A. was enacted will doubtless be somewhat surprised at this arbitrary finding of fact without investigation.

The issue here involved is not the narrow question of whether or not the taxpayer should be deprived of all remedies with respect to the processing tax, but whether the Federal Government should be permitted to collect from the citizens of the country, in the guise of taxes, and retain as its own, without remedy on the part of the taxpayer, money to which it may have no lawful right. If this can be done, property in unlimited amount can be taken from our citizens without regard to constitutional limitations and devoted to such purposes as the Federal Government may in its absolute discretion see fit. It should be no answer to say in any case that the burden of the tax has been passed on to another, particularly where the tax has not in express terms been so transferred.

The question is one between the Government and the person who paid the tax; and if the tax was improperly collected, the money should be returned to the person paying it. Whether he should be permitted to keep it or should be required to pay the whole or part of the sum refunded to someone else is an entirely separate and independent question. Should it be desired as a means of protecting third persons who may have an interest in the refund, to permit them to intervene in any tax suit brought to secure such refund, this, of course, would be entirely proper and unobjectionable; but the Government should not be permitted to retain a tax illegally collected on the mere ground that it is not clear whether the person who paid the tax, if he recovers it, will be required to share the refund with someone else.

In the case of the processing tax the Government is acting as an intermediary for the transfer of money from one person to another. Is this a true tax for the general welfare or is the Government unconstitutionally acting as a collecting and disbursing agency? If it is a true tax, the funds should be used for the general good instead of benefits for a specific group, and if the converse is true, the tax is obviously unconstitutional.

This then is the administration's answer to the urgent appeal of the cotton-textile industry for relief from the processing tax. The tax is to be continued even though unconstitutional.

It has been almost exactly 300 years since the followers of Roger Williams sought relief from autocratic oppression and settled on the shores of Rhode Island. In his pocket he carried the first constitution adopted on these shores. The signature of all settlers was required to that document. I think this is an appropriate time to read it:

We whose names are hereunder written, being desirous of to inhabit in the town of Providence, do promise to submit ourselves in active and passive obedience to all such orders or agreements as shall be made for public good of the body, in an orderly way, by the major consent of the present inhabitants, masters of families incorporated together into a township, and such other things and they shall admit into the same, only in civil things.

This then was the origin of free government on these shores. Are we to destroy the work of three centuries by impulsive and rash acts sought from us by the executive arm of our Government?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, yesterday afternoon we had discussion with reference to a provision of the pending bill which would prevent the courts from entertaining petitions for injunction to prevent the collection of taxes. In view of the suits being started, some 150 or 160 in number, I think it is fair to state that it is on account of the fact that the bill attempts to deny the taxpayer his remedy for a refund of the tax paid that the suits are being entertained by the Federal judges.

In cooperation with others I have prepared a rather careful brief on this subject, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD at this point following these remarks for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the brief was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON TAX PROVISIONS OF H. R. 8492 (AMENDING THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF MAY 12, 1933, AS AMENDED)

I. LIMITATION ON SUITS FOR REFUND OF TAXES PAID PRIOR TO THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT

Section 32, on page 57, et seq., of H. R. 8492 as reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry provides:

"The Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding after section 20 the following new section:

"'SEC. 21. (a) No Federal or State court shall have jurisdiction to entertain a suit or proceeding against the United States or any collector of internal revenue or other internal-revenue officer, or any person who has been such a collector or officer, or the personal representative of any such collector, officer, or person (nor shall any such suit or proceeding be brought or maintained in, nor shall any judgment or decree be entered by, any such court) (1) for the recoupment, set-off, recovery, refund, or credit of, or on any counterclaim for, any amount of any tax, interest, or penalty assessed, paid, collected, or accrued under this title prior to the date of the adoption of this amendment, or (2) for damages for the collection thereof. Except pursuant to a final judgment or decree entered prior to the date of the adoption of this amendment, no recovery, recoupment, set-off, refund, or credit of, or counterclaim for, any amount of any tax, interest, or penalty assessed, paid, collected, or accrued under this title prior to the date of the adoption of this amendment shall be made or allowed. The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to (1) any overpayment of tax which results from an error in the computation of the tax, or (2) duplicate payments of any tax, or (3) any refund or credit under subsection (a) (reduction of tax if Secretary of Agriculture in his judgment determines that it will increase consumption of processed goods) or (c) (processed goods delivered to any charitable organization for its own use) of section 15, under paragraph (1) of subsection (e) of section 16 (adjustment to conform to current change in rate of tax determined by Secretary of Agriculture), or under section 17 (exports) of this title, or (4) any refund or credit to the processor of any tax paid by him with respect to articles exported pursuant to the provisions of section 317 of the Tariff Act of 1930.'"

The report (No. 1011) of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate states (p. 23) that:

"The practical effect of this provision will be to prevent any refunds of taxes already collected upon the ground that the act or the actions of the Secretary thereunder are illegal. The justification for such a provision denying refunds is found in the fact that the taxes paid have been passed on to the consumer. The constitutional basis for such a provision is found in the power of the United States at any time to assert its sovereign right not to be sued, and the power of Congress to determine the jurisdiction of the courts."

(a) Alleged justification for the provision

The reason given by the Senate committee, as well as that publicly assigned, for this proposed amendment, is that the processors who have paid these taxes have passed them on and should not now be entitled to recover. This premise is not justified in many cases. These taxes were not usually added to the invoice, as were certain automobile excise taxes (sec. 424 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1928). They were, in substance and fact, one of the costs of the raw material (cotton, wheat, etc.) which was added to the other manufacturing costs going into the finished product. The manufacturer then had to sell his product on the market in competition with others.

For instance, the selling prices of some textile goods (by trade practice and custom) bear a fixed relation to one another dependent upon their quality—e. g., cotton shirts at $1, $1.50, and $2. The margin of profit in the case of the lowest price is so small that it would not permit the retailer merely to add the tax to the selling price and still keep his market. The margin of profit on the higher-priced goods would be more apt to take care of the tax. If he added the tax to the selling price of the lowest-priced goods, but did not increase the standard price of the next higher grade of goods by the amount of the tax (because the margin of profit on the latter is already sufficient to cover the tax), he would be violating the trade custom of a fixed ratio between the prices of the various classes of goods. This would lead to sales resistance and would tend to reduce the consumption of goods contrary to the purpose of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Accordingly, the retailer would not assume the burden of the tax on the lower-priced goods, and the wholesaler therefore could not pass it on.

We have been advised that the rayon manufacturers have for some time been selling their products at cost—presumably by reason of Japanese competition. If a tax is now imposed on rayon (as proposed by section 15 of the amendment as reported by the Senate committee), the manufacturers cannot possibly pass it on, because if they should increase the selling price (at cost) they would lose even such part of the market as they have so far been able to retain. This is but another illustration of the impossibility of passing on the tax.

The processing tax cannot be identified in the selling price with any more certainty than any other item of manufacturing cost—and, if the processor did not receive sufficient income to offset his costs and provide a reasonable return upon his capital, or if he operated at a loss, which was frequently the case, it is difficult to justify the assumption (as a reason for the statutory provision) that the processor was reimbursed for processing taxes any more than for any other type of expense. In such cases it is most certain that some of the manufacturing costs have not been recovered and therefore have not been passed on.

For example, many cotton mills during 1934 were not earning a reasonable return upon their investment (National City Bank Bulletin on Economic Conditions, Apr. 1935, p. 58), and from the middle of 1934 operated at a loss (Report of Federal Trade Commission on Textile Industries, pt. I, relating to investment and profit, Dec. 31, 1934, p. 10). Certainly an industrial group which has operated at a loss has not passed on all its expenses and costs. It is difficult to predicate upon these facts an assumption that the processor has been reimbursed for the processing tax and thus passed it on, but has not been reimbursed for some of the other costs. While the theory asserted may have been that the mills should only act as a collecting agency for the processing tax, the practical situation is that the tax became a part of the increased cost of the raw material, and the processor has not been able to increase his sales price proportionately.

It has normally been necessary for the processor to pay the tax before receiving any reimbursement from the sale of the manufactured goods. With the prevailing unfavorable conditions and with the unfair competition fostered by overproduction, the tax, in part or in whole, could not, in many instances, be passed along. This added to losses already existing and increased the deficit. (Brief submitted by the Rhode Island Textile Association to the Governor's Committee to Investigate the Problems of the Textile Industry, Mar. 4, 1935.) The preliminary findings of the survey of the cotton-textile industry in New England (prepared by the New England Council, Mar. 22, 1935) includes the following statement:

"Practically every one of the 73 companies mentioned took pains to state their experiences with the processing tax and its effects on their respective businesses.

"Considerable diversity of opinion is shown in the returns as to the effects of this tax. There is, however, nearly unanimous agreement that current selling prices do not cover total costs. A few returns point out that for a time after the tax became effective, prices covered all costs, including the tax. (Recent Government statistics on cotton-textile profits, North and South, indicate that this must have been true for about the first year of the tax.)

"The relatively steady rise during the last 12 months in the price of raw cotton, an average increase per pound equal to if not greater than the 4.2 cents per pound tax may be the major reason why prices do not now cover costs. The majority of the manufacturers who replied say that they have had to absorb from 25 to 100 percent of the tax. This is because of the extremely competitive situation prevailing due to production being in excess of demand, the inroads into the domestic and also the foreign markets by Japanese and other foreign producers of cotton textiles, and the increasing resistance of consumers generally to any higher prices for cotton goods."

It is clear that the Senate committee's report stating "that the taxes paid have been passed on to the consumer", is incorrect in many cases—probably in the majority of them. There is, therefore, no blanket justification for the above proposed amendment.

(b) Denial of due process

The fifth amendment, as is well known, provides that no person shall "be deprived of * * * property without due process of law." This in itself is a substantive right guaranteed by the Constitution. Denial of due process therefore takes away a substantive right. All the Court decisions have held that Congress may not take away a right guaranteed by the Constitution even if it can limit the legal remedies.

"It must be confessed, however, that the constitutional meaning or value of the phrase 'due process of law', remains today without that satisfactory precision of definition which judicial decisions have given to nearly all the other guarantees of personal rights found in the constitutions of the several States and of the United States" (Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 101). (Italics supplied.)

Nevertheless, the Supreme Court has marked out certain limitations imposed upon the legislative power by the requirement of due process. Thus in Murray v. The Hoboken Land & Improvement Co. (18 How. 272), at 276, the Supreme Court made the following statement:

"* * * The Constitution contains no description of those processes which it was intended to allow or forbid. It does not even declare what principles are to be applied to ascertain whether it be due process. It is manifest that it was not left to the legislative power to enact any process which might be devised. The article is a restraint on the legislative as well as on the executive and judicial powers of the Government, and cannot be so construed as to leave Congress free to make any process 'due process of law', by its mere will." (Italics supplied.)

Judge Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations (sec. 356), gave the following definition of due process:

"Due process of law in each particular case means such an exertion of the powers of government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs."

From the above it is clear that there are some safeguards which Congress must recognize in protection of a person's constitutional right. To deny all remedy in this instance is to deny the right itself—due process.

It has been held that "a denial by a State court of a recovery of taxes exacted in violation of the laws or Constitution of the United States by compulsion is itself in contravention of the fourteenth amendment" (Carpenter v. Shaw, 280 U. S. 363, 369). The phrase "due process" has the same meaning in the fifth and fourteenth amendments (McGarvey v. Swan, 17 Wyo. 120, 96 Pac. 697; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 535).

When the processing taxes were paid the taxpayer, by virtue of section 3224 of the Revised Statutes, could not enjoin their collection. It was understood, as the law permitted at the time, that claims for refund could be filed (on the ground that the taxes were unconstitutional or illegally imposed) and that if denied, suit could be brought for the refund. The courts, in upholding Revised Statutes, section 3224, have done so upon the understanding that another remedy was available to the taxpayer; that is, a suit to recover taxes paid after refund has been denied (Dodge v. Osborn, 240 U. S. 118), and they have refused to obey the mandate of section 3224 to deny an injunction, where no adequate remedy at law was available.

An appeal to the executive department on the ground that the taxes were unconstitutional or illegal for other reasons would have been of no avail, so that, as a practical matter, the taxpayer had no right of appeal to the executive department in this respect.

The Senate provision would bar suits not only against the United States but even against the collector of internal revenue or his representatives. For Congress now to deny the right to sue for refund or to obtain judgment therefor is certainly denying recovery of taxes exacted in violation of the Constitution, provided their imposition is unconstitutional.

But Congress proposes to go further than to deny the taxpayer the right to sue in court. It would deny the right to any refund or recovery of the tax at all, irrespective of any remedy which someone might conceive the taxpayer had and in total disregard as to whether the taxes were constitutionally imposed or legally collected. This undoubtedly is the ultimate in the denial of a remedy. No safeguard of the taxpayer's rights is left under the provision, and therefore it must follow that Congress would be denying the substantive constitutional right to due process.

In Lynch v. United States (292 U. S. 571), it is said that Congress is under no obligation to provide a remedy through the courts and that it may limit the individual to administrative remedies. The decision went so far as to add "* * * withdrawal of all remedy, administrative as well as legal, would not necessarily imply repudiation. So long as the contractual obligation is recognized, Congress may direct its fulfillment without the interposition of either a court or an administrative tribunal." But in the case of processing taxes imposed prior to the proposed amendment, Congress would not be recognizing the right of due process. It should be noted, however, that in the Lynch case some form of remedy was not denied.

Even in the case of Cary v. Curtis (44 U. S. 236), the Supreme Court did not hold that Congress could deny, or intended to deny, all remedy. It merely held that the taxpayer could not sue the collector by virtue of a statute therein involved, despite any interpretation which might be given Mr. Justice Story's forceful dissenting opinion.

It was said in Brinkerhoff-Faris Trust & Savings Co. v. Hill (281 U. S. 673, 682):

"But, while it is for the State courts to determine the adjective as well as the substantive law of the State, they must, in so doing, accord the parties due process of law. Whether acting through its judiciary or through its legislature, a State may not deprive a person of all existing remedies for the enforcement of a right, which the State has no power to destroy, unless there is, or was, afforded to him some real opportunity to protect it."

The Supreme Court, as late as 1931, in Graham v. Goodcell (282 U. S. 409), citing the case of Brinkerhoff-Faris Trust & Savings Co. v. Hill, said:

"* * * it is not necessary to consider the authority of the Congress to withdraw the consent of the United States to be sued. (See United States v. Heinszen & Co., supra, at p. 391 of 206 U. S., 27 S. Ct. 742.) The argument of the Government in this respect is not adequate to dispose of the controversy. Some of the present suits were brought against the collector individually and were based upon the right to recover as against him by reason of his illegal acts. Such an action is personal and not against the United States (Sage v. United States, 250 U. S. 33, 37, 39 S. Ct. 415, 63 L. Ed. 828; Smietanka v. Indiana Steel Co., 257 U. S. 1, 4, 5, 42 S. Ct. 1, 66 L. Ed. 99). If the Congress did not have the authority to deal by a curative statute with the taxpayers' asserted substantive right, in the circumstances described, it could not be concluded that the Congress could accomplish the same result by denying to the taxpayers all remedy both as against the United States and also as against the one who committed the wrong."

The proposed amendment, denying to the taxpayer, as it does, any and all remedy, clearly runs counter to the Supreme Court's interpretation of the fifth amendment. The proposed amendment would not be merely denying a remedy, but would be denying the substantitive right of due process.

(c) Policy

1. Perhaps Congress can prohibit the protection of rights guaranteed under the Constitution by withdrawing the privilege of suit in any form and preventing any refunds of taxes. Nevertheless, is Congress justified in accomplishing whatever it has in mind by using any means to do so, even if they are in violation of the Constitution? For the United States publicly to declare that it will retain taxes, even though unlawfully taken, is beneath its dignity.

2. The proposed statutory provision will penalize those who have paid the processing taxes and benefit those who have refused to pay or have evaded the tax.

3. Taxpayers will be encouraged in the future to understate and underpay taxes of any kind. They will fear similar legislation endeavoring to prevent suits for refund. The contrast in this connection is significant between the cooperation of the taxpayer in England with his Government and the attitude of the taxpayer in France. The difference can be attributed in large part to the policy of the British Government in fostering the good will of the taxpayer. England is the only country in Europe which has not been compelled to resort to the sales tax for revenue purposes. (See T. M. Gordon, The Canadian Sales Tax, 1930; National Industrial Conference Board, Sales Taxes; General, Selective, and Retail, 1932.)

4. The proposed amendment, if enacted, would seriously interfere with the collection of the revenues. Until recently taxes were collected first and litigated through claims for refund. By reason of public demand, the right to litigate income and estate taxes before payment was first granted in 1924 when the Board of Tax Appeals was created (secs. 274, 280, and 308, Revenue Act of 1924—and similar sections in subsequent revenue acts). For other taxes, however, taxpayers were left to their suits for refund after payment. If this right is taken from them, Congress will find itself confronted with an overwhelming demand to litigate all taxes before payment, with consequent delay in collection and ultimate loss of revenues.

5. As pointed out above, for many years the Revised Statutes (Sec. 3224) have provided that no injunction should be issued restraining the collection of taxes. This has generally been upheld by the courts on the ground that an adequate remedy at law was available by a suit for refund. The courts have refused to follow that provision, however, where it has been shown that the remedy at law was inadequate. If Congress may do away with that remedy, and if Congress does so with respect to these taxes, may not the courts hereafter say, with respect to any tax, that the right to sue for refund is not an adequate remedy? Will Congress not have disclosed how inadequate is that remedy? And if the right of refund is disclosed as inadequate because it may be revoked, will the courts hereafter be justified in refusing an injunction against collection of any tax which is doubtful in any respect? It is reasonable to predict that if Congress passes this statute the courts will hereafter permit injunctions in tax suits. The results will necessarily be a serious and permanent damage to all future taxes.

6. Several cases are already pending in the courts in which the taxpayers have been put to substantial trouble and considerable expense in litigating their tax liability for floor stock and processing taxes. It is unjust to deny them the right to continue these cases to judgment and to obtain any proper recovery of tax, even on the ground that the taxes are unconstitutional or illegally collected.

If Congress should see fit to cut off the claims of taxpayers who had not yet made demand for refund of moneys erroneously collected, it should at least follow the policy indicated in sections 810 (d) and 1106 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1932, wherein it is provided that new provisions in those sections shall not "bar from allowance a claim for refund filed prior to enactment of this act which, but for such enactment, would have been allowable." Failing this, Congress should follow the policy indicated in section 424 (a) (1) of the Revenue Act of 1928 regarding refund of excise taxes, wherein it is provided that restrictions on refund should not apply in suits duly begun prior to a specified date. See also, section 1103 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1932. Some saving clause should be provided as an addition to the amendment now proposed, and at least the following:

"Suits in court instituted before the enactment of this amendment shall not be affected by its provisions."

II. LIMITATION ON REFUNDS OF TAXES PAID SUBSEQUENT TO THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT

Section 32, on page 59 et seq., of H. R. 8492, as reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, provides amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, by adding sections 21 (b) and (d). Without quoting the provisions herein, it is sufficient to point out that not only are suits to enjoin the collection of taxes and to obtain declaratory judgments under the Federal Declaratory Judgments Act denied but also any refunds pursuant to suits for refund, unless the taxpayer proves to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or to the court, that he has himself sustained the burden of the taxes. This latter requirement, as a practical matter of proof, probably cannot be met by many, if any, taxpayers. The provisions of the proposed section 21 (d) are obviously inserted to prevent refunds in practice, because it is known the taxpayer, except possibly in a few instances, cannot prove that he sustained the burden of the tax. This may be so, even though such evidence as exists indicates that he did, in fact, bear the tax himself.

It is noted that section 21 (d) provides that if section 21 (a) is declared unconstitutional, with respect to taxes already accrued, it shall be up to the taxpayer to prove that he sustained the burden of the tax. The taxpayer was not forewarned that he should keep records which would enable him to prove that he ultimately sustained this burden.

If suit to enjoin or to obtain a declaratory judgment and recovery under suits for refund is in substance denied, the taxpayer's constitutional right to due process is abrogated. The same reasons therefore exist against these proposed amendments as obtain in respect to the amendment first discussed in this memorandum.

These provisions are contrary to the letter and spirit of the Constitution and to all principles of fairness for which the courts and Congress have stood. They are the entering wedge by which citizens may be deprived of their constitutional rights and the courts of their jurisdiction to protect the rights of person and property. They go too far for public support. They should receive no encouragement from any officer of the Government who values a constitutional form of government or his oath of office.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa whether his remarks are intended to convey the impression which prevails that if these suits be brought now in expectation of the passage of the bill, they will have a status in court which will continue, notwithstanding the passage of the bill?

Mr. DICKINSON. I think that is correct.

Mr. GORE. As I remember the language of the bill, it is that no suits shall be brought or maintained, which language would vacate the suits now being filed.

Mr. DICKINSON. That may be true, but it is my understanding that the suits are being entertained by the Federal courts on the theory that they are being filed in anticipation that the pending bill may become the law.

Mr. GORE. I do not believe that the statute read yesterday constitutes a bar in the way of bringing suit to test the constitutionality of a tax. I placed in the RECORD yesterday a reference to the case of Hill v. Wallace (259 U. S.), where the court entertained such a suit notwithstanding the section read yesterday by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. The section which he read provides that no injunction to restrain the collection of a tax shall be issued, or rather that the collection of a tax shall not be enjoined. In the case to which I have referred, an injunction was issued and was sustained, and the tax was held unconstitutional.

REGULATION OF UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES—APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the matter which I desire to discuss for just a minute does not pertain to the bill under consideration, but I presume it might be put in the category of a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know if the custom and rule of nearly 150 years have been abrogated and set aside in the matter of appointing conferees on the part of the Senate?

So far as I am individually concerned, I do not think any of my colleagues are very desirous of going through the arduous work of serving as conferees, especially on a highly controversial subject; but in spite of the fact that I have twice been Chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and have been its ranking member for a number of years, without a word being said as to whether or not I desired to go on the conference committee under the custom of 150 years, I notice that conferees were appointed who were notoriously in favor of a certain controversial provision of the bill. I wish to have my constituents who read the RECORD advised as to how it happens that a rule which is so old has been suddenly ignored, and that apparently the Vice President hereafter will name conferees without regard to the members of the committee or the chairman thereof.

We seem to have set aside the former rule. It is not law. It is not a constitutional provision. It is, however, a rule which by age and custom has grown to be more powerful or as powerful as the law. I ask the Chair if hereafter a new rule which has been arbitrarily made will be observed? I make that inquiry in order that the public may be advised that it is not a question of discrimination, but simply a question of the selection of those more favorably inclined toward measures that come to this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). The present occupant of the chair will answer that he is not informed as to whether or not that is to be the rule from this time on.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am very sorry, because I had hoped this matter could now be settled. I have been here for more than a quarter of a century, and this is the first time I have ever known that custom to be broken.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I am unable to gather the force of the Senator's remarks. To what conference is he referring?

Mr. SMITH. I am referring to the fact that certain names were put on the list of conferees on the utilities holding company bill that certainly did not come within the category of rank on the committee or of length of service.

I have not a particle of feeling in the matter. If it is to be the rule of the Senate hereafter that the chairman of the committee shall have nothing to do with the appointment of conferees, and that the Vice President shall name them, it is all well and good; but I should not like the impression to go out that some of us who have been here for a long time happen adventitiously to be left off conference committees for some reason that might cause our constituents to wonder why it was done.

On the conference committee on the utilities bill I think there was but one member who had been a member of the committee for any considerable time. I now ask the Vice President, if there be no law on the subject, if it is to be the rule hereafter that the Vice President will name the conferees, regardless of the custom which heretofore has prevailed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will say to the Senator from South Carolina that sometime ago, in a discussion of conferees, he announced that so far as he was concerned, when the Senate put upon him the obligation and duty of appointing conferees, he was going to try, so far as possible, to select conferees who represented the sentiment of the Senate.

The present occupant of the chair has just entered the Chamber. The Chair understands that in this particular case the Senator is complaining about the conferees appointed on the utilities bill.

Mr. SMITH. No, Mr. President; not particularly that. I observed that several times lately conferees have been appointed without regard to their seniority on the committee. I have been here for more than a quarter of a century, and I never knew that to occur but once or twice heretofore; and even then, when it occurred, the ranking members were consulted before the appointment was made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has taken the responsibility of appointing conferees. If the Senate desires to take the responsibility, the Chair will be very happy and very much delighted to have the Senate itself take the responsibility; or, if the Senate will adopt a rule making it the duty of the Chair to appoint conferees according to their seniority, the Chair will carry out the rule of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH. All I desired was to have the statement go into the RECORD that the Vice President has assumed that responsibility, and will maintain it until such time as the Senate may provide some other rule. I did not wish any reflections to be cast on myself or my colleagues by virtue of the sudden abandonment of the former rule in the face of some very important legislation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to make a few brief remarks concerning the statement of the Senator from South Carolina.

In the first place, there is nothing in the rules, either directly or indirectly, which suggests that conferees appointed on the part of the Senate should be selected by seniority from the committee which had the bill under consideration when it was in committee. As a matter of fact, that is merely a practice which I acknowledge, as the Senator has stated, has been followed in this body for a great many years.

The fact is, however, that when the motion is made, it provides that the Chair shall appoint the conferees. Therefore, the Vice President has not usurped any power. He is merely discharging a responsibility which is placed upon him by the Senate when it adopts a motion that the Chair shall appoint conferees.

So far as the seniority practice is concerned—which, I reiterate, is not provided for by the rules—I desire to say that, in my humble opinion, it has nothing whatever to do with the fitness of individual Senators to represent the Senate in a conference over the disagreeing votes of the two Houses as to a particular piece of legislation, because time after time in my experience in this body, when that practice has been followed, Senators have been selected to represent the Senate because of their position of seniority upon committees who, in their capacity as Members of the Senate, have fought against the position which ultimately prevailed, and therefore, in my opinion, were not logically in a position where they could properly defend, in good conscience, the position which this body had taken by a majority vote.

Therefore, Mr. President, as one Member of this body, I desire to state for the RECORD that I think the present Presiding Officer of the Senate is discharging his responsibility to this body and to the country, and that the course he has adopted will result in a more adequate, a more appropriate, and a more fitting defense of the position which the Senate takes upon legislative questions than will be obtained by following the precedent of seniority.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am not going to have the Senator from Wisconsin lecture me on question of customs or morals or fitness. I simply rose to ask whether in this emergency the rule was temporarily changed or whether it was to be the permanent custom to dispense with the form—and it was a mere form—that the Presiding Officer should name the conferees suggested to him. We all knew the names were furnished the Presiding Officer. All I wanted to know was whether he was to name the conferees in the first place.

I do not doubt but that it will work out all right, and I do not doubt but that there are younger Members of the Senate who can serve more satisfactorily than the older Members. Fitness may be determined by a man's service in the Senate. I was not questioning the efficiency of anyone. I was simply seeking information as to whether a new rule had been invoked.

There was no responsibility on the Vice President. We all knew that the custom was for names to be written and handed up to him. We all knew that. If he is to assume the responsibility which we had previously assumed, I have not a word to say. It relieves a lot of us of some very unpleasant work, and relieves those of us who are not efficient from being put in places where efficiency is called for. It simply makes it possible for the Vice President to select efficient men and to leave the inefficient off. Of course, he will discharge that duty in accordance with the position taken by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have no desire to proceed with this debate; but I wish to say that if the Senator from South Carolina got the impression from anything I said that I was attempting to reflect upon the efficiency or the sincerity of any Senator, including the Senator from South Carolina, I withdraw any such imputation, if it is to be found in my remarks.

As I see it, it is a very important question whether the Vice President is to discharge his responsibility under a motion adopted by the Senate to select conferees, or whether such a motion is to be made and the Chair is to have the responsibility only in form, and the actual selection of the conferees is to be made by the chairman of a committee, who proposes a list of names. I did not intend to imply that there is any question of efficiency involved in the situation. As I see it, it is a question of selecting conferees who are in sympathy with the position which the Senate takes on questions of legislative importance; and that, of course, is to be determined by a consideration of the votes and by the position which Senators take upon important questions when a particular measure is under consideration and being debated.

I have known of many instances, in the nearly 10 years I have been a Member of this body, where by following the rule of seniority in choosing conferees Senators have been appointed who have voted against the position taken by the Senate upon important questions involved in legislation. I also have seen examples of the exercise of that prerogative in a manner which defeated the position which a majority of this body has taken upon important amendments and important provisions of legislation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, just one word more, and I will have no more to say on the subject.

I think the old rule was a very wholesome one, because I have never known of a case, even where a conferee was against a measure, where he was not absolutely loyal in his vote to the position of the body which he represented. But I think that very often those who are opposed to a measure and who are on a conference can so conduct themselves as to represent the minority opinion, even though they are bound to vote to sustain their own House. I think the representation of the minority very often is wholesome, even though such conferees are bound by morals and decency to support the majority of the body which has voted.

So far as I am concerned, I have served the purpose for which I rose; that is, to find that we have a new order of things.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask the Senate to permit him to make a statement touching the matter just discussed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Up to the present time the Chair has in each instance consulted the chairman of the committee having in charge legislation passed by the Senate, and talked over with him the appointment of conferees. In the case of the public-works bill the present occupant of the chair stated that he could not be put in the attitude of taking the responsibility of appointing conferees and having no discretion in the premises. The result is that so long as the Senate puts that responsibility upon the Presiding Officer the present occupant of the chair is going to exercise some discretion. He intends to follow that rule in the future. The Chair would be very glad if the Senate would select its own conferees. That would relieve him entirely.

The present occupant of the chair has appointed conferees recently in only two cases, so he does not know what caused the Senator from South Carolina to propound the query. The present occupant of the chair appointed conferees on the public-utilities bill. He consulted the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who went over the list and agreed on the Members to be appointed.

The present occupant of the chair yesterday appointed conferees on what is known as the "T. V. A. bill", and consulted with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], appointing the three Senators suggested by the Senator from Nebraska. The Chair might state that he appointed the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] because, from the observation of the Chair of the conduct of the bill on the floor of the Senate, the Senator from Nebraska was more responsible than any other Member of the Senate for the passage of the bill, and the Chair thought it was perfectly proper to appoint the Senator from Nebraska as a conferee.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have several communications I desire to have printed in the RECORD, which I desire to call to the attention of Members of the Senate, particularly for the benefit of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who is entitled to know the attitude taken by these correspondents.

These communications are from the National Cooperative Council, the Standard Growers Association, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the American Cotton Cooperative Association, the National Livestock Marketing Association, and the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation.

Mr. President, section 39 of the present bill should be stricken out. It is in fact and effect an amendment to existing agricultural credit laws which are administered by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, and has no place in a bill which will be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture. Moreover, I am assured that neither Governor Myers nor Secretary Wallace wants this proposed provision.

I am assured also that the National Cooperative Council, which comprises nearly all the important farmers' cooperatives of the country, is opposed to this section 39. I know also, from the communication I am presenting for the RECORD, that the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, and other national farm organizations are opposed to this provision. In fact, so far as I can ascertain, the chief support for the provisions comes from private cotton buyers throughout the South.

Earlier in this session of the Congress we passed the Farm Credit Act of 1935. The Committee on Banking and Currency held extensive hearings on the measure. These cotton buyers came before the committee in the name of the American Cotton Shippers Association. They attacked the cotton cooperatives, charging various kinds of inefficiency, and charging unfair relations between the cotton cooperatives and the Government.

The Committee on Banking and Currency made inquiry into those charges, and the record of our hearings will show evidence from the Farm Credit Administration and the cotton cooperative associations to disprove the charges.

If section 39 of the A. A. A. bill were adopted, the American Cotton Cooperative Association would be unable to act as agent for the Secretary of Agriculture in handling the large amount of cotton in the hands of the Government, or else it would be rendered ineligible for loans from the Farm Credit Administration. It is obviously unwise for us to legislate such a hardship upon cooperative marketing associations.

It should be easy for us to vote with the farmers, with the Department of Agriculture, and with the Farm Credit Administration in this matter by striking out the section. I, for one, much prefer to be listed as a friend to the farmer and to the Administration than to be listed as a friend of dealers in cotton.

I ask that the communications to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL COOPERATIVE COUNCIL,
Washington, D. C., July 5, 1935.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: The Senate Committee on Agriculture, in our judgment, has made a tragic mistake in section 39 of the A. A. A. bill (H. R. 8492 as reported by the Senate committee).

"SEC. 39. No cotton cooperative association shall be eligible for any loan authorized to be made to cooperative associations by any agency of the Government, unless such association handles the product of or supplies of bona fide cotton-producing members in an amount at least equal in value to such as are dealt in for persons other than such bona fide members."

We assure you that farm cooperatives and general farm organizations are unanimous in urging that the section be stricken out, for these four reasons:

(1) The A. A. A. bill is not an appropriate place for amendments to the Farm Credit Act.

(2) Section 39 would establish a dangerous precedent. When any change is made in cooperative credit laws, the change should affect all cooperatives alike; cotton cooperatives should not be singled out for special treatment.

(3) Section 39, if enacted, will prohibit the cotton cooperatives from acting as agents for the Secretary of Agriculture in the handling of his large stocks of cotton despite the fact (as officials of the Department can verify) that the cotton cooperatives have rendered an exceedingly economical, efficient, and satisfactory service.

(4) Although section 39 sounds harmless, its effect is to crucify the cotton cooperatives. The American Cotton Cooperative Association is the central cooperative sales and service agency established and owned by 14 State or regional cotton cooperatives. It has no bona fide cotton-producing members, because its members are the 14 State associations. Both under the Capper-Volstead Act and the Farm Credit Act provision is made for federations of cooperatives for joint marketing, but section 39 leaves the American Cotton Cooperative Association completely out of the definition of eligible cooperatives.

Moreover, the American Cotton Cooperative Association last year classed or otherwise handled approximately 950,000 bales for the Department of Agriculture. It marketed approximately 810,000 bales for "bona fide cotton-producing members" of its member associations. Hence it did not handle membership cotton in excess of the amount "dealt in for persons other than such bona fide members."

If the purpose of the committee is to deny American Cotton Cooperative Association the right to borrow from the Farm Credit Administration or to deny the Department of Agriculture the right to employ the association for technical assistance, then section 39 should be drawn in such manner as frankly to express this purpose, in order that the Senate may know what it is asked to vote upon and what the precedent may lead to in the future.

For the reasons above outlined, I am directed by the council to protest against section 39 and to urge that it be stricken from the bill.

Very truly yours,

ROBIN HOOD,
Secretary-Treasurer National Cooperative Council.

SANFORD, FLA., July 5, 1935.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER:

Section 39, inserted in A. A. A. amended bill by Senate Committee on Agriculture, strong threat toward final destruction all farmers' cooperatives. Must urge your support in demanding the complete elimination this vicious, unwarranted threat, ultimately all cooperatives, making them ineligible to borrow from that Farm Credit Administration.

STANDARD GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
Washington, D. C., July 6, 1935.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: The American Farm Bureau Federation has always supported legislation in behalf of cooperative associations and has likewise supported those associations when they have been under attack.

The Cotton Cooperative Association is now definitely being attacked in section 39 of H. R. 8492 as reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. To deny any cooperative association the eligibility of borrowing from an agency of the Government unless such association complies with provisions which are not contained in the regularly enacted statutes relating to cooperative associations is indefensible. Section 39 seeks to set up provisions to govern cotton cooperative associations which are not contained in the original Capper-Volstead Act, nor in more recent definitions of cooperative associations in farm-credit statutes.

Accordingly, it is recommended most earnestly that section 39 be entirely deleted from the bill.

Very respectfully,

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
CHESTER H. GRAY,
Washington Representative.

THE NATIONAL GRANGE,
Washington, D. C., July 6, 1935.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: It will be appreciated by the National Grange if you will kindly use your influence to secure the elimination of section 39 of H. R. 8492, containing the proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

The section in question reads as follows:

"SEC. 39. No cotton cooperative association shall be eligible for any loan authorized to be made to cooperative associations by any agency of the Government, unless such associations handle the products of or supplies of bona fide cotton-producing members in an amount at least equal in value to such as are dealt in for persons other than bona fide members."

In our opinion the enactment of this section would to all practical intent and purposes destroy the American Cotton Cooperative Association, which is a federation or sales agency for 14 States or regional cooperatives.

Sincerely yours,

FRED BRENCKMAN,
Washington Representative.

AMERICAN COTTON COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION,
New Orleans, July 6, 1935.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Chairman Committee on Banking and Currency,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: As is shown by the hearings before your committee on February 5, 1935, when the Farm Credit Act of 1935 was under consideration, section 39 of the A. A. A. bill as reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture should be eliminated.

The effect of section 39 is to cripple the operations of the cotton cooperatives very seriously. It would prevent the American Cotton Cooperative Association from assisting the Department of Agricultrue in handling the surplus cotton, which is under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture.

It would also render the American Cotton Cooperative Association ineligible for any loans from the Farm Credit Administration or the banks for cooperatives. This organization has no bona fide cotton-producing members, because its members are the 14 State and regional cotton cooperatives.

When your committee held its hearings on the farm-credit bill, representatives of cotton brokers, in the name of the American Cotton Shippers Association, appeared in opposition to a provision, declaring that commodities handled for agencies of the Government should not be considered as either member or nonmember business. After according me an opportunity to be heard on the subject and after hearing from Governor Myers, your committee refused to grant the demand of the American Cotton Shippers Association for elimination of sections 11 and 12 of the Farm Credit Act. Your committee reported the bill out and the bill was enacted into law.

Section 39 of the A. A. A. bill would undo the work of your committee in respect to this matter.

I trust, therefore, that you will exert your influence toward striking out section 39.

Very truly yours,

N. C. WILLIAMSON,
President American Cotton Cooperative Association.

NATIONAL LIVE STOCK MARKETING ASSOCIATION,
Chicago, July 6, 1935.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Chairman Committee on Banking and Finance,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: We urge that you use your influence to remove section 39 from the A. A. A. bill. This section is an unfair and unjustifiable restriction upon cotton cooperatives and would establish a precedent of great danger to the entire cooperative movement.

Very truly yours,

P. O. WILSON,
Secretary-Manager National Live Stock Marketing Association.

THE NATIONAL COOPERATIVE MILK PRODUCERS' FEDERATION,
Washington, D. C., July 6, 1935.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has inserted in the proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act a new section which will have the effect of putting out of business the American Cotton Cooperative Association, the largest farmer-owned and farmer-controlled cotton cooperative association in the United States.

This section, which is numbered 39 in the amendments now pending in the Senate, should be eliminated entirely. Although the section refers only to cotton cooperatives, we in the cooperative movement feel that it is the first step taken by the enemies of organized agriculture to destroy farmers' cooperative associations, which have been developed under the guidance and encouragement of both State and Federal Governments.

In addition, this matter is one which primarily affects the operations of the Farm Credit Administration. The subject is one which is not germane to the amendments now before the Senate. If any restrictions are to be placed around the operations of farmers' cooperative associations in addition to the existing law, these changes should only be made after adequate notice and opportunity for hearing of interested parties, and then only after a careful study of the problem by that Government agency charged with the duty of encouraging and developing the cooperative movement among farmers, to wit, the Farm Credit Administration.

On behalf of the organized dairy farmers of this country, we earnestly request your support of the elimination of section 39 of the pending amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES W. HOLMAN,
Secretary The National Cooperative
Milk Producers' Federation.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. SMITH. I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, July 15, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JULY 12, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee for the Holy Bible—the book of righteousness, the book of love, the book of life, and the book of God. O Thou of infinite wisdom, Who giveth of the same to all men that asketh of Thee and upbraideth not, write Thy precepts in our hearts. Deliver us from any overwrought self-assurance that our usefulness may not be impaired. Impress us with the foolishness to scratch, scorch, and starve our souls for just the things that finally throw life into confusion. Heavenly Father, stir us by the consciousness of the supreme ideal which is to minister and not to be ministered unto, to serve and not to be served, and to lend a hand. In our relationships inspire us with the spirit of the Master. In His name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 347. Joint resolution to provide for the compensation of pages of the Senate and House of Representatives from July 1, 1935, until the close of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 8632. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River; to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama, and for other purposes", approved May 18, 1933.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. SMITH, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. NORRIS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6323) entitled "An act to provide for the custody of Federal proclamations, orders, regulations, notices, and other documents, and for the prompt and uniform printing and distribution thereof."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 883. An act directing the retirement of acting assistant surgeons of the United States Navy at the age of 70 years.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today that it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to say to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado that many of us are very much interested in getting sufficient signatures to the Frazier-Lemke bill, and in view of the fact that so many names have been taken off the petition yesterday and today, we find it impossible to get a sufficient number. We are going to need every legislative day that we can get. Therefore, I object.

FEDERAL POWER ACT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2796) to provide for the control and elimination of public-utility holding companies operating, or marketing securities, in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to regulate the transmission and sale of electric energy in interstate commerce, to amend the Federal Water Power Act, and for other purposes, insist on the House amendments thereto, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 2796, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, though I do not know that I shall. I do this to ask the chairman of the committee a question. How many conferees will there be on the House side?

Mr. RAYBURN. Five have been recommended, as usual, including the two that the gentleman from Ohio suggested.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. That is all that we will have?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is all that I am asking for.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not going to object to the bill going to conference, with the understanding that it be brought back here, and we be given an opportunity to vote on sections 11 and 13. There is a considerable revival of righteousness going on around here on Capitol Hill, as was shown yesterday in the roll-call vote on the T. V. A. bill, and I feel confident when it is brought back we can adopt both of those sections of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I understand then from the statement made by the chairman of the committee that the report carried in the Washington Post this morning about six conferees being appointed, different from the usual number, is not correct?

Mr. RAYBURN. I discussed the matter with the ranking Republican Member, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], and the reason why I did that was this: Our committee—that is, our subcommittees—have been divided 4 to 2 during this session and when I suggested that I send up the names of four Democrats, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] said it was not quite regular and he would rather I would not do it. So I am not going to do it.

Mr. SNELL. So the conferees will be selected in the usual manner?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. RAYBURN, Mr. HUDDLESTON, Mr. LEA of California, Mr. COOPER of Ohio, and Mr. HOLMES.

TERMS OF OFFICE, INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4751) to amend section 24 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, with respect to the terms of office of members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, with Senate amendments thereto, and agree to the Senate amendments. I might suggest to gentleman on the other side that this matter was considered in committee yesterday morning and the committee is unanimous that we do this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill, H. R. 4751, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 3, strike out "section 24 of."
Line 4, after "inserting", insert "at the end of section 11 and."
Line 5, strike out "such section" and insert "section 24."
Line 7, strike out all after "successor" down to and including "day", in line 11, and insert "is appointed and shall have qualified."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend sections 11 and 24 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, with respect to the terms of office of members of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, so that the House may understand, the only thing this does is to allow a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission when his term expires to serve until his successor is appointed and has qualified, so that they may always have a full Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

DISPOSITION OF WATERS OF THE RIO GRANDE

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6453) to amend the act of May 13, 1925, entitled "An act providing for a study regarding the equitable use of the waters of the Rio Grande", and so forth, as amended by the public resolution of March 3, 1927, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. McREYNOLDS, Mr. BLOOM, and Mr. FISH.

REPORT FROM THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may have until midnight tonight to file a report on House Joint Resolution 348.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, the minority, I expect, will file a minority report.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say the only purpose of this request is to give time to the minority to incorporate their report and file it along with the other.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wonder if the gentleman will include in his unanimous-consent request the right of the minority to file minority views?

Mr. STEAGALL. I so intended, if I did not say so. I wish that to be understood.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL]?

There was no objection.

LINE OF THE NAVY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call up a conference report on the bill (H. R. 5599) to regulate the strength and distribution of the line of the Navy, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5599) to regulate the strength and distribution of the line of the Navy, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 9. The last proviso of the appropriation 'Pay of the Navy', contained in the Naval Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1897, approved June 10, 1896 (29 Stat., 361), is hereby amended to read as follows: 'And provided further, That hereafter no payment shall be made from appropriations made by Congress to any officer in the Navy or Marine Corps on the active list while such officer is employed, after June 30, 1897, by any person or company furnishing naval supplies or war materials to the Government, and such employment is hereby made unlawful after said date: Provided, That no payment shall be made from appropriations made by Congress to any retired officer in the Navy or Marine Corps who for himself or for others is engaged in the selling of, contracting for the sale of, or negotiating for the sale of, to the Navy or the Navy Department, any naval supplies or war material.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the second amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

CARL VINSON,
P. H. DREWRY,
Managers on the part of the House.

PARK TRAMMELL,
DAVID I. WALSH,
FREDERICK HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5599) to regulate the strength and distribution of the line of the Navy, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompany conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendment no. 1: Specifically provides that the subject matter shall be in lieu of the law it was intended to replace. Existing law makes it unlawful for officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, active or retired, to be in the employ of persons or commercial concerns furnishing naval supplies or war material to the Government. The Senate sought to lift the ban on retired officers so long as they would not engage for themselves or others in the selling of, contracting for the sale of, or negotiating for the sale of, to the Navy or the Navy Department, any naval supplies or war material, but neglected to repeal existing law, which would still prevent the employment of retired officers in any capacity with persons or commercial concerns furnishing naval supplies or war material to the Government. As agreed to the Senate proposal by express provision will be in lieu of existing law.

On amendment no. 2: Changes a section number in consequence of amendment no. 1.

CARL VINSON,
P. H. DREWRY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

TOBACCO INSPECTION SERVICE

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (H. Res. 294, Rept. No. 1511), providing for the consideration of H. R. 8026, to establish and promote the use of standards of classification for tobacco, to provide and maintain an official tobacco inspection service, etc., for printing under the rule:

House Resolution 294

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 8026, a bill "To establish and promote the use of standards of classification for tobacco, to provide and maintain an official tobacco inspection service, etc." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

THE POWER OF THE SUPREME COURT TO DECLARE ACTS OF CONGRESS VOID

Mr. RAMSAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSAY. Mr. Speaker, it is claimed by those who support the theory of court determination of acts of Congress that those who oppose such application of power are opposed to the Constitution and seek to destroy our courts of justice.

To my mind, this is a gratuitous insult to a great mass of splendid lawyers and students of our jurisprudence, who assert that the Court's duty is to interpret the law, and not seek to form the law by the veto of legislation, because the power to interpret the Constitution is the power to make the Constitution.

Speaking for myself, I not only respect but revere our splendid courts, who have done so much to aid the great cause of liberty and freedom of the American people.

I realize that in a great republic like ours that the confidence of the people in their courts and their laws reposes the sure and certain assurance of the perpetuity of our institutions.

Since the foundation of the great American Republic there have been two lines of thought uppermost in the minds of American statesmen.

Did the fathers of our country have in mind the general welfare of the whole people when writing the Constitution or did they have in mind the restriction of the general welfare whenever this great motive would conflict with the right to own or control property?

The founders of my political party and faith claim that the preamble of the Constitution meant what it said, and that all forms and action of government should be diverted and used to promote the general welfare of the people. Therefore they held that the judiciary should have no part in declaring the kind and character of laws Congress should enact, nor should the courts have any right, power, or privilege to declare any act or acts of Congress void.

Those opposed to this view of Government claim that the preamble of the Constitution meant nothing and could not be looked to in deciding upon the acts of Congress, and unless specifically authorized by the Constitution, Congress has no power to legislate.

If the Supreme Court had been so careful in marking out its powers to so adjudicate, under specific authorization, under the Constitution, this conflict would never have occurred, because the Constitution in none of its provisions authorizes the courts to hold any acts of Congress void and unconstitutional.

Today we are, in the final analysis, governed by a theory of government that was supposed to have died with the Federalist Party, but we now feel the dead and withered hand of Alexander Hamilton, directing through our Supreme Court the policies of every administration, regardless of which political party may be in power.

The decision of the Court in the Marbury case was the first declaration of the right of the Supreme Court to declare acts of Congress void. This decision was the most brazen judicial announcement of a political faith ever made by any body of men in this country. This opinion merely set forth the principles of federalism as announced by Hamilton. It was an obiter dictum opinion, because the Court first announced it did not have jurisdiction, then went on to say what the Court would have decided, if it had jurisdiction, upon this opinion, rendered without authority or citation. The Court has built up its theory of vetoing and outlawing acts of Congress, thereby placing itself in the position of dictating the political policies of this country. Such decisions of our courts are mere political opinions and not judicial decisions, and are wholly unauthorized by the Constitution, laws, and traditions of our form of government.

When we realize that no court in Great Britain has dared declare any act of Parliament unconstitutional in the past 200 years, and that neither France, Belgium, Germany, nor Italy have any court empowered to set aside the laws of their Parliament, we stand aghast at it all, and as we realize that every court in America, even every justice of the peace, can set aside the acts of Congress and declare the political course our political parties must pursue, we shudder and wonder what the outcome will be.

How long will the American people permit the courts of America to defeat the expressed will and intent of the people of this country by avoiding and destroying the laws that people are demanding? By a decision of 5 to 4, will they continue to permit this Court to deny their Legislature the right to correct the evils and abuses of the ownership of property that have for the past 50 years dictated the course of legislation at the expense of human welfare? The courts apparently will not, or cannot, recognize the changing social needs of the United States.

To determine whether or not those of us who deny the power of the Court to nullify acts of Congress are radical and opposed to the Constitution, let us for a moment review the expressions of our great American statesmen of the past.

The Constitutional Convention held in 1787 four times refused to adopt a resolution that would have granted to the Supreme Court the right to declare acts of Congress void or unconstitutional. (See Reports of Federal Convention, by James Madison, pp. 51, 406–407, and 475.) The last statement on this subject in said record, at page 475, written by Madison himself, reads:

> It was generally supposed that the jurisdiction given [Supreme Court] was constructively limited to cases of a judicial nature.

It was further argued by Madison and others that the Constitution did not grant the right to such Court to declare acts of Congress void.

In discussing this question James Madison said:

> I beg to know upon what principle it can be contended that any one department draws from the Constitution greater powers than another in marking out the limits of the powers of the several departments. Nothing has yet been offered to invalidate the doctrines that the meaning of the Constitution may as well be ascertained by the legislative as by the judicial authority.

Thomas Jefferson, in writing to Mrs. Adams on September 11, 1804, wrote:

> The opinion which gives to the judges the right to decide what laws are constitutional and what not, not only for themselves in their own sphere of action but for the legislature and executive also in their spheres, would make the judiciary a despotic branch.

In a letter written by Jefferson to Mr. Johnson on June 12, 1823, discussing this same question, he stated:

> There must be an ultimate arbiter somewhere. True, there must; but does that prove it is either the Congress or the Supreme Court? The ultimate arbiter is the people of the Union, assembled by their deputies in convention at the call of Congress or of two-thirds of the States.

Charles Pinckney, one of the signers of the Constitution, says in discussing this subject:

> On no subject am I more convinced that it is an unsafe and dangerous doctrine in a republic ever to suppose that a judge ought to possess the right of questioning or deciding upon the constitutionality of laws or any act of legislature. It is placing the opinion of an individual, or of two or three, above that of both branches of Congress, a doctrine which is not warranted by the Constitution and will not, I hope, long have any advocates in this country.

President Jackson, in discussing McCulloch against Maryland and of Osborn against United States Bank, in a message to Congress said:

> The Congress, the Executive, and the Court must each for itself be guided by its own opinion of the Constitution. Each public officer who takes an oath to support the Constitution swears he will support it as he understands it, and not as it is understood by others.

It is as much the duty of the House of Representatives, or the Senate, and of the President, to decide upon the constitutionality of any bill or resolution which may be presented to them for passage, or approval, as it is of the Supreme Court, when it may be brought before them for judicial decision. The opinion of the judges has no more authority over Congress than the opinion of Congress has over the judges. The authority of the Supreme Court must not, therefore, be permitted to control the Congress or the executives when acting in their legislative capacities.

Abraham Lincoln, in his first inaugural address as President of the United States, said:

> The candid citizen must confess that if the policy of the Government, upon vital questions affecting the whole people, is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court the instant they are made, the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned their Government into the hands of that eminent tribunal.

Justice Clark, of the Supreme Court, in discussing this question in the Ninth American Bar Association Journal—October 1923, page 691—said:

> It is no new suggestion that if the Court would give real and sympathetic effect to this rule by declining to hold a statute unconstitutional whenever several of the Justices conclude that it is valid—by conceding that two or more being of such opinion in any case must necessarily raise a "rational doubt"—an end would be made of 5-to-4 constitutional decisions and great benefit would result to our country and to the Court. To voluntarily impose upon itself such a restraint as this would add greatly to the confidence of the people in the Court and would very certainly increase its power for high service to the country. Anyone at all acquainted with the temper of the people in this grave matter must fear if the rule is not observed in some such manner a greater restraint may be imposed upon the Court by Congress or by the people, probably to the serious detriment of the Nation.

Of course, I am aware that the courts and the legal profession contend that the courts have an inherent right to declare acts of the legislative branch of the Government void as a professional dogma or a matter of faith rather than reason. But may I not observe that while this right in question has long been claimed by the judiciary, no judge has ventured to discuss it, except Chief Justice Marshall in the Marberry case, and if the argument of such a distinguished jurist is found to be inconclusive and inconvincing, it must be attributed to the weakness of his position and not to his ability.

The Constitution is a collection of fundamental laws, not to be departed from in practice, nor altered by judicial decisions. Therefore, if the courts assert this right, instead of resting on the claim that it has been universally assumed by the American courts, they ought to be prepared to maintain it on the principles of the Constitution.

I therefore maintain that in this country the powers of the judiciary are divisible into those that are political and those that are civil.

The political powers of the judiciary are extraordinary and are derived from certain peculiar provisions in the Constitution, from the common fountain of all political power.

On the other hand, its civil powers are its ordinary powers, existing independently of any grant in the Constitution. But where government exists by virtue of a written constitution, the judiciary does not derive from that circumstance any other than its ordinary and appropriate powers.

Our judiciary is constructed upon the principles of the common law. In adopting the common law, we take it with just such powers and capacities incident to it, at the common law, except where there have been express changes made by our Constitution and enacted law. With us, the people, through their Constitution, have seen fit to clothe Congress with sovereignty and power, to pass and enact laws, and denied this right to other branches of the Government.

It must be conceded, then, that the ordinary and essential powers of the judiciary do not extend to the annulling of an act of Congress. Nor does it follow, because the Constitution did not invest this power in any department of our Government, that it belongs to the judiciary, and I take it that this power could not rest in the judiciary without producing a direct authority for it in the Constitution, either in terms or by the strongest implication from the nature of our Government, without which, this power must be considered as reserved for the immediate use of the people.

The Constitution contains no practical rules for the administration of law by the courts, these being furnished by the acts of ordinary legislation enacted by Congress, who are exclusively, with the President, the representatives of the people.

The Constitution and the right of Congress to pass a certain act may be in collision, but is that a legitimate subject for judicial determination? If it is, the judiciary must be a peculiar organ to revise the proceedings of Congress and to correct its mistakes. And where, oh, where, are we to look for this proud prerogative in the Constitution?

Viewing it from the other angle, what would be thought of an act of Congress declaring that the Supreme Court had put the wrong construction on the Constitution in the N. R. A. case, and that the judgment ought to be reversed?

I can hear now the howls of usurpation of judicial power.

The passage of an act of Congress is an act of sovereignty, and sovereignty and legislative power are said by Blackstone to be convertible terms.

It is the business of the judiciary to interpret the laws and not to scan the authority of the lawgiver. If the judiciary has the power to inquire into anything other than the form of enactment, where shall it stop? There certainly must be some limitation to such an inquiry. Those who claim this right for the judiciary, claim the legislative branch have no right of legislation, unless specifically granted by the Constitution. Therefore, if the authority to pass certain legislation is not found in the Constitution, such acts are not the acts of the people—but of the Congressmen themselves. But this is putting the argument on bold ground; to say that a high public representative of the people themselves shall challenge no more respect in the passage of legislation than a private individual must be rejected by every fair mind.

The further argument is made that when the Supreme Court holds an act of Congress void, it must acquiesce, although it may think the construction of the judiciary is wrong. But why must it acquiesce? Only because it is bound to show proper respect to the Supreme Court, which it in turn has a right to exact from the Supreme Court. This is the argument.

But it cannot be contended that the Congress has not, at least, an equal right with the judiciary to place a construction on the Constitution, nor can it be said that either are infallible; nor that either ought to surrender its judgment to the other. Certainly the framers of our Government never intended that the legislative and judiciary branches of our Government should ever clash upon the construction of our Constitution, yet we know this has occurred time and again during the history of our country.

What I am trying to say is that the judiciary, if at all possible, should yield to the acts of Congress the same respect that is claimed for the acts of the judiciary.

The great number of cases that have been decided by the court by a decision of 5 to 4 clearly illustrates that repugnancy to the Constitution is not always self-evident, and that to avoid them requires the act of some tribunal competent, under the Constitution—if any such there be—to pass upon their validity.

The judiciary was not created by the fathers of the Constitution for that purpose. But in theory all the organs of government were to have equal capacity, or if not equal, each was supposed to have superior power only for those things which peculiarly belong to it, and as legislation peculiarly involves the consideration of those limitations which are put on the lawmaking power, and the interpretation of laws, when made, involves only the construction of the laws themselves, it follows that the construction, in this particular belongs to the Congress, which ought, therefore, be taken to have superior capacity to judge the constitutionality of its own acts.

The very definition of "law", which is said to be "A rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in the State", shows the intrinsic superiority of the Congress.

It will be said the power of Congress also is limited by prescribed rules. It is so. But it is the power of the people, and sovereign as far as it extends.

The foundation of every argument of every advocate of the judiciary to declare acts of Congress void rests upon the oath taken by the judiciary upon entering their office. Neither the oath of such officer nor his official duty contemplates an inquiry into the authority of Congress.

The fallacy of the argument that courts in approving acts of Congress adopts them as their own leads some of us to believe that this alone requires and compels the court to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress, whereas the enactment of a law and the interpretation of it are not concurrent acts, and as the judiciary is not required to concur in the enactment, neither is it in the breach of the Constitution, which is the fault of Congress, and upon it the responsibility rests.

The relief from such legislation rests entirely with the people, and I firmly believe they would see to it that no law would be permitted to stand or remain in our statutes that was a flagrant violation of their Constitution.

ENLISTED MEN IN THE ARMY

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes on the subject of enlisted men in the service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, this morning my attention was called to an item appearing in the Washington Post to the effect that four enlisted men had committed suicide in the Panama Canal Zone. The article recited in detail the fact that the cause of those suicides was believed to be the commanding officer's harsh and cruel treatment of enlisted men who must work long hours under the tropical sun.

For the information of the Membership of the House I wish to state that I personally took this question up with the War Department a number of months ago at the request of enlisted men in the Panama Canal Zone, who protested the discriminatory, aristocratic attitude of the commanding officer at Fort Clayton. I also was in contact with the editor of the Panama American on this subject but the report which I called to the attention of the War Department was apparently whitewashed. Furthermore, the commanding officer, in his arrogance, threatened to file libel suit against newspapermen who published the report at that time, which report appears to have been correct in the light of the item in today's paper in reference to suicides of enlisted men.

I personally made inquiry of officers as to the character and attitude of the commanding officer at Fort Clayton and was advised that the commanding officer was inclined to be arrogant and tyrannical, and the thought was expressed that he was never considered to be wholly balanced.

I maintain that we are not doing our duty as Representatives when we will permit Army officers to drive young American men to suicide, once they have them isolated in such a God-forsaken country as the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield briefly.

Mr. BLANTON. This morning's Washington Post said there would be six conferees appointed by the House on the utilities holding company bill, out of the usual procedure. That did not happen. That was incorrect. The gentleman ought to check up the facts he quotes from this newspaper.

Mr. HOEPPEL. As a publisher of a periodical myself, I have the highest regard for the newspaper fraternity and am confident that they would not willfully contort the facts presented to them. In reference to the question I am discussing, I know what I am talking about as I have been in correspondence with the War Department and various individuals in Panama on this subject.

Furthermore, I would like to call the attention of the Membership to the case of an enlisted man who was found dead in bed recently at a post in California. The young man carried an accident policy, and as he was in an accident some time prior to his death, his mother requested a copy of the autopsy which was held to determine the cause of his death. A copy of the autopsy was denied the bereaved mother in a letter dated March 14, 1935, signed by the assistant surgeon, with the statement that "they (the medical department) have no desire to withhold information but the report comprises six typewritten pages and they would appreciate being spared the clerical labor incident to making a copy."

Imagine, if you can, the inhuman thought involved in a letter of this kind addressed to a widow in reference to her son's sudden death in the service.

At the request of the mother, I then personally took up the question with The Adjutant General, and was advised that it was impossible to furnish a copy of the autopsy unless the request came from the Congress, or one of its committees. Think of it! An attitude of this kind when a Representative of the people requests a copy of the autopsy in reference to the sudden death of one of his constituents. The report from the mother further indicates that the post surgeon was derelict in his duty in that he did not order her son to the hospital as he should have, if, as she asserts, he apparently recognized the impaired health of her son.

As a retired enlisted man and as a friend of the Army and Navy personnel, both commissioned and enlisted, I receive communications from many enlisted men and officers, reciting to me instances of injustice and discrimination which I earnestly seek to correct.

My attention was recently brought to a case of an enlisted man in the Philippines who was treated in a discriminatory manner. He was tried before a board and reduced in rank for inefficiency, notwithstanding the fact that he had held the position from which he was reduced for a period of 5 years. His accusers were members of the board which reduced him and the report is that they back-dated an important paper in order to validate the action taken. I made an effort to ascertain the findings of the board and the constitution of the board. As reported to me, the board was illegally constituted. The War Department declined to give me information with respect to this apparent discrimination and injustice directed against an enlisted man who was not permitted to appear personally before the board in his own defense. To deny a Representative in Congress the right to a copy of the board proceedings in such a case is a denial of justice to the enlisted man. Incidentally, the question of race prejudice arises as the enlisted man was the only Negro soldier in the garrison of approximately 2,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I cannot yield further.

In France we had, some years ago, the celebrated Dreyfuss case with which you are all familiar, in which a certain clique of officers railroaded a brother officer to penal servitude. He served 5 years on Devils Island. Enlisted men in the service in some instances are treated with the same lack of consideration by their officers. Thank God that these instances are rare.

I think it is about time the Congress of the United States recognized the arbitrary attitude of the War and Navy Departments and took the necessary action to provide that on the request of a Member of Congress, acting on the petition of the mother of a deceased soldier or of a soldier himself, the record in the case at least will be available to the Member of Congress who makes that request in order to remove the discrimination, if any exists. In time of war, such arbitrary action is excusable, but in time of peace it is absolutely indefensible and is contrary to our democratic precepts of liberty and justice to all.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the genial gentleman from California yield for one question?

Mr. HOEPPEL. In a moment.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is incorrect; the relatives of an enlisted man can get a full report any time the enlisted man dies.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I wish I had with me the official letter from the War Department to show the gentleman that his statement is incorrect.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say that the gentleman is incorrect. Relatives can always get full reports in such matters.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a copy of the letter from the War Department to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, under the authority just granted, I insert at this point the letter to which I referred as positive proof of my statement that important information is withheld from Members of Congress. I may state also that I have in my files other letters even more flagrant than this.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, July 3, 1935.

Hon. J. H. HOEPPEL,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. HOEPPEL: I have your letter of June 29, in which you request, in behalf of Mrs. Isabelle M. Mundell, a copy of the report of the autopsy made in the case of her son, the late Pvt. Melville F. Mundell, who died February 20, 1935, at Hamilton Field, San Rafael, Calif., stating that it is required by Mrs. Mundell for the purpose of prosecuting a claim for accident benefits.

It is contrary to the well-established policy of the War Department to furnish copies of official records of the character requested by you, except upon a call from Congress or one of its committees, upon call from other recognized Federal agencies charged by law with the adjudication of claims, or upon proper process issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, and only upon certificate of the court that such copies are essential to the ends of justice.

It is also contrary to the policy of the Department to furnish statements from the records to one party alone for use in settlement of claims in which the United States is not in direct interest. However, if the insurance company will join in the request that a statement from the official records of the above-named former soldier is necessary to adjudicate a claim, consideration will be given to furnishing the statement to Mrs. Mundell and to the insurance company.

Very respectfully,

E. T. CONLEY,
Brigadier General,
Acting The Adjutant General.

Is it fair, is it right, that we, the representatives of the people, we who really are responsible for the conduct of the Army and the Navy, should not know what is going on? Is there any reason why we should not be furnished this information upon our official request, with a view to securing the correction of an injustice, if any exists? I believe we are not only entitled to such information but that the conduct of the Army and Navy is our responsibility, and for this reason I am presenting the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War are hereby directed to furnish to Members of Congress, upon the request of any Member, any information or records called for pertaining to complaints of injustices or discriminations directed against enlisted men of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps by their superior officers.

Mr. BLANTON. That already is provided for by regulations of the Departments.

Mr. HOEPPEL. It is not the law or the procedure of the Department.

Mr. BLANTON. I get such information right along for people in my district any time I ask for it. I have never yet been turned down on a request for information respecting any enlisted man from my district.

Mr. HOEPPEL. The gentleman will see the War Department letter, to which I have referred, in the RECORD tomorrow. I will make another request of the War Department for this information, and in the event I am again refused I will request the gentleman from Texas to obtain this information for me.

Mr. BLANTON. I have no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War are hereby directed to furnish to Members of Congress, upon the request of any Member, any information or records called for pertaining to complaints of injustices or discriminations directed against enlisted men of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps by their superior officers.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman from California if this resolution has been referred to a committee.

Mr. HOEPPEL. It has not.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Why should it not go to a committee?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Is not the Congress itself competent to pass upon the question of the discrimination I have described, which, it is reported, has caused the suicide of four enlisted men? I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that at the present time the War Department does provide this information for Members, but that the Navy Department has a regulation which permits the information to be given only on the request of the soldier himself. I would question the advisability of our attempting to change this rule of the Navy Department.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I would like to state for the information of the gentleman from New York, who apparently did not hear my previous statements, that I have in my possession a letter from the War Department stating that this information will not be furnished to me unless it is called for by the Congress or by one of its committees.

That is the official record I hold from the War Department. I hope the gentleman will not object. The enlisted men who bear the brunt of conflict in battle are entitled to fair and just consideration in time of peace. All other citizens have the right to petition Congress for redress. Why should enlisted men be debarred from equal consideration? In justice to the enlisted men Congress should give them a break on this question.

Mr. TABER. There is doubt in my mind whether we ought to direct the War Department to give such information unless the enlisted man consents. In the Navy the rules require that the request must come from the man himself.

Mr. HOEPPEL. That is covered by this resolution. It is self-evident that a Representative can only learn of injustice and discrimination in the Army or Navy through the medium of the enlisted man himself or his family, and his complaint can only be verified by War and Navy Department records.

Mr. TABER. It is not in the resolution.

Mr. HOEPPEL. This resolution merely provides that whenever a Representative calls on the War or Navy Department for pertinent information in order to determine the merit of a complaint, such information shall be furnished. A Member of Congress may use his judgment as to the validity of a complaint.

Mr. TABER. They should, but they do not always do so.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Why should not Members of Congress have the right to get such information?

Mr. TABER. The Navy Department feels it is hardly proper to disclose information relative to a sailor unless the sailor requests it.

Mr. KELLER. Would it not be doing the soldier or sailor a good turn? In a case like this why should not a Member be furnished with definite information? Why should not any Congressman be given any information he wants from any department? That is what I would like to know.

Mr. TABER. That is all right, but in these cases involving the Army and the Navy, not without consent of the soldier or the sailor.

Mr. SNELL. I have always gotten all the information I asked for.

Mr. KELLER. And I have got some I did not ask for; but sometimes they want to withhold information.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I shall leave it to some Member of the majority to object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will not the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I withhold the objection for the time being, but ultimately I shall object.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Then all I can say is that if there are any further suicides in Panama, the gentleman from Colorado cannot escape a share of the responsibility, nor can we, the representatives of the people, excuse our failure to recognize the plight of the enlisted man who dares not bring his complaints directly through official channels if he wishes to remain in the service. In my experience I have found that many worthy enlisted men were virtually "drummed out" of the service as a result of the arbitrary action of a commanding officer. The stigma of desertion has thus in many instances been placed upon worthy enlisted men who would not submit to continued indignities.

This resolution that I have offered will give them a chance to be heard. If objected to, I shall reintroduce the resolution, and I hope the Members, upon reflection, will recognize its merit and support it in the interest of a square deal to the enlisted man.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LIMIT OF EXPENDITURE FOR REPAIRS OR CHANGES TO NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4760) to increase the statutory limit of expenditures for repairs or changes to naval vessels with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, lines 5 and 6, strike out "$600,000 for any two consecutive fiscal years" and insert "$450,000 for any 18 consecutive months."

Amend the title so as to read "An act limiting expenditures for repairs or changes to naval vessels."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman should tell us something about these amendments.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman that the bill as it passed the House permitted the annual overhauling repairs to be $600,000 in a period of 18 months. The Senate has amended it, making the sum $450,000 in a period of 18 months instead of $600,000, as in the bill which passed the House.

Mr. SNELL. If there is anything that cuts down appropriations we on this side are for it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the Clerk will call the bills on the Private Calendar.

HERMOSA-REDONDO HOSPITAL ET AL.

The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1702, for the relief of the Hermosa-Redondo Hospital, C. Max Anderson, Julian O. Wilke, Curtis A. Wherry, Hollie B. Murray, Ruth M. Laird, Sigrid I. Olsen, and Stella S. Guy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Hermosa-Redondo Hospital, Hermosa Beach, Calif., the sum of $875.17; to Dr. C. Max Anderson the sum of $331.50; to Dr. Julian O. Wilke the sum of $125; to Dr. Curtis A. Wherry the sum of $247.50; to Hollie B. Murray the sum of $30; to Ruth M. Laird the sum of $336; to Sigrid I. Olsen the sum of $77; and to Stella S. Guy the sum of $448. Such sums shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States arising out of services rendered and supplies furnished by such hospital and persons to Knud Heinrick Mattson, seaman, first class, United States Navy, on account of injuries sustained by the said Knud Heinrick Mattson while on leave of absence from the U. S. S. Nevada, September 21, 1930.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, strike out "$875.17" and insert in lieu thereof "$865.24."

Line 7, page 1, strike out "$331.50" and insert in lieu thereof "$203."

Page 2, line 2, strike out "$448" and insert in lieu thereof "$441; in all, $2,257.24."

In line 9, after the figures "1930", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OSWALD ORLANDO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2319, for the relief of Oswald Orlando.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Oswald Orlando the sum of $1,000 in full satisfaction of the claim of said Oswald Orlando for injuries sustained by him as a result of the collision of a Government owned and operated motor vehicle with his automobile.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, after the word "of", strike out the words "the claim of said Oswald Orlando" and insert in lieu thereof "all claims against the United States," and in line 10, after the word "automobile", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WEIS-PATTERSON LUMBER CO., INC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2432, for the relief of the Weis-Patterson Lumber Co., Inc.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Weis-Patterson Lumber Co., Inc., Pensacola, Fla., the sum of $600, in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States, such sum representing damages sustained when a barge owned by the Weis-Patterson Lumber Co., Inc., and rented to the War Department was, through the negligence of the War Department, blown ashore and totally wrecked during a storm.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 2, line 1, strike out the words "through the negligence of the War Department" and insert in lieu thereof "on August 31, 1932."

Line 3, after the word "storm", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SARAH SHELTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2982, for the relief of Sarah Shelton.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Sarah Shelton, of Granite City, Ill., the sum of $6,000 for the death of her husband, William Shelton, who was killed by being run down by a launch under the control and charge of the deputy collector of customs, at St. Louis, Mo., while said deputy collector was in the exercise and discharge of his official duties.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, after "$6,000", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States."

On page 2, line 1, after the word "duties", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALLEGHENY FORGING CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3164, for the relief of the Allegheny Forging Co.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. McFARLANE objected, and, under the rules, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

E. H. JENNINGS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3759, for the relief of E. H. Jennings.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to credit the account of E. H. Jennings, postmaster at Charlestown, S. C., in the sum of $100, and to certify such credit to the Comptroller General of the United States. Such sum represents the amount of a counterfeit gold certificate accepted at the Charlestown post office on May 9, 1933.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 3, strike out the words "Postmaster General" and insert in lieu thereof "Comptroller General of the United States."

Line 6, after "$100", strike out the words "and to certify such credit to the Comptroller General of the United States. Such sum represents" and insert in lieu thereof the word "representing."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the word "Charlestown" may be corrected to read "Charleston."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

D. E. WOOLDRIDGE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3943, for the relief of D. E. Wooldridge.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. McFARLANE objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

M. P. CREATH

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4038, for the relief of M. P. Creath.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. McFARLANE objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

ANNA CAPORASO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4256, for the relief of Anna Caporaso.

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. COSTELLO objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

ENLISTED MEN OF THE MARINE CORPS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4846, to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Marine Corps for the value of personal effects lost, damaged, or destroyed by fire at the Marine Barracks, Quantico, Va., on October 5, 1930.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum or sums, amounting in the aggregate not to exceed $2,860.04, as may be required by the Secretary of the Navy to reimburse, under such regulations as he may prescribe, enlisted men or former enlisted men of the Marine Corps for the value of personal effects lost as a result of the fire which occurred at the Marine Barracks, Quantico, Va., on October 5, 1930.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 2, after the figures "1930", insert "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

CLAIMS OF MILITARY PERSONNEL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4852, to authorize the settlement of individual claims of military personnel for damages to and loss of private property incident to the training, practice, operation, or maintenance of the Army.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the following claims of military personnel and civilian employees in the amounts shown which have been approved and recommended for payment by the Secretary of War, for damages to and loss of private property of such personnel incident to the training, practice, operation, or maintenance of the Army, and that such payments be made from the present appropriation of the War Department entitled "Claims for Damages to and Loss of Private Property": Maynard R. Ashworth, captain, Infantry Reserves, $33.40; John B. Bowman, first sergeant, $29; Robert J. Benton, corporal, $25; John H. Brimberry, first sergeant, $63.52; Charles F. Sorensen, private, $219.45; and Roger M. Wicks, lieutenant, Field Artillery, $45.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARIE LINSENMEYER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4999, for the relief of Marie Linsenmeyer.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Marie Linsenmeyer, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $112.50 in full settlement of all claims against the Government on account of personal injuries received by the said Marie Linsenmeyer on the 18th day of December 1930, at the post-office building at Burlington, Des Moines County, Iowa.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "Iowa", insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

D. E. SWEINHART

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5127, for the relief of D. E. Sweinhart.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to D. E. Sweinhart, of San Antonio, Tex., the sum of $5,000, as compensation for the death of his son, Edward Sweinhart, a minor, who was killed at San Antonio, Tex., on October 14, 1917, by the negligent driving of a United States Government truck.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after "$5,000", strike out "as compensation" and insert in lieu thereof "in full settlement of all claims against the United States."

In line 11, after the word "truck", insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman recall that on several occasions requests have been made to address the House during consideration of the Private Calendar. These requests were objected to by the Chairman of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], and I simply want to know whether this is to be regarded as a precedent already established, or are we to waive that precedent and now permit such unanimous-consent requests.

Mr. BOILEAU. I want to make a statement as to the reason why I objected to the request of the gentleman from Colorado to adjourn over until Monday and then withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, the majority leader earlier in the afternoon presented a unanimous-consent request that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next. I objected to that request for the only reason that tomorrow is the last legislative day that the Members favoring the Frazier-Lemke bill could sign the petition in order to insure a vote on that bill on the next consent day. The petition must be completed and on the table for 7 legislative days before consent day before its consideration is in order.

In view of the withdrawals we lack 10 signatures, and I am satisfied that it will be impossible to get that many signatures by tomorrow, and we will therefore have to bring it up on the second consent day. I have consulted with the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE], and I now withdraw my objection to the unanimous-consent request propounded by the majority leader.

Mr. McFARLANE. Reserving the right to object, how many signatures do you now lack?

Mr. BOILEAU. We now lack 10 signatures.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my request that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] if he knows why these withdrawals have been made—what is the incentive to these Members to gain their withdrawals?

Mr. BOILEAU. I have my own opinion, but not backed up by sufficient evidence.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I can tell the gentleman. I was requested to withdraw my signature, and I declined. The reason given to me was that if the Democratic Members did not withdraw they would be put on the spot.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next?

There was no objection.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

MARY BROWN RALEY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5750) for the relief of Mary Brown Raley.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary Brown Raley the sum of $750.50 for injuries sustained in an automobile accident, in collision with an Army truck in Baltimore, Md., October 10, 1932.

With the following committee amendments:

After the figures "$750.50" in line 6, insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States", and in line 9, after the figures "1932", strike out the period, add a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JAMES J. CURRAN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5781) for the relief of the widow and next of kin of James J. Curran.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the administrator appointed in the courts of the State of New York of the estate of James J. Curran, of Manhattan Borough, New York City, the sum of $10,000 as damages sustained by reason of the killing of said James J. Curran, who died in Manhattan Borough, New York City, on October 25, 1919, as a result of injuries received at New York City on October 22, 1919, by being run down by a Government-owned automobile truck operated by an employee of the United States Postal Service under the jurisdiction of the New York post office, such sum of $10,000 to be distributed to said decedent's widow and next of kin as damages in an action for causing death by a wrongful act under the laws of the State of New York.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "of", strike out "$10,000 as damages sustained by reason of the killing of said" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the death of."

Page 2, line 5, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$5,000"; and at the end of line 8, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CREDITORS OF J. R. & J. A. WHELAN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5790) for the relief of certain creditors of J. R. & J. A. Whelan, Inc.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to James T. O'Connell, trustee for the creditors of J. R. & J. A. Whelan, Inc., the sum of $10,985; to refund to the creditors the amount of penalty collected by the Government for the failure of J. R. & J. A. Whelan, Inc., to complete a contract, Noy–1076 (specification 6437), within the time specified in the contract.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "pay", insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated"; and in line 6, after the word "incorporated", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States."

Line 8, strike out "$10,985" and insert "$9,880"; page 2, line 2, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

SQUAW ISLAND FREIGHT TERMINAL CO., INC.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1817, conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claim of Squaw Island Freight Terminal Co., Inc., of Buffalo, N. Y., against the United States in respect of loss of property occasioned by the breaking of a Government dike on Squaw Island.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX, Mr. COSTELLO, and Mr. McFARLANE objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

THOMAS F. COONEY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2205, for the relief of Thomas F. Cooney.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. TRUAX, and Mr. McFARLANE objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

WESTERN ELECTRIC CO., INC.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2487, for the relief of the Western Electric Co., Inc.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust, settle, and certify for payment, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the claim of the Western Electric Co., Inc., for supplies delivered to the Navy Mine Depot, Yorktown, Va., under requisition no. 96, Bureau of Ordnance, dated May 24, 1920, the said supplies having been delivered to and accepted by the United States, but payment therefor not having been made because of the absence of a formal written contract, as required by section 3744 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of June 17, 1917 (40 Stat., 198): Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL

The SPEAKER. The next bill, H. R. 8108, is an omnibus bill. Under the previous order of the House this bill will be passed over, and the Clerk will call the next bill on the calendar.

WOODWORTH B. ALLEN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3786, for the relief of Woodworth B. Allen, captain, United States Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. McFARLANE objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THOMAS A. M'GURK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2442, for the relief of Thomas A. McGurk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. TRUAX objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JOANNA FORSYTH

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6703, for the relief of Joanna Forsyth.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Joanna Forsyth, the widow of Thomas Forsyth, shall be entitled to the right of selection and second entry under the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the relief of settlers and entrymen on Baca Float No. 3, in the State of Arizona", approved July 5, 1921 (42 Stat. 107), notwithstanding failure to apply for the benefits of such act within the time limit prescribed by law, if she makes application therefor within 12 months from the date of the enactment of this act and is otherwise eligible under the provisions of the act of July 5, 1921.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "law", insert the following: "and notwithstanding any withdrawal heretofore or hereafter made by Executive order of public land from settlement, location, sale, or entry."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

KNUD O. FLAKNE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1446, for the relief of Knud O. Flakne.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain riparian owners for losses sustained by them on the drained Mud Lake bottom in Marshall County in the State of Minnesota", approved June 26, 1934 (Private, No. 368, 73d Cong.), is hereby amended by inserting the words "or Knud O. Flakne" after the words "F. H. Wellcome Co."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARY C. MORAN

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1447, for the relief of Mary C. Moran.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain riparian owners for losses sustained by them on the drained Mud Lake bottom in Marshall County in the State of Minnesota", approved June 26, 1934 (Private, No. 368, 73d Cong.), is hereby amended by inserting the words "or Mary C. Moran" after the words "Clarence Larson."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EDGAR SAMPSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 921, for the relief of Edgar Sampson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 15, 17, and 20 of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, pars. 765, 767, and 770, on p. 79), are hereby waived in favor of Edgar Sampson, who claims disability as a result of his employment under the Post Office Department in December 1927. The United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to accept formal notice of claim, now informally numbered Lf 17426, and to consider and act upon his claim under the remaining provisions of said act, as amended, in the same manner as if his claim and notice had been filed within 60 days after the said disability was incurred.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, start with the word "claims" and strike out the remainder of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "is alleged to have sustained disability as the result of his employment in the United States post office, Brooklyn, N. Y., in December 1927: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LUCY JANE AYER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1105, for the relief of Lucy Jane Ayer.

Mr. MACFARLANE and Mr. TRUAX objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

CHARLES G. JOHNSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2479, for the relief of Charles G. Johnson, State treasurer of the State of California.

Mr. MCFARLANE and Mr. TRUAX objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I understand from the gentlemen on both sides of the House that it will be inconvenient to proceed further with bills on the Private Calendar at this time.

DR. GEORGE W. RITCHEY

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1036) authorizing adjustment of the claim of Dr. George W. Ritchey.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of Dr. George W. Ritchey in the amount of $8,283.39 as loss sustained through the spalling and splitting of the original 40-inch mirror which was intended for installation under contract NOd-297, dated June 5, 1931, in a telescope at the United States Naval Observatory, and to allow not to exceed $8,283.39 in full and final settlement of said claim. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,283.39, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of the claim.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR RULE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the Chair, I should like to make a point of order with respect to certain bills that will come up next Tuesday, and then let the point of order be pending, so that the Speaker in the meantime may examine the authorities which may be presented by myself or by the Parliamentarian.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on March 27, 1935, there was an attempt in the House by a simple House resolution to amend House Rule XXIV by providing, with respect to private bills that had been objected to, that they be recommitted back to the committee from which they emanated, and inferentially only was authority given that committee to incorporate the bills in an omnibus bill thereafter to be presented to the House.

I want to call attention to certain features of that rule that I should like to have in the RECORD at this time, so that the Speaker may know the points I am raising in connection with my point of order.

I read from the rule:

On the third Tuesday of each month, after the disposal of such business on the Speaker's table as requires reference only, the Speaker may direct the Clerk to call the bills and resolutions on the Private Calendar, preference to be given to omnibus bills containing bills or resolutions which have previously been objected to on a call of the Private Calendar.

The Speaker will note this is the first reference made in the rule to an "omnibus bill." I quote further:

Omnibus bills shall be read for amendment by paragraph, and no amendment shall be in order except to strike out or to reduce the amounts of money stated or to provide limitations.

That is the next reference to omnibus bills. There is no provision made in the rule with reference to how those omnibus bills shall be prepared, drawn, or introduced in the House. The next reference to an "omnibus bill" is as follows:

Upon the passage of any such omnibus bill, said bill shall be resolved into the several bills and resolutions of which it is composed, such original bills and resolutions, with any amendments adopted by the House, shall be engrossed, where necessary, and proceedings thereon had as if said bills and resolutions had been passed in the House severally.

The next reference to an "omnibus bill" is as follows:

In the consideration of any omnibus bills the proceedings as set forth above shall have the same force and effect as if each Senate—

Note this especially, Mr. Speaker—

as if each Senate and House bill or resolution therein contained or referred to were considered by the House as a separate and distinct bill or resolution.

Mr. Speaker, those are excerpts from the new rule which attempts to amend rule XXIV of the House of Representatives. There is no rule of this House which authorizes a Senate bill to be incorporated in a House omnibus bill. There is no rule of the Senate which authorizes Senate bills to be incorporated in a House omnibus bill and then to be reintroduced in the House as a House bill under a House bill number.

I want to get the matter before the Speaker at this time, because I intend to raise this point of order seriously next Tuesday when the first so-called "omnibus bill" comes up. I will then present authorities to the Speaker, and I desire the Speaker and the Parliamentarian to be prepared, because I do not want to raise such a point without due notice.

Mr. SABATH. What is the question which the gentleman desires to raise?

Mr. BLANTON. I am now stating the question clearly and distinctly. Without consent of the Senate the House has no authority through a simple House resolution to pass such a rule, or to operate under it by reintroducing Senate bills under House numbers. Mr. Speaker, there is no provision in any of the rules of the House of Representatives or in any rules of the Senate of the United States, the two bodies constituting the Congress of the United States, for a Senate bill, after being passed by the Senate and messaged to the House, to be put into an omnibus bill of the House, thus losing its identity, Mr. Speaker, and then being reintroduced in the House with a House bill number and coming before the House under a new House bill. As I stated, there is no such provision either in the rules of the House or in the rules of the Senate of the United States. The rules of the Senate of the United States do not authorize such procedure, and the House cannot thus proceed with the consent of the Senate.

In an attempt to follow this rule, which was passed by a simple resolution of the House, with no action on it whatever by the Senate, H. R. 8524, Calendar No. 622, has been introduced under a House number as an omnibus bill. It attempts to embrace together with other House bills theretofore introduced under different House numbers, Senate bill 929, an act for the relief of the Southern Products Co.

This is a bill that has been passed by the Senate of the United States under their rules and had been messaged to this House for consideration. Under Senate rules it must be considered by the House under the rules of the Congress of the United States. Never has there been any authority given by the Senate for the House to change a Senate bill and reintroduce it in the House under a new House number. This Senate bill does not come from any committee of the House by which it has been considered and reported under the proper Senate number. It now comes to the House as a House bill, placed in the hopper of the House, and given a new House bill number. There is no authority for such action. It has lost its Senate number. It has been reported to this House as H. R. 8524.

I am going to call attention to other omnibus bills embracing Senate bills losing their identity and coming into this House under a House number, H. R. So-and-so. For instance, Private Calendar No. 702 is a House bill (H. R. 8750) introduced in this House on July 2, 1935. This bill embraces Senate bill 753, to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Wales Island Packing Co., and which was passed by the Senate and messaged to the House, the Senate bill now losing its number and identity and coming into the House of Representatives under a House bill number, if the Chair pleases, without any authority of the Congress at all.

Then, too, the Senate has never given its consent, after such an omnibus bill is passed, for all of its provisions "to be resolved back into the original bills and resolutions." That, too, requires consent of the Senate.

I am going to present the Speaker with some authorities next Tuesday, and I am giving the Parliamentarian an opportunity to look this matter up and to examine the rules and precedents. I am raising the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that except by joint resolution, or at least a concurrent resolution, acted upon and approved by the Senate, the House of Representatives has no authority whatever to take a Senate bill, duly passed by the Senate and coming to the House with a Senate number, and put it into a new House bill and introduce it in a new House bill with an H. R. number and then, forsooth, after the House has passed such an omnibus bill, embracing a number of Senate bills and a number of House bills, for the House then to resolve its action back into those original bills and engross original House bills and read for the third time a Senate bill passed under such unauthorized action as this attempted by the House.

The rules of Congress require a Senate bill that has come to the House of Representatives from the Senate to be taken up as a Senate bill, as a separate and distinct piece of legislation, and considered by the House of Representatives as a Senate bill, and as long as it keeps its Senate number it cannot be changed in any way by a House number.

Of course, it is the usual practice when a Senate bill comes before the House and is on the Speaker's table if there is an identical House bill reported by a committee and on the calendar, to ask unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill instead of the House bill, but then it does not take a House number. It is not reintroduced into this House and sent through the House hopper with an H. R. number. It preserves its Senate bill integrity, it preserves its Senate number, and I raise the point of order there is no authority in this House, by a simple resolution not acted upon by the Senate, to so handle a Senate bill in the United States Congress, and this is all I have to say until next Tuesday, when I am going to present some authorities to the Speaker.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, but I do not want to take up any further time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, just briefly, for the moment, in reply to the point of order which we may discuss more fully next Tuesday, as I have heard the gentleman, he has not mentioned anything that was not thoroughly considered by the Rules Committee during the many days we considered this matter. Every point the gentleman has mentioned was gone into, as to Senate bills and omnibus bills. So no part of the rule is inadvertent or adopted without the greatest consideration. If we are wrong, we did not make a mistake inadvertently. Whatever we did, we did deliberately and, we believe, within the rules and the precedents of the House.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. For a question; yes.

Mr. MAY. I think the gentleman from New York will recall that all during last year's vacation he was engaged in writing letters to the various Members of the Congress—I received one myself—asking for any suggestions we had to make with regard to the correction of this rule. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if the question raised by the gentleman from Texas relates only to an omnibus bill of the House that would contain a Senate bill cr whether an omnibus bill of the House containing no Senate bill would be embraced in the question raised by his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe, if and when it reaches the Supreme Court of the United States—and this question is going to reach there—and it will be remembered that we then called it to the Speaker's attention at the time this rule was passed, that the House has no authority to so change the rules respecting legislation, and Senate bills, by a simple House resolution, that it required a joint or concurrent resolution, even if we could do it in that way, in order that the Senate could act upon the matter and give its consent.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As to Senate bills.

Mr. BLANTON. I am thinking about all bills, but it is so clearly pertinent and true that we cannot so handle Senate bills that I now raise the question in the point of order as to Senate bills.

I do not think any lawyer in this House, after careful consideration, who has studied the rules of Congress and the precedents of Congress, could hold for one minute that the House has the right to take a Senate bill that has been passed by the Senate, carrying a Senate number, and send it to its House committee and have its House committee put it in a scramble of an omnibus bill with a lot of Senate bills and House bills, and reintroduce the Senate bill here in the hopper of the House as an original House bill—H. R. No. So-and-so, and then after so passing it, unscramble it, and put it back into its original Senate form, and give its original Senate number back to it. I do not think you can do this lawfully, and I believe the Supreme Court is going to hold it to be unlawful whenever the question gets to it. The point of order will be pending.

This is all I have to say about it now.

H. B. ARNOLD

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3512) for the relief of H. B. Arnold, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman explain what it is?

Mr. DEEN. This is a bill on the Private Calendar for the relief of H. B. Arnold. It passed the House on April 6 and was amended in the Senate by striking out the figures "$1,000" and inserting "$500."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$1,000" and insert "$500."

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

AMERICAN LEGION POST DEMANDS CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATION OF CONDUCT OF NATIONAL OFFICIALS OF AMERICAN LEGION

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a resolution passed by the American Legion.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, July 9, 1935, Victory Post, No. 4, American Legion, Department of the District of Columbia, passed a resolution demanding a congressional investigation of the activities of certain leaders and officials of the American Legion. The resolution is self-explanatory, and is as follows:

Whereas it has been charged that Wall Street bankers were desirous of destroying the influence of the "bonus" resolution adopted by the Portland convention of the American Legion in 1932, calling for full and immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates; and

Whereas it is charged that a group of wealthy and influential leaders met at the Bankers' Club in New York City and agreed to advance the money necessary to employ influential legionnaires to contact the key legionnaires in all parts of the country, and to secure, if possible, enough support to pass another resolution at the Chicago convention in 1933 to offset the effect of the Portland resolution; and

Whereas it is charged that these bankers pledged an unlimited amount of money for this purpose, that a huge fund was raised, that certain Legionnaires were paid large sums of money to make the contacts, were given unlimited expense accounts, traveled luxuriously, spent money lavishly, made no accounting therefor, that no report was required nor questions asked; and

Whereas it is charged that at the Chicago convention $74,000 was sent by these bankers with the understanding that more would be forthcoming if necessary. This money, it has been testified under oath, was spent at Chicago to purchase the influence of certain leaders and officials of the American Legion, which resulted in the passage of the desired resolution, the said resolution being cunningly contrived to stifle, hinder, and delay the passage of the adjusted-service bill, and was so used last winter and spring; and

Whereas it is further charged that as a result of the activity of the important legionnaires who received slices of this slush fund, the Chicago convention did not reiterate the Legion's stand for full and immediate cash payment of the so-called "bonus"; and

Whereas it is charged that this information is in the form of printed testimony, presented by witnesses under oath, and discloses, on its face, that some leaders, officials, and former officials of the American Legion have double crossed, deceived, and misled the entire membership of the Legion; and

Whereas at the May meeting of the national executive committee the request of National Commander Belgrano for specific authority to investigate these charges was turned down: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by Victory Post, No. 4, the American Legion, Department of the District of Columbia, in regular meeting assembled, this 9th day of July 1935, That the St. Louis National Convention of the American Legion (through the annual convention of the Department of the District of Columbia) be requested and urged to adopt a resolution asking that the Congress of the United States make a full and complete investigation of these charges and render an official report thereon at the earliest practicable moment.

This resolution was passed by this post by a unanimous vote. It occurs to me that every legionnaire in this Nation should join in a request for this congressional investigation. The charges are based upon sworn testimony.

WHAT ARE WE DOING FOR PEACE?

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio speech by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address by Congressman HERMAN P. KOPPLEMANN over station WOL and affiliated stations, July 9, 1935:

With the awful catastrophe of another war reverberating throughout Europe and Africa, threatening to plunge the nations once more into a vortex of death and destruction, with the tread of Mars resounding in the clank of cannon and the stir of troops on the march, with the peace of Europe, as one of its foremost statesmen says—hanging on five or six men—the question which has startlingly been raised in the minds of the American people is, what are we doing for peace?

For too many months has the dire prophecy of war been repeated. For too long have there been discussions and conferences to underwrite agreements which will prove more than mere scraps of paper, motivated by one principle alone, settlement of national and international differences without the recourse to war.

Legislation throughout which is woven implications of war, its threat, its promotion, or its elimination has been before this Congress continually. The charge that war has been encouraged by financiers and munitions makers launched an investigation out of which resulted measures to curb profits on the manufacture of arms. Can there be any question that such profits ought to be wiped out? And yet such a bill, inadequate as it is, passed the House only after a battle, and its companion legislation still lingers in the Senate.

The American people want peace—or so it is said. Then where are the American people when measures for peace are before their representatives?

As a Member of Congress I can judge somewhat of the wishes of the people by the letters I receive. Ladies and gentlemen, the interest shown me by the public in measures for peace, while greater than it has been in the past, is woefully meager. What part ought America to play in the world movement for peace? Surely a part in keeping with our economic importance in the assembly of nations. But before we can extend our efforts for amity beyond the limits of our own land we must first have peace among our people. Unless there is peace within our borders America cannot contribute to the peace of the world. Economic difficulties or economic ambitions are at the base of every conflict, whether it be a skirmish, a war between nations, or a war within a nation.

The first threat to America is the economic unrest within the 48 States of our Union. Unemployment is the blackest shadow looming over the peace of our land. Its companion shadows are starvation, idleness leading to crime, fear of security, fear of the future. We have attacked the hostile forces threatening the peace of our people within our territorial limits by heroic means. The war we have been waging against the economic enemies in our land has been difficult. We are fighting that war, constantly gaining the upper hand. The cost, while admittedly high, is less than this Nation would spend if it were confronted by the internal war which threatened us when we entered the conflict against our domestic economic evils in March of 1933.

And still we have not peace among our people, within our Nation. But yet being a Nation among other world nations we must share the problems of world peace. We are confronted, therefore, with a dual peace problem. Neutrality is excellent, so far as neutrality goes.

But war cannot be isolated—for better or for worse it affects us all, whether directly or indirectly. We therefore have a great stake in the cause of peace. Italy is sending her forces to Ethiopia even as I am talking and you are listening. One amusing fact in the Italo-Ethiopia situation rings with sardonic laughter. It is the rainy season in Ethiopia, and from all reports, if it were not, already war would be openly declared between these two Nations. As it is the declaration of hostilities is being deferred until the rainy season closes. Would that it would rain forever!

Japan is closing in on China, her eyes to the vast lands of the Soviet. Germany is breaking agreements with one hand while she signs promises with another. France is suspicious of England. England is openly offering concessions to some nations and at the same time making Heaven alone knows what secret agreements antagonistic to other nations.

With Europe sitting on a volcano ready to explode momentarily what should be America's attitude? There is no indication why we should be drawn into conflict in Europe in the event that such conflict breaks out. Whatever the problems which might precipitate war over there not one is important enough to prompt the devastation of this country.

What more than economic greed and distrust is inciting the war preparations in Europe? Compared to permanent aspects of civilization the considerations which form the present threat of war in Europe are trifling. Then why should these petty difficulties of inferior nations worry us to the extent of appropriating more than a billion dollars this year alone for defense preparations? The only part that America should play in the martial difficulties of other nations is prevention, and yet aside from reiterating a good neighbor policy what have we actually done to prevent war? Our real contribution to peace has been the reciprocal trade agreement legislation. This measure will mean a freer movement of trade between nations, tending to lessen economic unrest and requiring frequent friendly discussions of international problems.

Plans are also being made for a stabilization of the currency, a very international peace move for it, too, calls for friendly international cooperation. We have taken part in international conferences, but that is all.

The biggest peace-time Budget, with the exception of 1931, for implements of war has just been passed. Battleships, bombing planes, poison gas, tanks, and all kinds of munitions are being constructed. Nearly 50,000 more soldiers will be under arms. More young men will be admitted to West Point and Annapolis—which only from an educational standpoint can be justified. The naval training stations at Newport and at Great Lakes, out of operation since July 1, 1933, are being opened for recruit training. Bids have been invited by the Navy Department for the construction of the first of the new ships provided for in the naval appropriations bill. More than one-third of our normal Budget is to be spent for armament. How much better it could be spent to take care of the poor or provide for education and health and the recovery of our people?

Why do not the people who oppose the expenditures of the Government for its poor and its unemployed decry this expenditure for arms?

You have written me demanding that the National Budget be balanced. You have asked for economy in government. But Budget balancing and economy must be gained by taking specific provisions out of the Budget. You have protested money spent for relief and for the construction of useful projects. You have even mentioned the appropriation to rehabilitate and care for the youth of our land, but you do not mention this appalling sum of money, representing 72 cents out of every normal tax dollar which is being spent on account of war. You are taxed for this because you are taxed for gasoline, for cigarettes, for clothing, for almost everything you use to support the Nation's huge war machine. And now we have before us in Congress another income-tax bill.

A feeble handful of us in Congress tried to kill these war preparation measures, but we were overwhelmed. We tried to at least postpone the expenditure of the naval appropriations until after the disarmament conference which is to be held next year, and our hopes to preserve peace were at least given a chance. But instead America is going into that conference committed to disarmament while at the same time we are constructing a larger navy and a larger army on the fallacious plea of defense.

We pride ourselves on being the leader in world affairs, and yet we are slavishly following nations inferior to us in an armament race which can bring good to no one. The other nations point to us and say, "See, America is increasing its arms; we must do the same." And the United States points to them and says, "See, they are spending more for munitions of war; we must do the same."

Are the American people being misled by the jingoists; by certain of the press which denounces attempts of this Nation to cooperate with other nations to find a common ground for peace? Is that the reason for your silence?

Are the American people being misled by the defense cries of our Army and Navy Departments?

There is in Congress a growing group of Senators and Representatives committed to the task of making war less probable, but we do not have strength because you—the people—do not support us.

The World Court, a forward step for world peace which has been awaiting this country for years, was repudiated by the Senate. The implication is strong that a flood of protests from the people who did not understand influenced the votes of many of the Senators. I emphasize that the people who protested did not understand, for if they did, then the people of this country do not want peace.

Peace is not some vague dream of an idealist. It is real. It is imperative.

I am glad that the peace sentiment is growing in this country, that more Representatives are being sent to Congress because they will take up the battle for peace. But I repeat that the voice of the people in peace matters is feeble or unheard, and until you form yourselves into a force which demands peace your Representatives will be misled by your apathy into believing that you are indifferent to the tragedies of war and its aftermath.

THE WORLD'S DEBT TO RELIGION—THE NECESSITY FOR FULLEST DEVELOPMENT

Mr. SHANLEY. I also ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the World Debt to Religion.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, few subjects have been more perplexing, yet more varied, in their unfolding than the subject of religion. Certainly in the primitive development of our civilization religion was the cornerstone of our efforts. No one can, therefore, pass over that important study without realizing the influence of conscience upon our progress. If we accept as a major premise the overwhelming support of mankind in religious matters, we must realize the necessity for affording to it its fullest scope.

Religion should have the greatest possible outlet for its development. Any attempt to stifle, oppress, or circumvent principles and practices of a religion is nothing more than an endeavor to preclude the chances of that religion meeting the real tests of competition. There is nothing in the world that so arrests a theory's constructive development as unjust opposition. As a matter of fact, it prevents a real test. No religion can ever stand upon its own feet and be subjected to the experience of mankind until it is allowed the utmost freedom. I am convinced that the utmost freedom allowed to all religions will in the end result in the rise or fall of those particular groups. There was a time in the history of man when the pettiness of superstitious reverence, cloaked all within a credo or cult with a sanctity and isolation that completely and utterly damned all outside that fold. We hope modern thought will change for all time.

GENERAL STUDY

With this introduction, I am asking your indulgence in this talk of mine, which will concern religion, its progress and influence on world civilization and its place in international law. I am one of those, also, who believes that religion is a development of a mature civilization and its highest development will be found only in our ripest civilizations. Its progress has been beset by ignorance and superstition, exploited by the lust of conquest and the love of ease, and often enervated by the strong man's craving for power, and the poor man's search for food.

AMONG THE HEBREWS

In spite of all these obstacles its spiritual effect has been pronounced. From its earliest and perhaps its greatest relative advance among the Hebrews, it has been bedrocked on the principle of national tradition and a higher law. The Hebraic patriots were the first to see that its influence surmounted all the weaknesses of established authorities of kings and priests and princes of the people, and that it contained within itself the healing forces that were asleep in the uncorrupted consciences of a strong people.

ABSOLUTISM'S DAY

When we remember that 600 years before Christ absolutism of the most vicious type held unbounded sway, and when we remember that one of the greatest men of that day, a poet of genius and refinement, was so wrapped up on the day's philosophy that he longed to drink the blood of his political adversaries, we will appreciate the thought and the power that attempted to stifle true religion.

PERICLES

To better appreciate the later changes after Solon from religion to its absence, we have only to remember the scenes that were enacted when the national beliefs of Greece were yielding to doubt, and doubt was in no way ready for knowledge. In those days the keen faculty of reasoning of the Greeks was applied to a society which had served its purpose, but was now being corrupted and losing its hold. In that transitional period between the dim fancies of mythology and the fierce light of scientific thought, there was enough left to raise up Pericles, one of the greatest figures in the profane annals of mankind. It was he who brought the people to their senses, and warned them against the predominance of any interest. It was his thought that the preservation of the independence of labor and the security of property, the protection of the rich against envy, and the poor against oppression was the highest ideal that a religious people can effect. No one will ever think of the generation of that golden age without recalling their supremacy in poetry and eloquence, in history, philosophy, and politics, and not realize that the people who had effected these under Pericles were the most religious of all Greek communities.

When their downfall came, history tells us that it resulted from a departure from their early principles. So long as the State was struggling to provide a greater opportunity for its citizens, and so long as religion helped in that goal, there was little difficulty; but just as soon as real progress was halted, the vice of the classic, and especially the Hellenic State was evident.

Then it was seen that church and state were one, and in the coalescence, morality was undistinguished from religion and politics from morals, and in these three great fields of politics, morality, and religion there was a concentration of power that could only result in evil.

The state forgot education, neglected spiritual needs, yet claimed the allegiance and loyalty of everyone. In this great disregard for private interest and for the moral welfare and development of the people, the vital elements of prosperity were destroyed. It was no wonder that communism, utilitarianism, and tyranny moved in. In such a way as this we can analyze the history and progress of every nation, and realize the steps that religion has played.

THE CLASSIC AGE'S WEAKNESS

We must remember this: That there was somthing wanting and absent in the classic period that could only be present in Christianity. When we realize that at the close of the Greek and Roman periods three of the foundations of modern civilization and progress were absent—representative government, emancipation of slaves, and freedom of conscience. With all their progress—and no one doubts that it was a real advance—these periods were deficient in the very marrow of modern development. It was not until 3 days before his death, on the way to the temple, that the utterance of Christ, "Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's", opened a new road for both civic and religious advance, and gave to each a dignity that neither had possessed.

From that day forward we have a new theory; and despite the early efforts of Constantine, the graph is upward. We know too well that the history of practices of religion from that day is blackened by scandals and deeds that deserve the anathema of every student. We cannot forget that before the Reformation there was a vitiation of political literature because of its subservience to the interest of Pope and King, and even after the Reformation human progress is often discolored by political allegiance to Catholicism or Protestantism. Two instances may illustrate our point. John Knox thundered against the Queen because she went to Mass, and, on the other side, Marianna openly blessed the assassination of Henry III because he was in league with the Huguenots. Even tyrannicide was eulogized among Christians, first taught by John I. Salisbury, and heartily approved by Roger Bacon. With such a background, no one sincerely thought of politics as a law for the just and the unjust, or even attempted to find a set of principles that might be unwavering; and under such circumstances it was no wonder that many people had failed to learn that political science is an affair of conscience and not a matter of expediency or might.

CRISIS AND SOLUTION

When it is remembered at the same time the state was formed by the valor, the policy, or appropriate marriages of the royal family, it will be recalled to what depths sovereignty had descended. We were again falling into the era of the classic state. In one generation a nation had passed from one faith to another four times by royal command. The rack and the scaffold had become the best minister of religious propaganda, but, in spite of it all, there were men whose hard fighting, thinking, and endurance contributed to finally save us from this unity of church and state. The association of many churchmen with the popular cause saved us from the hierarchical bias of foreign divines and from the monarchial bias of continental governments, so that out of it we emerged with the separation of church and state, and a fair measure of self-government, in which the very differences in religion taught us toleration, and the confusion of our common law vividly brought home to us the realization that the best safeguard was the dependence and integrity of our judges.

A CONCLUSION

I believe that the same need of qualities of perseverance, moderation, individuality, and a manly sense of duty in the stern heart of labor has preserved us. This I believe to be the result of religious influence and political thought peculiarly our own. I believe that under these circumstances religion will always prosper.

THE INQUIRY AMONG NATIONS

We must, however, at this time investigate the condition of the sovereign state. As each nation developed and a common basis of international principle became necessary, there emerged from the days of Grotius, Pufendorf, Suarez, Bellarmine, Aquinas, and Vitoria, principles of common consent among nations that have been only the result of long and arduous strife. One principle has, however, been set out as a maxim throughout the development of international law. Each nation protects its right to control its own affairs, and no statement is more frequent in the pages of international studies than that which is predicated upon this right of nations to be exempted from external interference. So, too, a nation enjoys the right to accord such treatment as it may see fit to its own nationals within the places subject to its own control, and in our own history, from the time of Washington to the present, it has been a principle always acknowledged by the United States that every nation possesses a right to govern itself according to its own will, to change institutions at discretion, and to transact its business through whatever agencies it may deem proper to employ.

DEVELOPMENT IN UNITED STATES

Perhaps the words of President Buchanan on January 14, 1859, will best illustrate our American theory:

> I have long been convinced that it is neither the right nor the duty of this Government to exercise a moral censorship over the conduct of other independent governments, and to rebuke them for acts which we may deem arbitrary or unjust toward their own citizens or subjects.

It would be easy to quote from the great writers of international law, Moore, Westlake, Borchard, Stowell, Buell, and a host of others to prove this principle, but it is a principle not without its exceptions. From the time when the Crusades opened up the East to business enterprises and removed the dominance of the landed gentry there has been a growing diversification of international intercourse, and more and more each nation has become interested in the doings of every other nation. The development of the law of nations itself is a standing tribute to the willingness of each nation to combine with others in changing basic principles. Just as it has been said among individuals that when all have liberties no one enjoys them, so in the family of nations, unless there is real restraint there can be no enjoyment of nationality.

EROSION ON RULE

The History of International Law is really the development of exceptions to the general rule. When he was Secretary of State, Mr. Buchanan made the official remark—

> I would to God that the governments of all countries like that of our own happy land might permit knowledge of all kinds to circulate freely among the people. It is our glory that all men of the United States enjoy the inestimable right of worshipping God according to the dictates of their own conscience.

While no one will doubt the right of our Government to intercede for its own nationals, and use its utmost good offices for the furtherances of that national's religious desires, there is basis also for the statement that even the practice of another nation in regard to its own nationals becomes a matter of international concern when the repercussions from those practices affects other nations. Certainly, the persecution of the Jews in many continental lands resulted in an immigration to these shores that permitted the United States to protest. The development is such as to say that even without these repercussions, international society has advanced to the point where every nation might well be interested in the fullest development of religion in every other nation, not as an inherent right, to be sure, but as an expression of hope. Certainly we have no hesitancy in protesting against the treatment of religious groups in so-called "unenlightened countries." We have no hesitancy in expressing ourselves to those backward groups who really have no official status in international law. The growing necessity for some action of an intercessory character is best seen in a statement from Charles Cheney Hyde's International Law, volume I, page 85:

> The extent of the freedom from external control which, according to American opinion, the individual State is believed to possess will be examined with reference to what are commonly described as "domestic affairs" as distinct from those designated as "foreign affairs." In the course of such an examination it needs to be borne in mind that the revolutionary origin of the United States, together with the intolerance of external control characteristic of the race to which the people who overcame the British domination in the eighteenth century belonged, bred a devotion to principles of independence which there has happily been no disposition on the part of the Republic to relinquish. This circumstance accounts for the caution with which American opinion still greets any proposal for the restriction by general convention of rights long acknowledged to be the usual and common incidents of political independence. It is only when the sacrifice demanded in behalf of the international society is deemed to enhance the safety of each member thereof by processes which, having regard for the requirements of justice, appear to be conducive to the preservation of the general peace that any yielding on the part of the United States is to be anticipated.

ADDED MODERN EXAMPLES

Even as late as 1920 we find the following statement in the same book, disclosing a specific example of the general tendency stated supra:

In response to an intimation that the Government of Italy would welcome a statement of the view of that of the United States on the situation presented by the Russian advance into Poland in the summer of 1920, Mr. Colby, Secretary of State, found occasion to make clear the grounds forbidding recognition of the Soviet regime in Russia. These were in brief that the existing rulers of that country were not in power by the will or consent of any considerable portion of the Russian people, but represented a small minority thereof, and by means of savage oppression retained control. Secondly, it was pointed out that the existing regime was "based upon the negation of every principle of honor and good faith, and every usage and convention underlying the whole structure of international law; the negation, in short, of every principle upon which it is possible to base harmonious and trustful relations, whether of nations or individuals."

We seemingly have no limit to the protests of our Secretaries against the rigorous measures adopted against the Hebrew nationals of Russia and Rumania, and there has been no hesitancy at all on the part of our State Department to dissuade a state against such ruthless policies.

BACKWARD-NATION PRINCIPLES

Again the United States has been disposed to contend that in certain countries not accepted as full-fledged members of the family of nations, especially where American missionary enterprises were permitted to operate, native nationals associated therewith by religious professors or authorities should not be subjected to molestation or persecution. According to article XIV of the Treaty between the United States and China of October 8, 1903—

Any person, whether citizen of the United States or Chinese convert, who, according to these tenets, peaceably teaches and practices the principles of Christianity shall in no case be interfered with or molested therefor. No restrictions shall be placed on Chinese joining Christian churches. (Malloy's Treaties, I, 268.)

Another reason for urging a State to refrain from inhumane treatment of its own nationals is to be found in the circumstance that when charged with the denial of justice to resident aliens, the territorial sovereign may endeavor to rely in defense on the fact, if it be one, that such individuals were accorded treatment no more severe than that applied to nationals, and were not, in its judgment, so dealt with as to justify interposition in their behalf. (See, in this connection, Duties of Jurisdiction, infra, par. 266–267.) As a matter of fact, further in the Seventh International Conference of American States we have this statement:

It shall never be deemed an unfriendly act for any State or States to offer good offices or mediation to other States engaged in a controversy threatening or rupturing their peaceful relations, to the end that such differences may be so composed as to avoid recourse to or to end measures of force between the different States. The aforementioned good offices or mediation shall not be applicable when other methods of peaceful solution emanating from treaties or agreements between the parties for the peaceful settlement of international disputes shall have begun to function.

ATTEMPTS TO REMEDY BY TREATIES

In addition to this, for over 330 years we have a plethora of citations where religion has been the subject of treaties. Treaties authorizing a specific interference by one State in the internal affairs of another either by constituting a protectorate of the people of a particular nationality, or holding a particular religious faith, or by giving a guaranty of a particular constitution, or reigning family, or succession to the throne have all been made through the ages. Some of the most striking examples that come to mind now are the provisions for the Dissidents in Poland, and for the Christians in Turkey, and the Jews in Rumania. Poland is the outstanding example in constitutional matters while the pragmatic sanction is best seen in dynasties. As a matter of fact, the Hanoverian Succession in England is as good an example as can be found.

It would be interesting to trace the various clauses in treaties covering these points from the Treaty of Westphalia in 1648 to the present date. We would behold the enormous attention paid to the rights, and these rights caused bloodshed and cut across all national and geographical interests of sovereigns and reigning families. This is especially true of lines resulting in great territorial changes and economic disaster; the period antedating the American Declaration of Independence. It is a curious study to watch the change to State development, then changing to rights of nationalities.

The Treaty of Paris, which recognized the final conquest of Canada by Great Britain from France, had special provisions—article 4—for liberty to "the new Roman Catholic subject" of the King of Great Britain to follow their own religious worship.

In the Treaty of Oliva there were stipulations for the protection of the coreligionists of either power in the territories of the other. Poland stipulated for the protection of Roman Catholics in North Livonia, and Sweden for the protection of those who were afterward known as the "Dissidents" in Poland.

In the Treaty of Moscow in 1686 Poland promised Russia not to molest members of the Orthodox Church of Lutherans and not to try to make them Roman Catholics.

Even the capitulations with Turkey give us examples, as in the capitulations of 1740, which gave to French subjects the right to visit the holy places at Jerusalem. In the Treaties of Carlowitz (1699) between Poland and Turkey and Austria and Turkey, there are stipulations for the freedom of the exercise of the Roman Catholic religion.

In over 200 major treaties there are instances abounding with stipulations and guaranties concerning religious liberty, so that a really effective world-wide opinion has been formed concerning the right of nations to offer the good offices of statesmanship with reference to the internal concerns of other nations, not only by this method of treaties but by actual protests and offer of good services.

OTHER FIELDS

It would be interesting also to set out the many ways in which interference is guaranteed in many other subjects than armaments—of course, are all too familiar with stress on the efforts to maintain a balance of power, the right of succession, fishing rights, spheres of influence, extraterritoriality philosophy by injuries to nationals.

MISSIONARIES

Even in the great overthrow of its previous action in regard to missionaries the following statement has been in the records of the Secretary of State in protest against Japanese practices. It is noted from Mr. Seward's letter to the Right Reverend Horatio Potter, 74 MS Dom. Letter 417—

It is to be feared, however, that any attempt to induce them (the Japanese) to change their policy in respect to our religion would be premature. Still this Department will instruct Mr. Volkenburgh, United States Minister to Japan, to make inquiries, and, if he should find the prospect at all favorable at this time, to cooperate with Her Majesty's representative.

Obviously this is a broad statement and can well be said to help both American nationals as well as those of other countries. A far more indicative letter is that which Mr. Fish, Secretary of State, sent to Mr. Ade at Madrid on December 8, 1776.

Upon the 23d of November Sir Edward Thornton called upon me and stated that he was instructed by Lord Derby to read to me, and if I desire it to leave with me copy of an instruction bearing date October 28, which had been addressed to Mr. Layard, Her Majesty's minister at Madrid, touching religious toleration in Spain, and that Lord Derby expressed the hope that the Government of the United States might instruct its representative at Madrid to make representations in a similar sense to the Government of the King. I transmit, herewith, a copy of this instruction, which was given me by Sir Edward Thornton.

You will perceive its guarded character, and while Lord Derby states that Her Majesty's Government have learned with great regret that the Spanish Government had placed upon the eleventh article of the constitution an interpretation so much at variance with the spirit of toleration now so universal in civilized states, and with the more enlightened policy which has been followed in Spain since the year 1869, without apparent ill consequences, and while Her Majesty's Government would gladly learn that the recent orders have been rescinded or relaxed, he has not thought it advisable to instruct Mr. Layard to make any formal or official application to the Government of Spain in that sense. Lord Derby, however, expresses the hope entertained by Her Majesty's Government with regard to religious freedom may not be followed by others of a still more retrograde character, which Senor Caldern y Callantes, the Minister of State, admits are secured by Protestants by the eleventh article of the constitution, will be scrupulously respected, with its reliance upon the good faith of the Spanish Government to act promptly and energetically in repressing any attempt on the part of local authorities to infringe upon these rights. Mr. Layard is instructed to speak in this sense to the Spanish Minister of Foreign Affairs and to lose no opportunity for impressing upon the Spanish Government the deep interest with which the question of religious liberty in Spain is regarded by Her Majesty's Government and by all classes of Her Majesty's subjects.

The question had been presented to this Government before Sir Edward's interview with me, and I have appreciated the delicacy of making representations to a foreign state concerning religious freedom within its own borders, as Lord Derby appears to have done. While, therefore, it is not deemed advisable to instruct you to make any remonstrances or to prefer any formal or official application concerning the steps that have lately been taken in Spain on the question, you are instructed to act in concert with Mr. Layard, Her Majesty's minister, in the sense in which he is instructed by Lord Derby, and to take occasion to speak in a similar sense to the Minister of State, impressing upon him the deep interest which the question of religious liberty in Spain excites in the United States, and the strong hope that the steps lately taken by the Spanish Government with reference to religious freedom and toleration may not be followed by others of a more retrogade character, and that the rights which the Minister of State admits are secured to Protestants by the eleventh article of the constitution may be entirely respected, and that the United States rely upon the good faith of the Spanish Government to promptly and firmly suppress any attempts from any quarter to infringe upon these rights.

OBSERVATIONS

While from this study it should be obvious that the United States will protect its own nationals in any country within reasonable limits, and that it will also interpose objections or its concern over the plight of foreign nationals when that plight is responsible for repercussions in the United States. In addition, it can be readily seen that there is a growing feeling to extend that to at least an intercessory stage over heinous acts, even in the case of foreign nationals. When we realize the expressions of opinion by nationals of one country over such common concerns as the condition of labor, the position of women in other countries, we see gradually emerging the basis for friendly suggestions on religious matters. If we are to have any standing at all in the family of nations, it may well be our position to ask for a conference of nations on the duty of each nation to allow religion the right of development and the right of physical places of worship.

Added instances of internal suggestive interference right in the Montevideo Conference on rights of women and labor all show the tendency of every nation to come more and more together on common ground. It must be realized that every sovereignty courts the good will of every other sovereignty. When nations fail to heed the warnings of other nations' repercussions, it is only because of their blindness to international good will and progress.

Let us look at two expressions of views on the matter of persecution and intolerance. The first is that of Mr. Blaine:

The Government of the United States does not assume to dictate the internal policies of other nations, or to make suggestions as to what their municipal laws should be, or as to the manner in which they should be administered. Nevertheless, the mutual duties of nations require that each should use its power with a due regard for the results which it exercises and produces on the rest of the world (Foreign Relations, 1891, pp. 737–739).

Another view is that of President Harrison, enunciated on December 9, 1881. The subject again is the Jewish persecution in Russia:

This Government has found occasion to express in a friendly spirit, but with much earnestness, to the Government of the Tzar its serious concern because of the harsh measures now being enforced against the Hebrews in Russia.

Parenthetically we may add that the word "earnestness" has a significant connotation in diplomatic intercourse. It is an outright warning of a serious intention to follow up the representation insofar as the demands of the crisis should allow.

The handling of the entire matter in Russia by our Government was an attempt on the surface to assuage the amour proper of the Russian Government, but the veneer of diplomatic nicety is so thin that its easy penetration discloses the humanitarian purpose behind the efforts of this country.

It is interesting to note that another President saw no occasion to spread over his attitude any veneer in his attempt to cut through the heart of the ordinary diplomatic cheval-de-frise. President Roosevelt, on a similar occasion, gathered together the petitions on the Russian situation and forwarded them to our Ambassador in Petrograd. He accompanied that despatch with a letter which cited the atrocities and set out a bill of particulars of complaints. Our American Ambassador attempted to present that despatch to the Russian Secretary of State, who obviously refused to receive them, but the attendant publicity on a world-wide scale was so effective that Russia stood humiliated by this forthright attempt of the keen-witted "Teddy."

On this entire subject of intervention for humanitarian purposes the phrases used are indeed varied but synonymous. Some text writers use the phrase "on the ground of humanity", others "abhorrent conditions" still others "against immoral acts"; all seem especially directed toward the violation of the principles of decency and humanity. Certainly it may fairly be said that they are attempting to protect the inhabitants of the involved state from treatment which is so arbitrary and persecution so abusive as to exceed the limits of that domestic authority, within which sovereignty is supposed to be exercised with reason and justice.

We cannot escape the conclusion that the people of one nation are directly and sympathetically affected by any attempt of another nation to even abridge the right of that other nation's own nationals. We have seen that wherever the repercussions of these abusive practices spread their effect beyond the boundaries, either by enforced emigration, or other methods, another nation so affected is bound to interfere or interpose its good offices. We have seen also that where the action is so heinous or so inconsistent with the principles of decency that interference is justifiably growing.

Perhaps the best summary is included in the scholarly article of Charles Cheney Hyde in volume 6 of the Illinois Law Review, where he says:

It is insufferable, however, that the tyrannical conduct of a State toward its own subjects might directly affect a numerous class of subjects of another State who were connected by blood with the victims of ill-treatment. If the injury thus sustained was of periodic recurrence and felt by large numbers of the population of the outside State, the latter would doubtless assert the right to intervene. In so doing, it would find justification for its action on grounds closely analagous to those of self-defense.

Thus we see a connection by blood as a basis for action.

CONSTITUTIONAL DISABILITIES IN MEXICO

May we not say that a connection by religion is another basis? May we not say also that when we have absolute proof of a constitution which seeks to abolish religion as is stated in article 3 of the Mexican Constitution, "No religious corporation, nor minister of any religious creed, shall establish or direct schools of primary instruction", that such a statement affects countless millions connected by religion? Further, article 130 of the same constitution, "The State legislatures shall have the exclusive power of determining the maximum number of ministers of religious creeds according to the needs of that locality." Are these not two instances? Physically and practically, are we not interested in the sworn affidavits of countless numbers of American citizens who found themselves in Mexico on legitimate errands and were deprived of all religious opportunities. The plethora of instances are so remarkable that they must have a reverberating sympathy among millions in America. As a matter of fact, our own foreign office makes the statement that they "had piles of letters and petitions from Americans living in Mexico making such similar requests."

In an official communique, the Mexican Ambassador, Señor Francisco Castillo Najera, in discussing the church problem of his country, said:

There is a great deal of agitation going on, but the agitation is outside of Mexico. Mexico is quiet, indifferent.

This reminds us of the family of Jews in Germany who wrote to relatives in the United States as follows:

We have a wonderful life. Not a hair on the head of any Jew has been touched, and Mr. Hitler is bringing us to a better future. Uncle Moritz, who expressed the opposite opinion, is being buried tomorrow.

The unalterable conclusion is that millions of communicants in this country of all denominations, though primarily the Catholic church is involved, feel a tug at their sensitive sympathies over the deplorable state of brutality and Bolshevistic efforts of the Mexican Government to wipe out religion as we understand it.

Now, certainly in a family of nations such an attitude cannot be consistently approved when that nation attempts to hold the control on all other subjects. There is no question but what Mexico wishes to derive the utmost advantage from a most friendly intercourse with this Nation. There is no question but what the very people whose fellow communicants are so brutalized in Mexico must feel bitter toward Mexico. Such an attitude is not good for Mexico, and it is not good for America. It seems fitting and proper that America should speak, and speak of the voices which rise in protest, even if only to acknowledge the condition.

This Congress is fully aware of the apprehension with which millions of communicants of all denominations in America are startled by the religious disabilities in Mexico. The ever-growing tendency of nations to remove the obstacles which cause unfavorable repercussions in other lands warrants us in vouchsafing the hope that there will be even greater opportunity for the teachings and practices of religion in the family of nations. We believe that the common consent of mankind favors the utmost development of religious worship.

In the growth of society it is not too much to expect that the fullest appreciation of this hope will find greater residence not only in Mexico but in every other nation at present outside the world thought on this subject. I believe there is no infringement on the rights of the Executive and the State Department in asking this Congress to go on record and extend its fullest apprehension of alarm and sorrow of millions of American communicants of all denominations in this country over the religious disabilities, not only in Mexico but in other nations. I believe that every congress or parliament of the world has a right to state the facts like these and to express a hope for the elimination of such conditions. I believe also that passage of similar resolutions or expressions of hope throughout the world sooner or later will be the basis for a new development of international law and would in the end result in a new chapter in religious tolerance on a world-wide basis.

It is only necessary to repair to the greatest ecclesiastical critics in history to appreciate what they think about the salutary value of divisions in religion. Fundamentally, we must keep in mind that there has been a division in religion that has forced tolerance in this country and has been the basis for our comparative religious freedom.

It was Francois de Salignac de la Mothe-Fenelon, a French prelate, who said in advising the Pretender, son of James II, of England, to practice religious toleration in case he came to the throne. "No human power," he declared, "can force the intrenchments of the human mind; compulsion never persuades—it only makes hypocrites." And again, to the same prince, "When kings interfere in matters of religion, they enslave instead of protecting it."

It was Voltaire also who said that one religion in the state presents a formidable despotism, while two results in the attempts of each to throttle the other, but if there are 30, there is happiness and peace.

It is perhaps fitting that we should close with the brilliant opening remarks of Viscount Bryce in his immortal chapter on the Churches and the Clergy.

In examining the National Government and the State governments we have never once had occasion to advert to any ecclesiastical body or question, because with such matters government has in the United States absolutely nothing to do. Of all the differences between the Old World and the New this is perhaps the most salient. Half the wars of Europe, half the internal troubles that have vexed European states, from the Monophysite controversies in the Roman Empire of the fifth century down to the Kuiturkampf in the German Empire of the nineteenth, have arisen from theological differences, or from the rival claims of church and state. This whole vast chapter of debate and strife has remained virtually unopened in the United States. There is no established church. All religious bodies are absolutely equal before the law, and unrecognized by the law, except as voluntary associations of private citizens.

The Federal Constitution contains the following prohibitions:

Article VI: No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

Amendment I: Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

No attempt has ever been made to alter or infringe upon these provisions. They affect the National Government only, placing no inhibition on the States, and leaving the whole subject to their controlled discretion, though subject to the general guarantees against oppression.

Every State constitution contains provisions generally similar to the above. Most declare that every man may worship God according to his own conscience, or that the free enjoyment of all religious sentiments and forms of worship shall be held sacred; most also provide that no man shall be compelled to support or attend any church.

The idea that religious liberty is the generating force of civil liberty and that civil liberty is the necessary condition of religious liberty is a heritage of the seventeenth century. That great political ideal sanctifying freedom and consecrating it to God, teaching man to treasure the liberty of others as their own, and to defend them for the love of justice and charity more than as a claim of right, has been the soul of what is great and good in the progress of the last 250 years. The cause of religion, even under the unregenerate influence of worldly passion, has had as much to do as any other motives of policy in making our country the foremost of the free. If it is our eventual destiny to isolate ourselves and to free our thoughts, as well as all intercourse from foreign alliances, may we never hesitate to speak out the thoughts which ruffle the consciences of great masses of our people. It is right that we should present to the world the reaction of minorities, and even majorities. It is a good thing for us, and it is a better thing for them.

WOULD YOU KILL ALL DOGS BECAUSE ONE DOG IS MAD?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter I have written a constituent in reference to utilities bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, if we start to print letters that we send to our constituents, the RECORD will be overcrowded to such an extent that I do not know what value there will be to it.

Mr. SNELL. It is the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. HOEPPEL. It is a statement of a principle that I think will be of interest to Members.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert at this point a letter written to a constituent who, like myself, is interested in the abolition of holding companies, but who, apparently, was influenced by the administration propaganda in reference to the so-called "death clause" in the utility bill.

This bill is now in conference, and the differences between the Senate and the House measures may be adjusted so that the bill may be acceptable to me. If it is returned to the House in a form which I can conscientiously support, I shall be glad to do so, but I reiterate my opposition to the "death clause", which permits one individual to exercise arbitrary domination over the investments of our citizens.

The letter to my constituent is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 12, 1935.

Mr. W. H. WIEDING,
Alhambra, Calif.

DEAR MR. WIEDING: I acknowledge yours of the 5th instant, wherein you and those associated with you express yourselves as disturbed as to my vote on the holding-company bill.

As shown in the press reports, I voted against the "death clause" because I considered it my duty to do so in the interest of the honest, innocent investors in the various operating companies within the holding companies.

Both the Senate and the House bills provide for the dissolution of unnecessary holding companies with this important difference—that the Senate provides for arbitrary action to this end and the House bill seeks to eliminate unnecessary holding companies through an orderly, fair procedure which would, at the same time, protect the thousands of innocent investors. No judge should have the authority to bring an American citizen before him, on his own complaint, and to sentence such an individual to oblivion without a jury trial. In my opinion, there should be no objection to the Security Exchange Commission, appointed by the President, acting as a jury to pass upon the validity of charges brought against holding companies.

Personally, I am opposed to holding companies, but when I find a mad dog on the street, I do not feel inclined to kill every other dog on the street. The American people who have investments in utility companies certainly have the right, as citizens, to be heard on any complaints or charges made against the administration of their investments.

As I stated in a speech which I made on the floor of the House on July 2, 1935, and which you will find on page 10636 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I am not in favor of destroying wealth. I believe in creating wealth and not in curtailing the production of wealth as we are doing today in the A. A. A. I suggested to the committee that all holding companies and all companies doing an interstate business be incorporated under Federal laws and that regulation through step-rate taxation and other methods should be sufficient to control unfair practices. The holding company evil has developed to its present proportions since the intercorporation tax was repealed following the World War, and with the imposition of a step-rate tax, the liquidation of unnecessary holding companies would be brought about through strictly constitutional means without any of the distress and suffering incident to their arbitrary dissolution.

I am interested in recovery through sensible legislation predicated upon existing law and the constitutional rights of the citizen. To vote arbitrary power to any individual to efface and destroy the investments of our citizens without due process of law or a hearing would, in my opinion, be in violation of my oath as a Representative.

As long as I represent the constituency of the Twelfth Congressional District of California, I shall never swerve from what I consider to be my duty as your representative, regardless of pressure from any source.

With best wishes and kind personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

J. H. HOEPPEL, M. C.,
Twelfth District of California.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered by Hon. C. C. Dickinson, a former Member of this House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the Democratic side refused to allow an address by a former Member to be inserted in the RECORD, and I object.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Dickinson was a former Member of the House, and he made this address before the American Legion Post named after his son, Clement Dickinson. His son was killed on the battlefield in the late war.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am sorry, but we cannot be playing favorites. The Democratic side objected to the printing of an address by the former Member of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. Fort. That being the rule established by the majority, I must object.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not hold me responsible for everything he thinks the Democratic Party does.

Mr. SNELL. No; but we have to protect our own people on this side.

Mr. ROMJUE. Let us not be boys about this matter. I should be very glad if Mr. Fort's address should be inserted in the RECORD. Why punish me or former Congressman Dickinson's friends, because somebody, forsooth, on the Democratic side may have objected to Mr. Fort's address being put into the RECORD? It might be if he were here today, he would withdraw the objection. If we are going to indulge in tactics of that kind when this country is in the condition it is now, if a man on the floor of this House, whether Democrat or Republican, is going to say just because somebody did so-and-so, or somebody's party did so-and-so, he would not do this, that, or the other, I am going to protest such tactics.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The only reason for our insisting upon it is that we have found in the past when we let speaking go on unrestricted on the other side, when one of our Members wanted to speak there was objection. This is happening continually, and we have to stand up for our rights. The only chance we have to be protected is to see that our people are taken care of.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. Why not put in Mr. Fort's address also?

Mr. ROMJUE. I should be very glad to do that. I have no objection to it. I suggest that both of them go in, if that is satisfactory.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is all right.

Mr. ROMJUE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to insert former Congressman Dickinson's address to which I have just referred, and also that the address of former Congressman Fort be inserted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, what is the request?

The SPEAKER. The request is that speeches made by former Congressmen Dickinson and Fort be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, I objected to that yesterday, and I am going to object to all political speeches made by ex-Senators or ex-Members or ex-this or ex-that, because there is no foundation for many of the statements that they make and they do not contain the truth or the facts. I am sick and tired of requests of this kind.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

FOUNDING OF COLONY OF CONNECTICUT

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following appointments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 18, the Chair appoints as members of the commission for the participation of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Colony of Connecticut the following Members of the House of Representatives:

Mr. KOPPLEMANN, Mr. CITRON, Mr. SHANLEY, Mr. SMITH of Connecticut, Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut, Mr. HIGGINS of Connecticut.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MORITZ, for a few days, to attend to legal matters involving his estate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. SABATH, did not understand the situation as it was referred to a moment ago, and he assures me that he will now withdraw his objection. Mr. Dickinson's speech was not on a political subject but of patriotic nature.

Mr. SABATH. I understand this is patriotic and not a political speech.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri has connected up his request with a request that Mr. FISH made yesterday, that Mr. Fort's speech should be also extended in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand that the Fort speech is already in the RECORD.

Mr. SNELL. If one goes in, the other does.

Mr. ROMJUE. My request is that they both go in. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to insert the address made by former Congressman Dickinson and also that the address made by former Congressman Fort may be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE] has a request of his own, I have no objection, but he ought not to embrace several others in his own request. Let them all stand on their own bottoms.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

WHY DO THE DEMOCRATIC LEADERS OF THE HOUSE USE THEIR POWERFUL POSITIONS TO PREVENT A CONSIDERATION OF THE FRAZIER-LEMKE FARM REFINANCE BILL?

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, in asking Members of Congress to go to the Speaker's desk and sign petition no. 7, I am asking them to make it possible for the farmers of America to bring on the floor for discussion the Frazier-Lemke farm refinance bill. This bill has been reported out by the Committee on Agriculture by a vote of 14 to 5, but still the Rules Committee refuses to grant a rule under which this bill can be discussed.

Regardless of whether you believe in the principles of the bill or do not, it would seem that no Member of Congress would refuse to allow the bill to be discussed. A refusal to allow any important matter to be discussed is the very worst thing that could ever happen to representative government. It would be a blunder for this Congress to refuse to hear the bill.

Politically, in the blunder of refusing to discuss the bill, the Democrats will suffer the most, as the Democratic Party is in control of the House. In asking you to sign the petition I do not have in mind what effect a discussion of the bill will have on either party. It is nonpolitical. The Republicans of this House have been more generous in signing the petition, according to their numerical numbers, than have the Democrats, but none of the Republicans have been asked to sign the petition for any purpose but the sole and only purpose of permitting the farmers of America to have a hearing on a bill that they have supported in such great numbers. I have heard it said that the Republicans are signing the petition to put President Roosevelt in the hole, evidently meaning that the bill will pass the House and Senate and must then be vetoed by the President. No such intent was ever conceived by me in asking you for your support. Personally, I supported the President in a Republican State, and even now it would please me to see the President make good with the American people. I am not now, and have never been, so blinded by partisan politics that I must refuse to support a principle which is right.

Should this Democratic House be responsible for the refusal to allow this bill to be discussed, the result would be to drive supporters of the President away from him. For this reason, therefore, a refusal would have a devastating effect upon the Democratic Party, at least more so than on the Republican Party.

The examination of the record of the Seventy-fourth Congress will clearly demonstrate that the moment any measure comes upon the floor involving a clash between the people on one side and the special interests on the other that the supporters of the special interests spring to their feet in defense of those interests, regardless of party. On such questions as money and banking, the utilities, or any other major issue, I challenge anyone to find the least difference between the mental attitude of the congressional members from New York and the members from Virginia.

This fight will continue until the people win, and, in my judgment, the days of the two-party system are drawing to a close. There may never be more than two major parties, but this much is true: that the Republican Party has been put out of commission by the people and its leaders are not progressive enough to reinstate the party. The Democrats are on the way out now, as its leaders have listened to the call of special interests instead of the people. Further than that, bureaucratic departments, established by the Democratic Party with increased powers, have arrived at a place and time where they defy all parties and all principles. Every vestige of the peculiar rights of States has been trampled under foot, and the Constitution has been regarded by them as a literary composition.

To indicate clearly to you that there is no political action in the minds of Members who refuse to sign the petition, let me say that this refusal, in my opinion, comes mostly from States that are reactionary. When a State is so reactionary that neither Democrats nor Republicans will dare to sign this petition, then I say to you that neither party can long claim leadership with the American people. I refer to such States as New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Massachusetts. What does the record show as measured by this bill?

New York with 45 Members of Congress: 29 Democrats, 1 Democrat has signed; 16 Republicans, 4 Republicans have signed.

New Jersey, 14 Members: 10 Republicans, 4 Democrats, none have signed.

Massachusetts, 15 Members: 8 Republicans, none have signed; 7 Democrats, 3 have signed.

Illinois, 25 Members: 6 Republicans, 5 have signed; 19 Democrats, 5 have signed.

Pennsylvania, 34 Members: 11 Republicans, 4 have signed; 23 Democrats, 3 have signed.

Connecticut, 6 Members: 4 Democrats, 2 Republicans, none have signed.

Every Republican Congressman west of the Mississippi River has signed this petition.

The following State delegations in this House have signed the petition regardless of political affiliation: Arizona, Delaware, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, Washington, and Wyoming.

The following States have not contributed a single Member to the petition: Alabama, Connecticut, Kentucky, New Jersey, North Carolina, Rhode Island, and Virginia.

STATES MEMORIALIZING H. R. 2066

The following State legislatures have passed resolutions favoring the bill: Montana, Nevada, Wisconsin, Illinois, Minnesota, North Dakota, California, Nebraska, Oregon, Indiana, Arizona, Idaho, Colorado, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Tennessee, Iowa, South Carolina, Kansas, Michigan, Ohio, Texas, Kentucky, Wyoming, North Carolina, Arkansas, New Mexico, New Jersey, Washington, Missouri, Florida, and Louisiana.

Lower houses: New York, Delaware, Pennsylvania, and Alabama.

Territory: Hawaii.

On the 5th of July the signers on the Frazier-Lemke petition had reached the number of 212, lacking only 6 more signers to constitute a majority of the present House Membership of 431. As soon as the administration leaders discovered the nearing success of the Frazier-Lemke petition, they at once began a campaign of interviewing Members to secure withdrawals from the petition. This movement was successful for the time being, as 12 Democrats withdrew their names. Fearing that the movement thus started by the Democratic leaders was the result of White House interference, a committee of 4 Democrats and 2 Progressive Republicans called at the White House and were there assured that the President knew nothing of this activity, and had neither directly nor indirectly authorized any such move, and the further assurance was given at that time that the President would not interfere himself or permit anyone to use his office in any manner to secure the withdrawal of names from the petition.

The active workers for the petition then gathered new hope and began a new campaign to secure the 216 names necessary to bring the bill on the floor. During the 8th, 9th, and 10th of July no interference with the securing of signatures was evident. On the 11th of July things began to happen again. The petition had come within 4 names of having the required 216 signatures. All at once, without any warning, the House leaders began a sudden campaign to resist the petition.

The Speaker of the House, the Chairman of the Rules Committee, and the Democratic whip began a counter-campaign, telling Democratic Members not to sign the petition or to withdraw their names if they had signed, on the story that the President did not want the bill to come on the floor for discussion. By the time the petition had come within four names of having enough signatures, and while a Democrat was addressing the House in a political speech, the House was suddenly adjourned. I have been advised by old parliamentarians that never before was the House adjourned by the majority party in the midst of a speech by a majority member.

That is the situation, and I, for one, do not understand what forces are behind this move to prevent a discussion of this bill. Surely, it would be political suicide for the President to prevent a discussion of the bill when 32 legislatures have passed resolutions favoring it. Another fact seems well established: that honorable men like the House leaders named would not make this move on their own account.

The backers of the Frazier-Lemke petition merely ask for one simple right—namely, that the bill be permitted to come on the floor for debate. That is all. I presume a great many fair men have signed the petition for that reason and no doubt some will vote against the bill when it is debated. But that is immaterial, the question is: Will this Democratic Congress take the position of saying to 50,000,000 farm voters "You cannot have your farm bill discussed in this Congress, even though 32 States have approved it, and even though 212 Congressmen have approved a discussion of the bill"? If this Democratic Congress is willing to take this responsibility I am sure I am right in my prediction, that the Democratic Party will be relieved of further responsibility on this bill when a new Congress convenes. "Truth crushed to the earth shall rise again."

There is more than the mere Frazier-Lemke bill involved in the present situation. The question of representative government is at stake. Can it be that great questions, backed by millions of citizens, backed by a majority of the State legislatures of the Nation, and involving the security of homes for millions of distressed citizens, cannot have a hearing before a Congress elected by the people of the Nation? To hold this view means the final destruction of the Government itself. Let those who desire this course take the responsibility of it.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 1064. An act for the relief of Albert Gonzales; to the Committee on Claims.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 2566. An act for the relief of Percy C. Wright;

H. R. 5393. An act for the relief of Moses Israel;

H. R. 5599. An act to regulate the strength and distribution of the line of the Navy, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 347. Joint resolution to provide for the compensation of pages of the Senate and House of Representatives from July 1, 1935, until the close of the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 883. An act directing the retirement of acting assistant surgeons of the United States Navy at the age of 70 years; and

S. 2779. An act to authorize the conveyance of certain lands in Nome, Alaska.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House, under its order previously made, adjourned until Monday, July 15, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SUGAR BEETS AND THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, last Saturday, at Greeley, Colo., Hon. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, at a meeting of Colorado farm organizations, discussed problems of sugar-beet growers and the Agricultural Adjustment Act. In the course of his remarks, he said, in part:

> One of the arts of Government is to discover that true and just balance between conflicting interests that can best be maintained over a period of years, while the welfare of the whole, along with the welfare of those conflicting parts which make up the whole, is continually increased. The use of governmental machinery to apply this formula to sugar has, in my opinion, been one of the boldest and, I trust, will prove one of the most successful efforts to improve the welfare of both the parts and the whole.

The Secretary added:

> The traditional way of protecting your industry, by a tariff designed to cover the differential in costs over foreign producers, gradually became inadequate, until by the summer of 1932, when the highest duty in 35 years was in effect, the price for raw sugar in the United States reached an all-time low of 2.57 cents duty paid. Despite low prices, stocks continued to pile up, and the lower prices went the more supply increased. In common with farmers everywhere, you felt yourselves imprisoned in a vicious circle.
> It was the purpose of the Jones-Costigan amendment, as it was the purpose of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, to break this vicious circle and to help growers obtain a fair return for a balanced production.
> At present American granulated sugar is being offered for export at the basis of 1.20 cents net cash in bond. This means the value of 300 pounds of sugar in an average ton of beets is $3.60, processed and ready for market.
> Beet growers in the United States, under the protection of the quota provisions of the Jones-Costigan Act, and under production adjustment contracts, will receive, not $3.60 a ton but an average of about $6.75 a ton. This will not mean great wealth to the average producer, but it does mean effective, substantial protection—a genuinely fair return for balanced production.

I ask that the remarks of the Secretary of Agriculture as a whole be printed in the RECORD as part of my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

[Remarks of Hon. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, at a meeting of Colorado farm organizations, Greeley, Colo., July 13, 1935]

It has been 26 years since I had the pleasure of visiting Greeley. In the summer of 1909, in order to become acquainted with irrigated farming, I made an inspection trip of irrigation projects throughout the West and during that trip naturally visited Greeley. At that time I was greatly impressed with the type of rural civilization which was being built of these irrigation projects. That sort of farming makes necessary continuous cooperation—cooperation to get water and keep it coming, cooperation to market products efficiently and profitably. And where electricity is a by-product of an irrigation project, it becomes possible to build a most attractive farm community.

Of the cash crops grown on irrigation projects, sugar beets is one of the most important. When the principles of the Jones-Costigan Act were first presented I visualized at once the problems of the sugar-beet grower on the irrigated projects of the West and the importance of maintaining the industry to which these people have become accustomed. I did not believe that the people on these projects had the right to use those new governmental powers to expand their production if such expansions would damage farmers elsewhere. I did think, however, that governmental action of the past had given them a right to rely upon a certain share of the domestic sugar market as their market outlet. The question was how to protect that right to market so as to give the producer the maximum benefit, do the minimum of harm to the consumer, and at the same time enable the United States to deal fairly and satisfactorily with her insular possessions and neighbors.

One of the arts of government is to discover that true and just balance between conflicting interests that can best be maintained over a period of years, while the welfare of the whole, along with the welfare of those conflicting parts which make up the whole, is continually increased. The use of governmental machinery to apply this formula to sugar has, in my opinion, been one of the boldest and I trust will prove one of the most successful efforts to improve the welfare of both the parts and the whole.

As sugar prices dropped during the depression you became aware that the problem of sugar could not be solved by the farmers of Colorado alone. You saw the problem extend to the whole beet-growing territory, East and West, to the cane-growing territory in the South, to our insular possessions, to Cuba, and, in fact, to many parts of the world. You were made aware that tariff and foreign trade policy was deeply involved and that the interests of labor and of the consumer had to be considered.

The traditional way of protecting your industry, by a tariff designed to cover the differential in costs over foreign producers, gradually became inadequate, until by the summer of 1932, when the highest duty in 35 years was in effect, the price for raw sugar in the United States reached an all-time low of 2.57 cents duty paid. Despite low prices, stocks continued to pile up, and the lower prices went the more supply increased. In common with farmers everywhere, you felt yourselves imprisoned in a vicious circle.

It was the purpose of the Jones-Costigan amendment, as it was the purpose of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, to break this vicious circle and to help growers obtain a fair return for a balanced production. The purpose was not to help farmers obtain exorbitant return or to protect them from the consequences of headlong expansion and unbalanced production. No enactment which proposed that would be in the public interest, nor, as a matter of fact, in the farmer's interest. I would emphasize, therefore, that phrase, "a fair return for a balanced production." It is the criterion by which to judge the results under the Agricultural Adjustment Act in general and the Jones-Costigan amendment in particular.

Under the old tariff system, returns to beet producers were conditioned upon the world price for sugar plus the amount of the tariff. Under the theory contained in the Jones-Costigan amendment, however, returns to beet producers are largely divorced from the world price. They no longer depend upon the indirect and uncertain tariff benefit trickling down through processors and middlemen. Your market is now protected by the quota system, and your income is supplemented by benefit payments granted in return for a balanced production.

Let us see how the program has worked out. You are aware that our yearly domestic consumption of sugar, cane and beet, was estimated for 1934 to be 6,452,000 tons. The problem Congress and the administration faced was to decide what share of this domestic market sugar-beet producers could and should be given. It was necessary to consider past production of sugar beets, both for a long range of years and for the peak years. The interests of domestic cane producers had to be considered. Because Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines are under the American flag, and because they are so largely dependent upon income from sugar, their interests could not be ignored. And if we were to pursue the "good neighbor" policy with respect to Cuba, if we wished to restore some of our valuable export trade with her in the interests of agriculture and industry in many parts of our country, then decency and good sense demanded at least some attention to the Cuban sugar situation.

The upshot of the congressional deliberations, as you know, was the decision that of the total domestic consumption of nearly six and one-half million tons, American sugar-beet producers should provide 1,550,000 tons raw value. If and when there is an increase in domestic consumption, the quota for the continental area is to be increased by 30 percent thereof involving a 25.7-percent increase for beet sugar, a 4.3-percent increase for cane sugar.

This basic quota of 1,550,000 tons for sugar beets is higher than the marketings of any previous year, and higher than the production of any year but one, that one being the record crop of 1933–34. The quota compares with a previous high record of marketings of 1,366,000 tons in 1933, and with a marketing average for the 9 years, 1925–33, of 1,164,667 short tons. Comparing the quota with past production, we find it substantially above the 9-year average, but 12 percent below the production of the record year 1933, when the crop totaled 1,756,940 short tons, raw value.

So far as marketings of sugar are concerned, therefore, the sugar-beet industry of the United States has made no sacrifice as compared with other years, but has for the time being traded the right to expand marketings—at a loss—in return for a stable, minimum income. This restriction on expansion, of course, does not restrict any expansion which might be indicated by an increase in domestic consumption.

Under the Jones-Costigan Act the limitation is on marketing rather than on production. As you know, however, in order to make the marketing limitation feasible growers have voluntarily accepted acreage allotments, and are receiving benefit payments under these individual contracts. The Jones-Costigan Act did not become law until May 9, 1934, consequently total acreage planted to sugar beets in 1934 was not substantially less than the exceptionally high acreage of 1933, but the harvest acreage was cut down by drought. The acreage allowable under the adjustment program is 975,595 acres, which compares with a harvested acreage of 983,000 acres in the peak year 1933, and with an average of 734,889 acres for the 9-year period.

The quotas assigned our insular possessions and Cuba are of interest at this point. To sugar producers in the Philippines a 1934 quota was assigned at a figure 22.2 percent below the highest year's shipments of sugar from them to us. The Puerto Rican quota for 1934 was 12 percent under the peak year, and the Hawaiian quota 10.5 percent under. The Cuban quota, on the other hand, represents a decline of 51.3 percent from the year of peak shipments, and a decline of 35.2 percent from the 9-year average.

From these facts it is clear that American sugar-beet producers have been asked to make relatively slight adjustments by comparison with the adjustments necessary with their off-shore competitors, and by comparison with the adjustments required, for instance, of cotton, tobacco, wheat, and corn-hog producers. And it so happens that because of weather conditions in 1934 and because of the increase in the value of crops competitive with beets, American producers have not been able to produce the amount of sugar beets called for in their quota.

A detailed statement of the results of the sugar-adjustment program to date would include considerable emphasis upon the 69,943 contracts signed, and the 77,581 checks issued thus far, and the payment of over nine and one-half million dollars in benefit payments, with the prospect that this sum will rise to about $17,000,000 when payment is completed on the 1934 crop now being marketed. The most significant item, however, is the comparison of world sugar prices with prices, plus benefit payments, received by domestic producers. At present American granulated sugar is being offered for export at the basis of 1.20 cents net cash in bond. This means the value of 300 pounds of sugar in an average ton of beets is $3.60, processed and ready for market.

Beet growers in the United States, under the protection of the quota provisions of the Jones-Costigan Act, and under production adjustment contracts, will receive not $3.60 a ton but an average of about $6.75 a ton. This will not mean great wealth to the average producer, but it does mean effective, substantial protection—a genuinely fair return for balanced production.

You may be interested in the precise figures for Colorado. Despite the drought, Colorado harvested 176,000 acres of beets in 1934, which compares with 209,000 acres in 1933 and 156,000 in 1932. Contracts were submitted by 11,159 growers, and checks totaling $2,410,517 have been sent out. On the estimated 1934 production of 1,569,000 tons of sugar beets, Colorado growers will receive about $5 a ton from the factories and approximately $1.75 a ton as benefit payments, or a total of $6.75 a ton. Thus Colorado's income from sugar-beet production for the crop of 1934 will approximate $10,570,000. While this is about one and one-half million dollars under the gross income on the 1933 crop of 2,628,000 tons of beets, it is about a fourth higher than the income from the 1932 crop.

I find that sugar-beet income in Colorado has made a better recovery than grain income for the United States as a whole. Comparing 1934 income with the average income for the years 1922–31, Colorado growers last year had a sugar-beet income that was about 60 percent of the 10-year average, whereas grain producers the country over had an income last year of roughly 50 percent, even including benefit payments, of the 10-year average.

Comparable results can be listed for other beet-growing areas. Fortunately, these results have been obtained without any impairment of our relationships to our insular possessions or to Cuba. In fact, by virtue of the provisions of the Jones-Costigan Act, and by virtue of a trade agreement now in effect, our trade with Cuba has shown a gratifying increase.

Agriculture in particular has reason to be interested in some of the results of this trade agreement. The trade agreement went into effect in the fall of 1934. Comparing the 9 months, September–May 1934–35, with the same period a year before, we find our exports of wheat flour up, hams and shoulders up by nearly a million pounds, and lard up nearly 25,000,000 pounds, as compared with 11,000,000 pounds the year before. Industrial exports of automobiles, machinery, and other items have increased proportionately. Though Colorado may not produce either lard or automobiles for export, Colorado's sugar-beet growers have a genuine, if indirect, interest in such exports, for any improvement in our foreign-trade situation is reflected in higher consumer purchasing power in this country for such products as sugar.

So far as the consumer is concerned, it must be frankly admitted that he pays the cost of the protection now possessed by the domestic sugar industry, just as he pays the cost of the protection possessed by any other tariff-protected industry. In the case of sugar, however, the consumer has not had to pay any more under the adjustment program than he paid in the past. The Agricultural Adjustment Act contains a consumer-protection clause which puts a ceiling on price increases through control of production or marketing, the ceiling being the proportion of his dollar the consumer spends for food now as compared with the pre-war years, 1909–14. It would be interesting to see such a ceiling in all tariff schedules.

The responsibilities of sugar-beet growers toward labor, in consideration of benefits obtained under the Jones-Costigan Act, have warranted and received both study and action. The act became law so late in the spring of 1934 that it was not possible to affect labor relations last year. Determination of wage rates, therefore, was left to the usual bargaining between individual producers and laborers. But in order to guard against nonpayment of wages, much complained of by laborers, the adjustment contract provided that the second installment of the benefit payment to producers on the 1934 crop should be conditional on settlement of all bona fide wage claims. Some 2,000 complaints were subsequently acted upon by control committees, and 200 of these are awaiting settlement by the sugar section of the A. A. A. Many other complaints were settled informally.

This year, for the 1935 crop, it has been possible to take further steps to insure satisfactory relationships between producer and laborer. Producers' associations in southern Colorado and in Montana, and numerous associations of laborers, requested a determination of minimum wage rates for the season. Growers' organizations in northern Colorado, Nebraska, and Wyoming reported failure to agree on such rates. Accordingly hearings were held in Colorado, Nebraska, and Montana, and minimum-wage rates were subsequently determined.

The rates have been based on three considerations: The past relationship of wages to income from beets, past relationship of wages to prices of beets, and the past relationship of labor costs to total costs. The rates set are roughly 40 percent higher than those paid in 1933. Though lower than the rates demanded by the laborers, they are in line with purchasing power criteria of the years 1924–26, chosen as the base period for this determination.

In addition to this rate determination, the administration and the growers have taken preliminary steps to eliminate child labor from the beet fields. The adjustment contract specifies that no children under 14 years of age, other than members of the producer's immediate family, may be employed in the beet fields, and that for those between 14 and 16 years of age the working day shall not be longer than 8 hours.

In sugar-beet areas there is likely to be much talk of the value of high tariffs in general and of sugar-beet tariffs in particular. I have already dealt with the way in which a tariff on Cuban sugar amounting to more than 100 percent ad valorem built up insular competition behind the tariff wall to bring the domestic sugar-beet producer to ruin, and how we have used a smaller tariff and a processing tax-benefit payment program to restore a modest prosperity. I wish now to discuss tariffs in general as they affect agriculture in general. There has been much talk along this line because 1934 was the worst drought year in the Nation's history. Drought cut grain production by 2,000,000,000 bushels. It is not surprising, therefore, that there have been imports of feed grains into the United States. For the 11 months ending May 31, 1935, however, they have amounted to less than 3 percent of the drought-created vacuum.

This coming year we shall harvest probably 40,000,000 acres more crops than last year. In spite of very unfavorable weather for corn in May and June, it now appears from July 1 reports that we may harvest in 1935, roughly, one and one-half billion more bushels of grain than last year. This means that with many crops we shall again be faced with a very interesting export problem. This is especially true of wheat and rye. Agriculture as a whole is on an export basis normally to the tune of 50,000,000 acres. As long as this is the case, Colorado cannot build a wall around herself. Neither can the United States. High tariffs by destroying the market for the product of 50,000,000 acres and by increasing the costs of products which Colorado farmers buy have done the Colorado farmer infinitely greater damage than he will ever know. But it happens the tariff is such a sacred thing and has built up so many vested interests that nothing can be done about it suddenly or without careful consideration. Therefore the farmer must have his processing tax and benefit payment as his offset to the havoc wrought by the tariff. In this way we have helped the cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, and sugar farmers to meet an otherwise impossible situation. With ordinary weather in 1936 we will hear nothing about imports of farm products except from politically minded demagogues. There may still be small imports of a few products as a result of a hangover of the drought, but the economic effect will be so slight as to be insignificant. I hope and believe that 1936 will see the last attempt of designing politicians to fool farmers with promises about paper tariffs which never have and never can do him any good.

TRIBUTE TO THE STATE OF CONNECTICUT

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial published in the

New York Sun of Saturday last touching briefly on some aspects of the history of the State of Connecticut.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Sun of July 13, 1935]

LITTLE, BUT OH MY!

Connecticut, as many have observed, is a small State. Its area is less than 5,000 square miles. In extent it ranks forty-sixth among the States; in population, twenty-ninth. Its inhabitants number not so many more than there are residents in the Bronx; just about as many as there are in Detroit. But, like many persons who are under the average height and weight, Connecticut has always had plenty of energy—plenty of initiative, get-up-and-go. It has always been good at starting things.

Connecticut can claim to have written the first democratic constitution, to have founded the first school of law, the first school with really systematic instruction in music, and the American system of agricultural experiment stations. It was among the first to offer higher education to women. There are some who believe that Eli Whitney began modern manufacturing methods that led to mass production in his factory at Whitneyville, Conn., much more than a hundred years ago. True or not, no one can deny that the Connecticut Yankee has had great inventive genius; that modern industry, as well as representative government and education, has found Connecticut's relatively few acres a very fertile soil.

A professor of political economy at Princeton—not a native son of Connecticut—called the Connecticut Constitution "the first conscious and deliberate effort on this continent to establish the democratic principle in control of government * * * the first written and democratic constitution on record." In the course of a quarter of a century Connecticut's first law school, founded at Litchfield in 1784, educated in the law 16 United States Senators, 50 other Members of Congress, 2 Justices of the United States Supreme Court, 10 Governors, 5 Cabinet members, and uncounted judges. Aaron Burr and John C. Calhoun were two of the many brilliant legal minds polished here in the early days of the Republic.

In literature and journalism Hartford takes title to two priorities: the Hartford Wits, said to be the first literary school in the United States, and the Hartford Courant, the oldest newspaper in the country published in the same town with the continuous use of the same name and the unbroken continuity of its publishing corporation.

Connecticut, then, to recapitulate, has very notably started things in politics, education, industry, literature, and journalism, and at her three hundredth birthday party, at its height this summer, deserves a great big hand from her next-door neighbor, New York. It may be said of her again at this time, "She is little * * * but, oh, my!"

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. POPE. I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire was there an amendment pending at the conclusion of the session on Friday?

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands, there was pending at that time the committee amendment, as amended, on page 11, line 6, including soybeans, and so forth, in the bill.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the clerk state the amendment then pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, line 6, after the word "canning", it is proposed to insert the words "soybeans, package bees and queen bees, poultry."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I thought, in order to serve the best interests of desirable parliamentary procedure, that, by unanimous consent, we were to take up, separately and not as a group, each one of the commodities mentioned in the amendment. I am sure such an order was made. At the time I propounded to the then occupant of the chair, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], that question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The parliamentary clerk suggests to the Chair that the same object can be accomplished by moving to strike out. The Chair does not know exactly what the agreement was.

Mr. McNARY. I think I can tell the Chair in a moment. The occupant of the chair at that time was the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. Effort was made to consider all these commodities in a group as one amendment. I made the objection and suggestion that we treat them as separate amendments so that we could take up soy beans, package bees and queen bees, and poultry, each separately, for the particular reason that I knew there would be some objection to poultry remaining in the bill; and if no one else is prepared to do so, I think the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] has an amendment to strike poultry from the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state to the Senator from Oregon that he has recognized the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], who has sent to the desk an amendment proposing to strike the word "poultry" from the committee amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 11, line 7, after the words "queen bees", it is proposed to strike out the word "poultry."

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I offered this amendment in the committee. I offered it because of the request of the poultry growers of my State. I received a telegram from the Idaho State Hatcherymen's Association, signed by the president and secretary, requesting that I support such amendment. I should like to offer this telegram for the RECORD as a part of my remarks to show that fact. It reads:

CALDWELL, IDAHO, June 12, 1935.

Hon. JAMES POPE:

We urge your support that poultry and poultry products be included in marketing agreement section of triple-A amendments.

IDAHO STATE HATCHERYMEN'S ASSOCIATION,
OSCAR DUNLAP, President.
GEORGE LYNCH, Secretary.

I also have the report of the American Farm Bureau which made the statement that the poultrymen throughout the country were in favor of that amendment.

However, I find that many of the poultrymen of my State are now opposed to it, and on July 13 I received a telegram reading as follows:

CALDWELL, IDAHO, July 13, 1935.

Hon. J. P. POPE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Idaho hatcherymen agreed that poultry and eggs be eliminated from A. A. A. Would like to have baby chicks included.

IDAHO STATE HATCHERYMEN'S ASSOCIATION,
OSCAR DUNLAP, President.

I also find that the American Farm Bureau now makes the statement that they are not further interested in the amendment. Therefore, I am moving to amend the committee amendment by striking out the word "poultry."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to concur in the request of my colleague. In support of it, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a number of telegrams on the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the telegrams will be printed in the RECORD.

The telegrams referred to are as follows:

CALDWELL, IDAHO, July 11, 1935.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Understand Senate bill A. A. A. amendments on floor including poultry eggs. Absolutely opposed including poultry eggs under this amendment giving Secretary of Agriculture virtual dictatorship over poultry egg industry. Appreciate your support. Have poultry eggs taken out of this bill.

L. A. MCBRIDE.

TWIN FALLS, IDAHO, July 4, 1935.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.:

Notice Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry have included poultry and eggs, their redraft House bill 8492. Feel this injustice. Our Idaho farmers also should demand there be hearing on bill if poultry and eggs be added. Wiring Senator POPE effort secure hearing. Anything be done this end advise.

H. J. BONIE.

NAMPA, IDAHO, July 11, 1935.

Senator WILLIAM BORAH,
Senator Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

We object to the inclusion of poultry and poultry products and the products of milk in the amendment to the agricultural act, or H. R. 8492, as being detrimental to both the poultry and dairy industries, and especially in this district which is so far from the large markets, and urge that you vote against same.

JENSMA CREAMERY CO.

NAMPA, IDAHO, July 10, 1935.

HON. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

We are not in favor of Senate bill corresponding to H. R. 8492, of the three-A amendment, with reference to poultry and eggs.

NAMPA CREAMERY CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] to the amendment reported by the committee, as amended.

The amendment to the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, as the committee amendment now stands, hops and poultry have been eliminated. The question is now upon agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, did I understand the Chair to say that the question is on the adoption of the amendment, as amended?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. May we have the amendment, as amended, stated so we may know what we are to vote on?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment, as amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment, as amended, is on page 11, lines 6 and 7, and now reads as follows:

Soybeans, package bees, and queen bees.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] a few days ago with respect to queen bees and their progeny, I assumed he was going to move to strike out "package bees and queen bees." If not, I shall move to strike out those words.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will do so. I shall vote with him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 11, lines 6 and 7, it is proposed to strike out the words "package bees and queen bees."

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, before action is taken on that question, as chairman of the committee I wish to make a statement. Different members of the committee saw fit to move to amend the text as it came to us from the House. This particular item has been the object of more or less facetious remarks here on the floor of the Senate. I do not remember who was the proponent of the amendment.

I think at this point it is very well for me to state in reference to the action of the Senate the other day on a roll call refusing to strike out the words "and not including fruits for canning" that every member of the committee heard the discussion, and every member of the committee, as I recall—and a majority were present—voted for the action of the committee in reference to that phraseology.

I was disappointed that the members of the committee who were most responsible for the discussion and inclusion of this phraseology did not come to the defense of it at all on the floor of the Senate. I now submit that the market for canned fruits is the major market in some instances for producers of fruits. By the action of the Senate we have divided the market, one portion, perhaps the major portion of the farmer's product, being unregulated and at the mercy of the canner, while the other portion, embracing fresh fruits, is wholly regulated.

I desire to reemphasize what I have said. Members of the committee heard this matter discussed in detail. All the elements which entered into it were fully discussed before the committee. The members of the committee unanimously voted to incorporate the amendment, and yet when it came here for discussion not a member of the committee, with the exception of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], rose to express his opinion. Of course, the Senate has a right to do as it pleases, but it seems to me the members of the committee should have expressed the fact that, after full discussion, they had consented to the insertion of the language.

As to the question of package bees and queen bees, I do not know anything. I would not handle the things by regulation or otherwise. Someone brought the items before the committee, thinking it would be advisable to regulate them along with other farm products, and I now invite whoever did so to defend the proposal or let the items be stricken from the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I offered the amendment in the committee, as I stated on the floor a few days ago. There is quite a bee industry in some six or eight States, mostly in the South. They are at present operating under marketing agreements. I received telegrams from the representatives of the bee shippers in some six or seven States, pointing out that they are now operating under such agreements, and asking that the bee-shipping industry be included so they might continue under their present program. On the basis of the requests from the chairman of the organization of the bee shippers, a very high-class man who lives in my State, I offered the amendment.

If the people engaged in the business in quite a number of States have requested that they be permitted to remain under the marketing agreement program, I cannot see why Members of the Senate, because of facetious remarks or because they have no direct contact with the bee-shipping industry, should object to granting their request and letting them be included.

In view of their desire to remain under the provisions of the bill purely upon the basis of marketing agreements provided for by the bill, I hope the motion of the Senator from Utah will not prevail.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I again protest that the remarks made by me were not altogether of a facetious nature. They may have assumed that tenor because of the ridiculous proposal to make queen bees a primary agricultural commodity, the production of which is to be controlled by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MALONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator misconceives the object of the amendment. It does not make bees of any sort a basic agricultural commodity. It does not in any manner seek to control production. It only relates to the shipment of bees in interstate commerce.

Mr. GLASS. It makes the produce of queen bees an agricultural commodity.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I beg the Senator's pardon. It merely authorizes the bee shippers to remain under a marketing agreement, not a production agreement, but a sales agreement.

Mr. GLASS. Incidentally and inevitably there will be an effort to control the production of queen bees. A few days ago I received a letter from an intelligent and most estimable lady in Wisconsin, as I recall, telling me how the production of bees might better be controlled; that is, telling me what would be a more feasible plan for birth control of bees than is provided in the pending provision of this particular bill. [Laughter.] I do not precisely recall what her method was. I simply thanked her for the information, and told her that on general principles I thought my queen bees were as much entitled as were any other species of animal to enjoy the "more abundant life" that Professor Tugwell is providing for human beings.

With all due respect to the distinguished Senator from Alabama, I think it makes the bill ridiculous to undertake to let the Secretary of Agriculture control the bee industry of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG subsequently said: Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan will state it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What happened to the amendment in line 6, page 11, involving soybeans? Was that adopted by the Senate? I do not think the Senate ever voted on the committee amendment as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the Senate has not as yet voted on that question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is that being passed over?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, let us have this matter clearly understood. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] asked that each item included in the Senate committee amendment should be voted upon; and, pursuant to that suggestion, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] moved to eliminate poultry. That was acted upon. I ask unanimous consent that the articles enumerated in the amendment may be now voted on separately, so that there will be no confusion. We have eliminated hops. We have eliminated poultry.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is only one left. We can very easily vote on that separately. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. The Senator is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Oregon was made before the present occupant of the chair assumed the chair.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Are we going to return to soybeans for a vote? That is all I wish to know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would seem to the present occupant of the chair that it would be in order now to take action on the committee amendment as amended inserting soybeans.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield for a moment?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; if I have the floor.

Mr. POPE. A few moments ago my motion to strike out the word "poultry", in line 7, page 11, was adopted. My attention has been called to the fact that the words "poultry and its products" appear in line 13, page 16. I now move to strike out the words "poultry and its products", in line 13, page 16, in order to make the bill conform to my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho is agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Now, Mr. President, is the pending question soybeans?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee something about the soybean amendment. I should like to know where it comes from and who asked for it.

Mr. SMITH. We simply transferred what was already in the House bill. If the Senator will look on lines 9 and 10, page 11, he will see the words:

As used in this section, the term "vegetables" includes soybeans.

The committee thought that was rather an indirect way of doing a thing, so we struck out that language and inserted the word "soybeans" where it properly belongs. It seems that the insertion of the word was discussed in the House, and it was inserted. I do not remember, in the committee, any proposal to include this oil-producing industry.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. As a matter of fact, in the committee, no person suggested the inclusion of soybeans. It was merely a correction of the House bill.

Mr. SMITH. The word "soybeans" was in the House text, and we merely clarified the House text by putting soybeans in the category in which it was intended to go.

Mr. VANDENBERG. How can we deal with one oil-producing bean and not deal with them all?

Mr. SMITH. All the others are more or less being dealt with, I presume.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not follow the Senator. He says "all the others are more or less being dealt with, he presumes." [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I presume they are.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is conclusive.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not satisfied with the importance and the necessity of including soybeans. I should like to find out who asked for it—what industry demanded it.

Mr. HATCH. It is in the House bill.

Mr. KING. I know it is in the House bill, but it seems to me we should reject the House provision.

Mr. SMITH. The House committee held extended hearings and considered all these products. They included soybeans in the manner I have indicated; and the Senate committee merely simplified the language by putting soybeans in the proper category. I myself think that if we are going to include the commodities already included—pecans, walnuts, and so forth—the House provision, ratified by the Senate committee, should be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a moment ago I offered an amendment to strike out, in lines 6 and 7, page 11, the words "package bees and queen bees." The same provision is found in the committee amendment in line 12, page 16, in the following words:

Package bees and their products and queen bees and their products.

In order to be consistent, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words I have just read, so as to harmonize with the first amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, line 7, after the word "as", it is proposed to strike out "defined" and insert "included."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, line 8, after the word "act", it is proposed to insert "and standards established thereunder (including refined or partially refined oleoresin)."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I rise merely to obtain information, because I am not clear as to what is meant by the words "and standards established thereunder (including refined or partially refined oleoresin)." I should like some information as to that clause.

Mr. SMITH. This amendment refers to the regulations made under the act defining the standards. The Department already has under general legislation standards as to quality, and so forth.

Mr. KING. This amendment does not amend or modify the regulations or standards which heretofore have prevailed?

Mr. SMITH. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, lines 9 and 10, the committee proposes to strike out:

As used in this section, the term "vegetables" includes soybeans.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the fact that we have soybeans in the bill heretofore without defining it as a vegetable or food or anything else, it seems to me there is no necessity for this amendment.

Mr. HATCH. We are striking out the language.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I think that concludes the particular paragraph which has been under discussion. So that there may be no mistake about the parliamentary situation, I desire information, if the Chair will be kind enough to give it to me, and to state what it is my intention to do subsequently.

We have been acting upon committee amendments which were passed over. We are supposed, I assume, to go through the bill in that regard. I intend to offer certain amendments including certain particular products in this section, numbered "(2)", entitled "Commodities to Which Applicable"; but I assume that those are specific amendments which must be taken up after we shall have concluded the bill in the aspect of taking care of those amendments of the committee which have been passed over. Is that accurate?

Mr. SMITH. That is the understanding of the chairman of the committee. I do not know just what the parliamentary situation is.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wished to make it plain, so that I should not be cut off hereafter in offering amendments to this particular section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that any individual amendments to the House text will be in order after the consideration of committee amendments shall have been concluded.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the statement made by the Senator from California conforms to the rule and the understanding.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from California whether the amendments which he expects to offer, as just indicated, deal with the same subjects, considering milk or wool or mohair as a subject, as those which have been dealt with?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; I intend, for instance, to offer an amendment to the language in line 4, page 11, which was adopted by the House, stricken out by the committee, and reinserted by the Senate, so as to read "fruits for canning other than olives." To that there will be no objection, I know, because the canners do not object to it, so I assume it will be adopted without difficulty.

Then there are a couple of other products as well which I intend to endeavor to include, and I speak of the matter now merely that there may be no mistake about the parliamentary situation, and that I may not be precluded hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, line 7, after the word "which", it is proposed to strike out the words "it is ultimately used or consumed" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "or the purpose for which it is used", so as to read:

"TERMS—MILK AND ITS PRODUCTS

"(5) In the case of milk and its products, orders issued pursuant to this section shall contain one or more of the following terms and conditions, and (except as provided in subsection (7)) no others:

"(A) Classifying milk in accordance with the form in which or the purpose for which it is used, and fixing, or providing a method for fixing, minimum prices for each such use classification which all handlers shall pay, and the time when payments shall be made for milk purchased from producers or associations of producers. Such prices shall be uniform as to all handlers, subject only to adjustments for (1) volume, market, and production differentials customarily applied by the handlers subject to such order, (2) the grade or quality of the milk purchased, and (3) the locations at which delivery of such milk, or any use classification thereof, is made to such handlers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think there will be some amendments, either to this section or to another dealing with milk and its products, and I was wondering whether the amendment just read might not be passed over to be considered when the "milk and its products" amendments are brought up.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is it the desire of the Senator from Utah that we pass over the whole subject matter treating with milk?

Mr. KING. Yes; it seemed to me, in view of the fact that it is spread through various sections, that it might be well to deal with the entire question of milk and its products at one time. I have no objection to dividing it up.

Mr. McNARY. The subject starts on page 12 and continues for several pages consecutively. I wish to know whether it is the desire to pass over the whole matter or only a portion of it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I think the language here merely clarifies the intent. It has nothing to do with the principle of milk control. I think we ought to make progress by accepting or rejecting the committee amendments. This amendment has been passed over, and it is now the province of the Senate to do what it desires to do with the milk provision.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in support of what the Senator from South Carolina has said, let me state that we are laboring under an agreement first to consider committee amendments. We passed over several committee amendments once; now we are reaching them in order, and it is suggested that we pass over certain amendments again. I do not think that is good legislative procedure. Let us take them up and dispose of them. Let us make progress in the disposition of the controverted questions in the bill.

We have before us now, according to the agreement under which the Senate is laboring, the committee amendments. Having passed them over once, I do not see the justification for passing them over again, and if we do so, then when we reach them again someone may suggest that we pass them over a third time, and so on, indefinitely.

Mr. KING and Mr. LEWIS arose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield first to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. No amendment, as I understand, can as yet be offered; for instance, to strike out the words "milk and its products", because they are in the House text; and it seemed to me, in view of the fact that this subject would not be reached until after we dealt with the committee amendments, that we would have to defer until we reach the amendments which deal with milk and its products, and if an amendment prevailed, then we would have to go through the bill again to readjust the amendments which had been offered, and the subject would then be dealt with.

Mr. ROBINSON. Almost the universal practice here is first to consider committee amendments. When committee amendments are reached in the Senate they are subject to amendment, and the proper procedure is, if these amendments in their present form are not acceptable, to consider amendments to them now. I cannot see any advantage to be gained by passing them over every time we reach them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield again to the Senator from Utah; then I will yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. KING. I again invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that if we should agree to insert the words "or the purpose for which it is used", referring to milk, which is quite likely, and later, when we had concluded all the committee amendments, a motion was made to strike out the words "milk and its products", then the amendment which was just being considered would have to be dealt with.

Mr. ROBINSON. The motion would be to strike out the paragraph, which, of course, would be effective if it were agreed to. The pending amendment is simply a perfecting amendment. It uses different language from that which was used in the House text to accomplish substantially the same purpose. If a motion should be made to strike out the words "milk and its products", it would carry practically the whole section. So that I still insist that the correct procedure is to go ahead and dispose of the committee amendments perfecting the text.

I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire merely to point out that those for whom I speak seem to be very much interested in the milk feature of the bill. I ask the Senator from Arkansas, the able leader on this side, what is the reason, if any is advanced, why we cannot vote on this provision, now that we have reached it? What is the objection to voting on it now?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is exactly what I am suggesting and advocating, that we vote on it now. The Senator and I are in entire accord on that proposition. Let us vote on it.

Mr. LEWIS. I heartily agree.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, before a vote is taken I should like to have read at the desk a telegram which I received this morning on the subject of milk from the chairman of the Governors' Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 13, 1935.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
United States Senate:

The committee appointed by the Governors of the States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Maryland meeting in New York City today instructs me to advise you the committee is firmly convinced producer sentiment in the Northeastern States favors regulation of interstate commerce in milk and urges your favorable action.

PETER TEN EYCK,
Chairman Governors' Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 12, line 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 13, line 20, after the word "milk" to strike out "sold" and insert "purchased"; so as to read:

"(B) Providing:

"(i) For the payment to all producers and associations of producers delivering milk to the same handler of uniform prices for all milk delivered by them: Provided, That, except in the case of orders covering milk products only, such provision is approved or favored by at least three-fourths of the producers who, during a representative period determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, have been engaged in the production for market of milk covered in such order or by producers who, during such representative period, have produced at least three-fourths of the volume of such milk produced for market during such period; the approval required hereunder shall be separate and apart from any other approval or disapproval provided for by this section; or

"(ii) for the payment to all producers and associations of producers delivering milk to all handlers of uniform prices for all milk so delivered, irrespective of the uses made of such milk by the individual handler to whom it is delivered; subject, in either case, only to adjustments for (a) volume, market, and production differentials customarily applied by the handlers subject to such order, (b) the grade or quality of the milk delivered, (c) the locations at which delivery of such milk is made, and (d) a further adjustment, equitably to apportion the total value of the milk purchased by any handler, or by all handlers, among producers and associations of producers, on the basis of their production of milk during a representative period of time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 14, after line 15, to strike out:

"(D) In order to accomplish the purposes set forth in paragraph (A) of this subsection (5), providing that all handlers shall pay the price specified in such order for milk utilized for manufacturing purposes for all milk delivered to them by producers who were not, upon the effective date of such order, regularly selling milk for consumption in the area covered thereby, for the period of 90 days from and after the commencement of deliveries by such producers, respectively.

"(E) Providing for the verification of weights, sampling, and testing of, and security for the payment for, milk purchased.

And to insert:

"(D) Providing that, in the case of all milk purchased by handlers from any producer who was not, upon the effective date of such order, regularly selling milk for consumption in the area covered thereby, payments to such producer, for the period beginning with the first regular delivery by such producer and continuing for 3 full calendar months from the first day of the next succeeding month, shall be made at the price for the lowest use classification specified in such order.

"(E) Providing for market information to and the verification of weights, sampling, and testing of milk purchased from producers, and for making appropriate deductions therefor from payments to producers, except as to producers for whom such services are being rendered by a cooperative marketing association, qualified as provided in paragraph (F) of this subsection (5), and assurance of, and security for the payment by handlers for, milk purchased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, while we have agreed to the amendment on page 14, relating to subsections (D) and (E), I think there should be some explanation of that language.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator will read the provisions carefully he will find that they are really a redraft of the House text. I do not know that they change the intent or purpose at all. However, members of the committee who come from the region which would be more vitally affected by the amendment than would my section, I think should give the Senate the benefit of just what is intended by this milk provision. I know that it gave the committee more concern than any other amendment, but both those who have to administer the law and the committee hearing them give an explanation thought the language which the Senate committee included was more apropos to the subject than the House text. It does not change the principle.

Mr. McNARY. Perhaps the Senator from Iowa can give us an explanation.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, does the Senator have reference to subdivision (D)?

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from Oregon asked what was the difference between the language inserted by the Senate committee and that found in the text of the House. There is no material difference.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, having reference to paragraph (D), the purpose sought in the amendment is to create areas governing the marketing of milk, and the handlers purchasing milk in those particular areas are obligated to pay uniform prices for milk.

It has been the custom in some of the eastern markets, where there is heavy consumption, to draw milk from nearby States, and break down the price the local producer is paid. The desire is to give some protection to the price fixed in the local marketing areas. The protection given is in the requirement that the handler buying milk from the persons shipping it from outside the State shall pay the lowest classification-use price for the milk for a period of 90 days, in order to determine whether or not he is a regular producer.

There are regular producers in a given area. Outsiders shipping in irregularly break down the price. To protect the regular producers against a price breakdown, it is provided that the outsider shipping in, if he is a regular shipper, may have access to the market at the same price as the producer in that market. If, however, he is an irregular shipper, taking advantage of the market occasionally, it is sought to subject him to the low classification-use price.

Milk itself, for consumption as such in the home, takes the high-classification price. There is a second classification price comprising cream for use in the manufacture of butter and ice cream. There is a third classification price for evaporated or dried milk. The purpose of paragraph (D) is to determine the good faith of the producer from another State selling his product in a marketing area other than that of his residence, the effect of which is to break down the local price.

If that explanation be adequate, I shall let it stand; if it be not adequate, I shall be glad to give the Senator any further information he may desire.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The up-State distributors of milk in my State feel that the safety of the industry in New York State depends upon the continuation of the fixing of resale prices by any governmental agency controlling the milk industry within the State, and unless the resale prices are fixed there will be a reversion to wholesale price cutting and chiseling. Does this amendment, in the opinion of the Senator from Iowa, guard against that sort of thing?

Mr. MURPHY. No, Mr. President; this amendment does not give the Secretary of Agriculture any power whatsoever to fix a resale price. He has not attempted to do that. My information is that the New York State law fixes the resale price as well as the price to the producer. To make such attempt here would take this bill into a field where the question of consumer protection might be raised. This is a bill primarily for the producer of milk, and the Secretary of Agriculture feels that, for the present at any rate, it should concern itself wholly with the price the producer shall receive. If the Senator from New York wants to advocate a plan whereby the resale price shall be fixed, he is free to do that. It would open up a new field of discussion and debate.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am glad to have the Senator's opinion. I am very much interested in the general subject. The amendment which is before us, however, is not one which I have studied, but there are some other matters which at the appropriate time I wish to present for the consideration of the Senate. I presume the Senator from Iowa has studied this amendment and has accepted it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was called from the Chamber when the Senator from Iowa was discussing this provision insofar as it affects milk and its products. I should like to ask the Senator if his understanding of the provisions of this section is the same as mine, if he will indulge me for that purpose. As I understand, the agreements can be made to apply only to whole milk, and there is nothing in these provisions which would enable marketing agreements to be applied to the products of milk, such as cheese and cream and butter, insofar as they are being shipped from one State into the markets of another. Is that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. MURPHY. That is my understanding.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And, insofar as whole milk is concerned, it is my understanding that the agreements could apply, so far as the shippers of whole milk are concerned, only to those who have not, at the time the orders are issued, been shipping regularly into the given market.

Mr. MURPHY. Precisely.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In such a case, as to those who have not been accustomed to ship into such market, the terms would apply which apply to everyone else within the marketing area. In case an order is issued, however, and a particular shipper of whole milk, who had not been previously shipping into the marketing area, desires then to enter the marketing area, he would for a 3 months' period have to take the lowest price classification for his product, after which time he would obtain the same prices as provided for others who had been regularly shipping in or who were producing within the area. Is that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. MURPHY. The Senator has stated my understanding of the matter.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it the understanding of both the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Wisconsin that the agreements and the orders issued by the Federal Government apply only to milk which is in interstate commerce, and do not under any circumstances apply to milk in intrastate commerce?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My understanding is that the phraseology in the bill—I am not sure that I can turn to it at once—insofar as it defines interstate and intrastate——

Mr. SMITH. It appears on page 10 of the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I have read it in each particular case, if a legal controversy arose, there would have to be an adjudication by the courts to ascertain into which classification the particular shipment in controversy fell. In other words, the court would have to find the fact as to whether or not it actually flowed in interstate commerce or tended to obstruct interstate commerce.

Mr. TYDINGS. In order to bring the example before the Senate in a concrete way, let us suppose milk is produced in a State and sold within that State.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My interpretation would be that that would not fall in the classification of moving in interstate commerce, or flowing in interestate commerce, or directly burdening or obstructing interstate commerce.

Mr. TYDINGS. There are cases where farmers, through their cooperatives, have already created and fixed a price which is satisfactory to them. If that arrangement were set aside, where the transaction is intrastate, it would disorganize all the farm cooperatives dealing in milk, whereas, on the other hand, if it applied only to interstate commerce no harm would be done. In California and in Maryland and in many other States I might mention there are farmers' milk cooperatives. They produce milk in the State and sell it in the State.

Mr. BORAH. This bill could not possibly interfere with them.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should not think so.

Mr. BORAH. If it did, the bill, so far as that is concerned, would have no effect. It is here attempted by language to confine it to interstate commerce, but even if the bill did not so confine it the Court would.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what I think; but my main reason for raising this point again is that, if I interpret correctly the argument on the floor of the Senate in reference to this bill, Senators are assuming that the Federal Government might come into a State and issue an order as to the price a farmer shall receive for his milk, assuming that he produces it and sells it all within the State, and I do not think that argument is sound.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that I do not understand that there is any attempt here to control the intrastate shipment of milk. Where there is a controversy, where a case might approach the border line, then it will be for the Court to determine what are the facts; and, according to the definition found on page 10, the Court will determine whether the particular handling or shipment is within intrastate or interstate commerce. I will say to the Senator that that is my understanding of the situation.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is also my understanding. My reason for wishing to bring out this point is that I hope no attempt will be made by those charged with the administration of this bill to exceed the authority intended to be placed in the administrative officers, because, if there should be such an attempt, it would disorganize the whole price structure, insofar as the milk producer—the farmer—is concerned. It will bring on a disorganization of such producers who through cooperation have agreed upon a price which is satisfactory to them, and I want it distinctly shown in the debate that no Senator on this floor conceives that the milk provisions of the bill give any Federal officer the right to have anything to do with milk which originates in the same State where it is sold.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It seems to me that it must be plain that this language is inserted here to affect the price of milk in intrastate commerce if and when it becomes directly burdensome or obstructs or affects the price of milk in interstate commerce.

Mr. TYDINGS. In my judgment, however, Mr. President, if milk originates in the same State where it is sold, it is intrastate commerce, and the Federal Government has nothing to do with that particuar shipment of milk. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], as well as I, all agreed the other day that this was an interstate provision only, and I do not think that construction can be too greatly accentuated in this discussion, so that the Federal agency charged with administering this provision will not attempt to regulate intrastate shipments, when such shipments are not within the purview of the law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the language on page 10 "as directly burdens, obstructs, or affects interstate or foreign commerce", is purely surplusage. It does not add anything whatever to the power of control by the Congress. It may be, that language having been used, that someone may assume it gives an additional control over intrastate commerce; but the court would have to determine for itself in each particular case whether intrastate commerce did directly affect or directly burden interstate commerce. In other words, the language here, in my opinion, adds nothing whatever to the power of Congress.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa permit one concluding observation?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree completely to what the Senator from Idaho has said. My only reason for restating the proposition is that if the Federal agency charged with the administration of this provision were to serve notice upon a producer of milk that the Federal Government had jurisdiction, the producer might be frightened into the belief that if he did not carry out the Government's order he might be fined or put in jail, or that something else might be done to him; and I want it known by this debate, iterated over and over again, that if the Congress passes this proposed act it is presumed that those who are charged with its administration will not, in the case of an intrastate shipment of milk, attempt to issue Federal orders and thereby cause producers to be put to the expense of hiring lawyers to prove that the Federal Government has no right to do the thing which it is attempted to do.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield in order that I may ask a question of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield to the senior Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to make a suggestion to the Senator from Maryland. Intrastate and interstate milk are so intermingled by many of the marketing associations that a time may come when in a given locality there is a surplus which may burden the market. Therefore if we are going to permit the interpretation to be placed in the proposed act that this provision shall operate only so far as interstate commerce is concerned, the product will be so intermingled under the trade and marketing associations that it will not be known which is which. So it is through this entire bill. It deals with an association which has to do only with a local concern which supplies extra milk through interstate commerce coming in from outside that State. When we read this bill through, I say that no one knows where the authority begins and where it ends.

Mr. BORAH. That is due to a physical fact.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield? If so, I will promise not to interrupt him again.

Mr. MURPHY. Very well.

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say to the Senator from Iowa that even if intrastate milk did become commingled with interstate milk, insofar as the man who produced and sold in the same State is concerned, that would not affect his situation. But here is the point: As we all know, the twilight zone, which the Senator from Wisconsin just described, offers an opportunity for the Federal administrators to issue orders to State shippers and producers of milk where the whole transaction is within a State, which will force them to go to law in order not to be bound in cases by the Federal decree. I want it distinctly understood that it is the sense of the Senate that those in charge of the administration of this provision will have no right to issue orders which will take over the government or control or the price-fixing or any other phase of the milk situation where the milk is produced and where it is sold always within the same State.

Mr. DICKINSON. The very purpose of the "weasel" words to which the Senator from Idaho has just referred is to do the very thing the Senator from Maryland has said should not be done.

Mr. TYDINGS. I quite agee with the Senator, but I wanted it made clear that the Senate does not interpret the provision in that way. Insofar as I know, no Senator upon this floor claims that the Federal Government has anything to do with milk which is produced and which is sold in the same State; and that ought to be the way in which the proposed act will be enforced.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was going to say that it was my intention at some time or other to offer the following amendment:

Provided, That nothing in this act, or the law to which the act is amendatory, shall be construed to include wholly intrastate trade or commerce.

That would make it as plain as the Congress could make it; and if an administrator thereafter did something we fear he may do, it would be something he could not legally do.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as one of the conferees upon the social-securities bill I will be compelled to leave the Chamber within a few minutes, and therefore ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me for a short time.

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. KING. Under the terms of section 8 (c) (1), page 10 of the bill before us, the Secretary of Agriculture is not only authorized but is required to issue orders and "from time to time amend the same", which orders are applicable to processors, associations of producers, and others engaged in the handling of any agricultural commodity or product thereof specified in subsection (2). Among the products referred to are milk, fruits, various kinds of nuts, tobacco, vegetables, and so forth.

The orders referred to are, to all intents and purposes, licenses, and possess the qualities, limitations, and authority of licenses; and the bill provides that then the orders so issued shall contain various terms and conditions which limit or provide methods for the limitation of the total quantity of any such commodity or product, or of any grade, size, or quality thereof, produced during any specified period or periods, and also allot or provide methods for allotting the amount of such commodity or product, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, which each handler may purchase from or handle on behalf of any and all producers thereof, and so forth. Further terms and provisions are also prescribed, among them provisions—

Fixing or providing methods for fixing minimum prices at which any such commodity or product, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, shall be purchased by handlers subject to such order.

There is also a further provision to the effect that the handlers as a group shall purchase or otherwise acquire not less than 50 percent of the total quantity of the commodity or product covered by such order directly from producers or associations of producers.

The amendment which is found in paragraph (G), page 18 of the bill, provides that the orders issued by the Secretary shall contain terms and conditions—

Fixing or providing methods for fixing minimum prices at which any such commodity or product thereof, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, shall be sold by the first handler thereof—

And so forth. In other words, in subdivision (F), as well as subdivision (G), the orders or licenses shall contain provisions for price-fixing, and also shall fix the grade, size, or quality of the commodities referred to.

Mr. President, it was a common practice in ancient times and during the feudal ages, and wherever tyranny and oppressive government existed, for those who were clothed with authority, whether by usurpation or otherwise, to control the economic as well as the political life of the people. The prices of labor and commodities were fixed by autocratic rules and regulations, and the masses of the people were largely hewers of wood and drawers of water.

It took centuries and sanguinary struggles for the people to throw off the yoke of bondage and tyranny and to set up forms of government in which civil, economic, and political liberty were enjoyed. Civilization has advanced in proportion as oppressive rules and regulations imposed by governmental authority have been withdrawn.

The progress of this Republic is in marked contrast to those countries in which the inhabitants were subjected to autocratic rules and to regulations at variance with economic laws and the assertion of individual rights. The Federal Government has set its seal of disapproval upon price-fixing, and enacted antitrust laws to prevent monopoly. The Federal Trade Commission was created for the purpose of protecting the people against all forms of price-fixing and monopolistic control. I believe that every State has enacted laws prohibiting monopolies and restraint of trade and every practice which resulted in price-fixing. The people have recognized the evils growing out of monopolies and trusts and practices in restraint of freedom of trade; and as stated, they have enacted laws to keep open the channels of trade, to prevent unfair practices or fixing of prices, and every form of monopolistic control of industry. Yet, we are confronted with a proposition not only permitting but requiring price fixing and the enforcement of provisions limiting production and providing for innumerable obstacles to legitimate trade in commerce, not only among the States, but in the States themselves.

Mr. President, it seems evident to me that there are movements in some of the executive departments which have as their objective the absolute and unlimited control by the Federal Government of all trade and commerce, and of every transaction, even if confined to the limits of a single State. These movements, which are receiving no little support, contemplate the breaking down of State lines and the control by the Federal Government of substantially all of the activities of the American people.

Undoubtedly these movements have received additional impetus since the decision in the Schechter case, and we may look for a Nation-wide propaganda to increase the power of the Federal Government and to further impinge upon the rights not only of sovereign States but of individuals themselves. The lessons of history are to be ignored. Local self-government is to be regarded as antiquated. The statement is not infrequently made that the American people have been following a laissez faire policy and that they must now abandon the ideas and ideals of the fathers, and the policies which have made this the richest and most powerful Nation in the world, and rush headlong into every form of social experimentation, even though it results in the conferrence of dictatorial powers upon executive agencies and building up of a more powerful bureaucratic system.

For myself, I prefer democratic institutions and the philosophy of Jefferson; and I desire rather to follow in the paths of freedom and liberty than in the highways and byways hedged about and controlled by a powerful federal government and an oppressive and hateful bureaucracy.

The efforts to introduce a price-fixing system into our economic life, to be controlled and directed by the Federal Government, are all too evident; and if they succeed and our economic and industrial life is controlled by a multitude of Federal agencies, the results will hamper our industrial progress, interfere with individual liberty and individual success, and provoke controversies and sectional disturbances.

Mr. President, it is claimed, as I understand, that the authority herein sought to be conferred will be wisely exercised, and that there will be no stretching of the powers of authority herein conferred; that any discretion conferred upon the executive agencies will not be abused. Mr. President, whenever power is sought by governments, or agencies of governments, the claim is made that it will not be abused, that the authority conferred will not be transcended, and that only the welfare of the people will be sought. History is replete with examples of abuse of authority and the gradual encroachment, where discretion was allowed, upon the rights of individuals, as well as of local communities.

Rules and policies which might possess some merit when applied in a small country with a limited population, homogeneous in character, will be ineffective, and, indeed, may work irreparable injury when applied to a country as large as the United States, which possesses so many diversities, geographically, ethnologically, and industrially.

To attempt to apply uniform rules and regulations to the industrial, commercial, and agricultural life and practices of the American people would end in confusion and produce serious maladjustments and injurious consequences. There have been many complaints growing out of the enforcement of the present Agricultural Adjustment Administration law, and I predict that if the bill before us shall be enacted into law there will be a larger volume of complaints and increasing resentment against the Federal Government. As illustrative of the extent to which Federal agencies will assert authority, I called attention a few days ago to the provisions of what I denominated the "code" promulgated by the Department of Agriculture with respect to the milk sales area of Los Angeles, Calif. This code contains from 24 to 26 pages.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator give me the date of that document?

Mr. KING. It was issued by the Secretary of Agriculture February 27, 1935, and was amended upon several occasions since then. This code declares that under section 8 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act as amended the Secretary shall have power—

(3) To issue licenses permitting processors, associations of producers, and others, to engage in the handling, in the current of interstate or foreign commerce, of any agricultural commodity or product thereof, or any competing commodity or product thereof. Such licenses shall be subject to such terms and conditions not in conflict with existing acts of Congress or regulations pursuant thereto, as may be necessary to eliminate unfair practices or charges that prevent or tend to prevent the effectuation of the declared policy and the restoration of normal economic conditions in the marketing of such commodities or products and the financing thereof.

This document further declares that:

Whereas R. G. Tugwell, Acting Secretary of Agriculture, acting under the provisions of said act, for the purposes and within the limitations therein contained, and pursuant to the regulations issued thereunder, has, on the 31st day of May 1934 issued a license for milk—Los Angeles area—which license was subsequently amended on August 21, September 29, and on December 15, 1934.

As I understand, the contention is made by the supporters of this bill that it is now so drawn as to cover interstate dealings, but not intrastate transactions. Mr. President, it is my opinion that in the administration of the A. A. A. Act and the present bill, if it shall be enacted into law, State boundaries will suffer obliteration. I am fortified in that view by the following provision of this remarkable code promulgated by Secretary Wallace and Acting Secretary R. G. Tugwell. Its provisions are as follows:

Whereas the undersigned finds that the marketing, distribution, and handling of milk and the products thereof, covered by this license, are in the current of interstate and/or foreign commerce since the portion thereof which occurs within the bounds of a single State affects and actually and potentially competes with the marketing, distribution, and handling of commodities and products which occur between or among several States, and since the commodity, and the products thereof, covered by this license, cannot be separated into interstate and intrastate portions, the supply and the marketing, distribution, and handling thereof being inextricably commingled, so that it is impossible to regulate the interstate marketing, distribution, and handling without also regulating the intrastate marketing and handling, and the failure to regulate the latter will defeat and obstruct the purposes of the act with respect to the former. * * *

If time permitted I should like to read further from this remarkable document. I invite attention briefly to two or three provisions, one of which declares that "it is necessary to fix prices which distributors will pay", and "it is necessary to classify the prices which distributors shall pay for milk in accordance with the form in which it is ultimately consumed"; "it is also necessary to provide for the equitable distribution among all producers supplying milk to the area referred to."

It further declares that "the licenses which are issued are necessary to establish and maintain prices for milk specified in the licenses." It provides the quantity of milk allotted to each producer and generally governs and controls the production and distribution of the milk within the area and fixes certain prices to be paid for the milk.

There are pages of rules and regulations relating to the duties of the Government agencies and the rights of the Market Administrator, the classification of milk sales and uses, the prices to distributors and conditions of sales, payments to purchasers, the duties of the Advisory Committee; provisions in regard to the books and records and reports, provisions for the deduction of one-half cent per pound butter fat for market administration, such payments to be retained by the Market Administrator to meet his cost of operation, and provisions for deduction of 1 cent per pound butter fat for marketing services.

Later in the discussion I may ask to insert the provisions of this code in the RECORD.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not hold any brief for the Agricultural Department, but in view of the language which the Congress itself used in the Agricultural Adjustment Act when it was passed in the first instance, it is not surprising that the Department should undertake to assume to do many things which they are under censure for doing. I think, though, if the Agricultural Department were dealing with an interstate commodity which was so intermingled with intrastate commerce that it could not be separated, and they could not formulate a line of demarcation, that they would be justified in dealing with the intrastate portion of the commodity just as the Supreme Court held in the railroad case that where the interstate business and the intrastate business were so intermingled and the intrastate portion of it was so much a part of the interstate business that the two could not be separated, the Congress would have a right to that extent to control intrastate business.

Mr. MURPHY. At that point, will the Senator apply the principle just voiced to the condition of the Boston milk market, where 25 percent of the production is intrastate and 75 percent, necessary for the use of the people of Boston, is brought in from outside the State, in interstate commerce? Would he not think under such a condition, the intrastate and the interstate commodities being so completely commingled, that on the ground of the intrastate portion burdening interstate commerce, an order would be justified?

Mr. BORAH. The rule, as I understand, is that the Congress has the right fully and completely to regulate interstate commerce, and if, in exercising that right fully and completely to regulate interstate commerce, it becomes necessary by reason of the intermingling of interstate and intrastate commerce to affect intrastate commerce, it may do so.

As to the physical fact of which the Senator speaks, I am not able to pass upon it; but there is not any doubt that we ought not—even those of us who are very meticulous about protecting State rights—to undertake to curtail the right of the National Government practically to control interstate commerce fully and effectively and to remove all obstacles which interfere with such effective control of interstate commerce. Therefore, if milk is so intermingled and so confused, as it were, one part being such a part of the other that it is impossible to control interstate commerce without affecting intrastate commerce, I think the Congress may act accordingly.

Mr. KING. I do not quite agree with the observation just made by the able Senator from Idaho, but conceding as a legal and technical proposition the conclusions stated by the Senator, we may concede that there may be authority in the Federal Government to do certain things, and yet the exercise of such authority might be very unwise. I concede that the Federal Government has the power to regulate interstate commerce. It may not destroy under the guise of regulation. I think the decisions of the courts have gone too far, but, conceding that the Federal Government has power to deal with interstate commerce, I affirm it as my conviction that in many matters the exercise of that power would be highly disadvantageous to individuals, to communities, to the States, and ultimately to the Nation.

Mr. BORAH. That might be true.

Mr. KING. Therefore, I am always reluctant to confer power upon the Federal Government even where under the Constitution it may in a technical sense possess the right to exercise that power.

In my opinion Congress should examine with the utmost care every measure which limits the power of the States or local communities or individuals. Whenever measures are under consideration to augment the authority of the Federal Government or increase the jurisdiction and power of executive agencies, Congress should require convincing evidence that such legislation is necessary and that in its enactment the rights of sovereign States are not abridged and the freedom of individuals is not impaired. There is a never-ending struggle between the forces upholding democracy, local self-government, individual rights, and those powerful elements whose objective is a centralized government possessing autocratic, if not unlimited powers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, a short time ago we adopted an amendment relating to soybeans. I desire to give notice of my intention to move a reconsideration of the vote on that amendment. I shall merely permit the notice to stand for the present. I do not know whether or not I shall ultimately urge it.

In connection with that notice I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a telegram.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be inserted in the RECORD as follows:

TWIN FALLS, IDAHO, June 26, 1935.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Washington, D. C.:

Marketing-agreement hearing held here last year showed bean growers overwhelmingly opposed to marketing agreements. For this reason bean dealers, southern Idaho, ask that you do all possible kill pending A. A. A. amendments.

WESTERN BEAN DEALERS ASSOCIATION,
JOHN P. KINNEY, President.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. I have a memorandum here and I feel it my duty to present it to the Senate because apparently there are milk producers and distributors in my State who are concerned over these amendments. The bill, according to the memorandum I have, attempts to qualify intrastate commerce so as to subject it to Federal control and seeks to obtain a similar effect cooperatively with the States. The milk sold in upper New York State is purely intrastate in nature. It is believed that under the provisions of the bill the Secretary of Agriculture could well assume that that business directly affects interstate commerce, and that any change in the price of milk in that territory would directly affect evaporated milk which is moved in interstate commerce. Does the Senator from Iowa share this anxiety?

Mr. MURPHY. I do not share the anxiety any more than the anxiety is shared by the conference of Governors being held in New York today. A telegram was submitted a little while ago which was read at the desk. I do not know whether or not the Senator from New York heard it read.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I heard it read.

Mr. MURPHY. I repeat, I do not have any anxiety on that score.

Mr. COPELAND. In up-State New York a great many of the milk handlers are producers and distributors. According to the amendments as they are set up, if I am correctly advised, every one of those who may directly burden, obstruct, or affect interstate commerce would be subject to all the orders promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture. These producers and distributors would be required to make adjustments in payments by being compelled to contribute to the maintenance of an adjustment or equalization fund and to pay their pro rata share of the expenses of the authority or agency which administers the order. Therefore the distributors who have an additional investment in not only producing their own milk but also pasteurizing the milk, which is absolutely necessary under the law, would have to share their position in the market with other producers. Is that correct?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. In up-State New York very few of the smaller distributors maintain adequate records. It would be impossible for them to know the quantity of milk for which they should pay the various class prices. Already under New York State control it has proven very difficult, because of this fact, to enforce State regulations. For these reasons my friends believe it would be practically impossible in up-State New York to enforce any provisions of the A. A. A. amendments as they are set up at the present time. What does the Senator say about that?

Mr. MURPHY. In my view, it is possible to enforce them. There are a great many marketing agreements now in effect. The only place where marketing agreements as to milk are not now in effect are in those markets where the handlers of milk, the processors and distributors of milk, decline to concur in the marketing agreements.

Possibly the producers of no other State have suffered more than have the producers of New York from low prices received by them for milk. Possibly the producers of no other State have made more vigorous efforts than have those of New York State to obtain remunerative prices.

As the Senator well knows, the milk-control board was empowered to and did fix the price of milk to the producer. It also fixed the price of milk to the consumer. As the Senator also knows, decisions of the Federal courts made it impossible to protect New York producers against the surplus milk from other States.

With reference to the records which the Senator says these producers are lacking, it may always be said as to any new program that such a statement is quite true as to every basic commodity covered by the Agricultural Adjustment Act. It was necessary to establish records. It required a great deal of work. There were many heartaches attendant and a great deal of inaccuracy involved. For instance, in the corn-hog program it was necessary to go back and determine what the production of the farmer was in acreage of corn and what was the number of hogs he produced. He had kept no records as such in a very great many instances. Still it was possible to arrive at his past production.

The position of the committee in respect to these amendments is that intrastate commerce may burden or affect interstate commerce and that consequently this is a constitutional enactment under the decision of the Court in the Shreveport case.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. MURPHY. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. In the case of wheat, we took the 5-year average. A lack of records would seem to preclude an absolutely accurate average, but is it not true that in the case of all the basic commodities the approximations arrived at by the Department of Agriculture have proved to be very fair and very just in consideration of the whole program?

Mr. MURPHY. The approximations were arrived at through local committees. There is democratic control, I will say to the Senator from New York, in all these programs; that control is exercised locally in the smallest political unit, and it has been possible to arrive at what represents a reasonable determination of past production.

Mr. COPELAND. I confess that I am distressed over this matter, because, as I go further into the statement made to me, I find it pointed out that during the month of August 1933—2 years ago—the State of New York, as referred to by the Senator from Iowa, made an investigation of the milk industry; and the result of that investigation indicated that the average milk distributor in up-State New York who did keep proper accounts was making a profit of only one-seventh of a cent per quart on all milk handled. Since that time, due to increased cost of production, labor, and materials, certainly the net profit has not increased, but rather has tended to decrease.

Under these amendments my constituents fear that the cost of the authority or the agency which administers the order, being prorated among the various handlers of milk in the market, will still further increase the expense. In the majority of markets where there is at the present time a Federal license the average cost of administration is between 2 and 3 cents per hundred pounds, and is for the benefit of the producers, not the handlers. In up-State New York this additional cost would, for the most part, wipe out the profit of the handlers, and, as they fear, would violate the due-process clause of the fifth amendment.

The amendment which we have before us provides that a cooperative association shall not sell its milk or products to any handlers at prices less than those fixed. In New York State there are a great many cooperatives that sell their milk directly to consumers. There is nothing in the proposed amendments which provides that the cooperative that sells milk and milk products directly to the consumer shall charge itself with the prices fixed. If this condition shall be allowed to exist, it will be a short time only before the entire fluid market in every city will be taken away from the regular handlers of milk who are purchasing their supply directly from the producers, as they will be required to pay the prices set by the order. It is further contended that the cooperatives, in the absence of a set resale price, and with the exemption I have mentioned, would be able to sell milk at a lower figure, and return to their members the net proceeds of their sales, regardless of what they may be.

A conference was held in Syracuse in February 1934, as I remember. The producers did not agree "upon acceptance of the proposed program or upon any other plan of production adjustment" which included a processing tax.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, there is no processing tax in this provision. Furthermore, in the case of the particular producers to whom the Senator refers, there is not any obligation upon them to come in under this provision at all. They are free to stay out. If they do not wish to come in and have their condition bettered, and a proper price paid them for their milk, this is a matter of their election. It will not be imposed upon them.

I will make this reservation to that statement. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] the other day offered an amendment with which I am in sympathy practically in its entirety. He pointed out that the powers here given the Secretary of Agriculture authorize him to issue an order on the petition of 50 percent of the handlers. The Senator from Virginia contended, and rightly, that that shut the producers out of a voice in the agreement. I will say now that I am prepared to accept, and I think the chairman of the committee is prepared to accept, an amendment which will require producer consent as to that. The percentage fixed is two-thirds.

Mr. COPELAND. Would the Senator also be willing to accept an amendment on page 13 striking out the language from lines 10 to 14, inclusive?

Mr. MURPHY. That provides for the pooling of milk.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. No; I should not want to deprive the Secretary of Agriculture of the alternatives erected in the bill. He has three conditions to deal with, and his desire is to seek to deal fairly with the producers without discrimination in favor of one to the prejudice of another. Since we are seeking to promote the welfare of the farmer, the welfare of the producer, I do not see why we should manacle the Secretary and keep him from having any alternatives in the means to be employed to attain the objective. This is one means which is offered, and it is a vital means. Another means is offered, and it is a necessary option to include here. I do not see why we should strike out the provision enabling the producers to pool their milk, if that is their election, and to take prices for the milk which represent the use classifications to which it is put.

Mr. COPELAND. What has the Senator to say to the suggestion that in a number of communities in up-State New York there is not a sufficient supply of milk surrounding the market to take care of the demand; therefore, milk must be brought into the market from more distant points? The provisions of the equalization which we are now discussing provide that a producer who is producing his milk on farms near to cities would receive the same price for his product as a farmer who produces his milk, say, 40 or 50 miles away from the same community.

Mr. MURPHY. If they were embraced in the same marketing area, that would be true. Let us keep in mind what the situation is. There is a deficiency of consumer demand. There is a surplus of milk. The price is greatly depressed, and has been for 5 years. The only way in which one can determine how each one of the producers included in the plan provided here shall bear his share of the cost of effecting a higher price is to divide the milk by classification uses.

Mr BYRD. Mr. President, a little while ago the Senator stated that the producer could exercise his own choice as to going into these marketing agreements or staying out of them. I doubt whether that statement is quite correct, because if a producer handles his own milk he becomes a handler, and therefore is subject to all the rules and regulations affecting handlers.

Mr. MURPHY. The point that the producer and the handler cannot be regulated at the same time is well taken. But the producer who is also a handler is not denied a voice. He can vote as a producer.

Mr. BYRD. He can vote; but once the marketing agreements are established, he is subject to the marketing agreements as a seller of milk.

Mr. MURPHY. Precisely.

Mr. BYRD. Therefore, as a producer, he is being regulated possibly without his consent.

Mr. MURPHY. Well, he has voted on the question. We provide for a two-thirds majority rule. How much more majority do Senators want? Suppose 66⅔ percent of the producers are in favor of this plan, and one-third are not in favor of it; who should be our guide?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is assuming that the amendment I have offered will be adopted. Under the bill as it stands at the present time, 50 percent of the handlers may impose licenses on the producers.

Mr. MURPHY. I have already indicated to the Senator from Virginia my agreement with his amendment, and I will give him whatever assurance I can that his amendment will be incorporated in the bill to that extent—not, however, the final extent of the amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to say a little more about this matter.

Mr. MURPHY. May I proceed a little further in respect to this subject?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. MURPHY. Obviously, it would present a great many administrative difficulties.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think the Senator has quite stated all the conditions. He does not take into consideration the difference in the cost of production. Taxes and values of property near the city are very much higher than in the case of property farther away from the city. The transportation differential does not compensate for the difference in cost, as I see it.

Mr. MURPHY. If the Senator will refer to page 12, line 13, he will see that there is this qualification:

> Such prices shall be uniform as to all handlers, subject only to adjustments for (1) volume, market, and production differentials customarily applied by the handlers subject to such order—

They adopt the present practice of business—

> (2) the grade or quality of the milk purchased, and (3) the locations at which delivery of such milk, or any use classification thereof, is made to such handlers.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will bear with me just a moment more, and then I will desist. In up-State New York there is a situation which is vastly different than the one in New York City proper. There is a certain association of upward of 800 milk dealers. These distributors, in the main, purchase their supply from individual farmers. To form a pool for the whole of New York State, to say nothing of a part of New Jersey and perhaps part of Vermont and part of Pennsylvania, would be to have a pool in which the accounts of several thousand distributors would be involved. In my State alone there would be 3,300. There would be upward of 100,000 producers involved. It would mean that to carry out this proposal there would have to be enforced collections from the many distributors scattered throughout a very large territory. Payment would have to be passed to the producers through the same area and to other thousands of scattered producers. If any appreciable number of the dealers in this large area failed to make their payments, it would throw the whole plan into disorder.

Then certainly the up-State distributors would have an unwieldy, unworkable plan. With the great territory involved, it would be bound to be so, as I view it. I fear that the bill will not tend to improve the milk industry in up-State New York, but, on the other hand, will tend to hamper it and place it in a state of chaos, a state of chaos greater even than that which existed before the formation of the State Milk Control Board. That is the reason why the people of my State are eager to have these amendments defeated.

Mr. MURPHY. The Senator's constituents, in the circumstances recited, may market individually. I have no thought that the Secretary of Agriculture would declare the entire State of New York in one region, subject to one order. Very likely the conditions being as the Senator has stated, he would establish another region in up-State New York, if the producers desired it. They can come under the first provision, in line 20.

Mr. COPELAND. The trouble is, the Senator from Iowa is not administering the law.

Mr. MURPHY. The Secretary of Agriculture, like myself, is from Iowa, and, so, whatever virtue is resident in the State, he has also.

Mr. COPELAND. The people of my State who are interested in the subject are asking that lines 10 to 14 on page 13 be stricken out, and that the language from line 19, near the bottom of the page, to the end of line 5, on the next page, be stricken from the bill, and an addition made on page 19, line 18. Provision is made here for the appointment or selection by the Secretary of Agriculture, or a method for the appointment or selection of an agency or agencies. The people of New York are not anxious to have some one cooperative out of many selected for that agency. Would the Senator be willing to insert after the word "agencies", in line 18, in parenthesis the words "which in the case of milk shall be a market administrator"?

Mr. MURPHY. I am perfectly willing to accept an amendment to insert the word "administrator." Would that cover it? I have had the same thought in mind.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator think that one word would be sufficient?

Mr. MURPHY. If it should not be, I would be very glad to consider the Senator's amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. It has been suggested to me that this language be added after the word "agencies" in line 18, in parentheses, "which in the case of milk shall be a market administrator." Of course, I am not particular as to the language, but the idea should be inserted in some way in order to make clear exactly what is meant.

Mr. MURPHY. The Department will have no objection to any language the Senator may see fit to move to insert there to give him assurance that independent producers in New York not associated with cooperatives shall not have the door shut against the possibility of an administrator who is not a member of a cooperative, or shall have an administrator who will seek to serve only the cooperatives, and close his ears to others.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator make a note in his bill so that when we come to that point that will be added? It is on page 19, line 18, after the word "agencies", to add the words in parentheses "which in the case of milk shall be a market administrator." Has the Senator made a note of that?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes; I have.

Mr. COPELAND. Now I wish to refer to another matter. A moment ago the Senator referred to two-thirds of the producers making certain agreements, having reference to page 22. Would the Senator be willing to change that to three-fourths?

Mr. MURPHY. When two-thirds of the producers are required to an agreement, why seem to impose a limitation of 75 percent?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator has used the proportion of three-fourths in the bill.

Mr. MURPHY. I think it is practically unanimous when it is two-thirds.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator has used three-fourths somewhere else.

Mr. MURPHY. I do not at the moment recall where we have used it. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] used two-thirds in his amendment, I believe.

Mr. BYRD. No; my amendment provided for three-fourths.

Mr. MURPHY. I submit to the Senator from Virginia that on line 7 his amendment reads "by at least two-thirds of the producers."

Mr. BYRD. I have several amendments. On page 22 there is an amendment which provides for 75 percent.

Mr. MURPHY. This is with reference to page 21, line 2.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me call the attention of the Senator to page 13, line 5, where reference is made to "three-fourths of the volume of such milk." He has used that proportion. Why not make it uniform, and make it three-fourths on page 22, line 14 and line 25? The Senator is in a yielding and agreeable mood this afternoon. Will he make that change?

Mr. MURPHY. That is in the pool provision. Three-fourths is required in that instance.

Mr. COPELAND. Let us have it uniform. The Senator says there is no difference between two-thirds and three-fourths, so let us have it three-fourths. Does the Senator agree to that?

Mr. MURPHY. Inasmuch as three-fourths is elsewhere used, I will agree to an amendment to that effect.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. That is three-fourths, on line 14 and line 25, page 22.

What does the Senator say about an amendment on page 13, to strike out lines 10 to 14, inclusive? Have I made sufficient argument to the Senator to justify such an amendment?

Mr. MURPHY. No; the Senator from Iowa will not assent to the elimination of that provision from the bill, because we might just as well tear up the whole milk provision in the bill as to assent to the elimination of that paragraph.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator feel the same way about the language in line 19, beginning with subdivision (d)?

Mr. COPELAND. Page 13, line 19, to strike out subdivision (d).

Mr. MURPHY. The Senator seeks to nullify the provision itself, failing to eliminate paragraph (ii). Striking out subsection (d) would hamper and impair paragraph (ii).

Mr. COPELAND. Then I take it the Senator has yielded all he can yield to me?

Mr. MURPHY. I feel that I have.

Mr. COPELAND. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from New York while other Senators are in a yielding mood.

I have an amendment proposing to strike out all the provisions in the bill with reference to price fixing, so far as related to milk and its products. Is the Senator from Iowa obliging enough to yield to that?

Mr. MURPHY. I regret that I cannot yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I will hand the Senator a copy of the amendment, which I shall call up at the proper parliamentary stage. It is requested by the dairy industry committee of my State.

Mr. MURPHY. I am frank to say to the Senator from Oklahoma that if the price fixing were coupled with adjustment of production, I should be sympathetic with his proposal; but it is not. There is no repression of the production of milk whatsoever.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, there may not be a direct repression of the production, as the Senator suggests, but there certainly is indirect repression and control, because, as I recall, the Secretary is given the power to limit the area and the quantity of which producers can dispose.

Mr. MURPHY. No; if the Senator will permit me, I do not know that any such authority is given the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GORE. That is the way I interpret it in the bill.

Mr. MURPHY. Not in the case of milk. What the Senator says is true as to other commodities, but as to milk it is not true, as I understand.

Mr. GORE. I am glad to know that milk escapes that provision. I recall now that there is an exception in respect to milk, section G, page 16.

Mr. MURPHY. Yes; the cow may give just as much milk as she formerly gave, and there will be no protest.

Mr. GORE. I will bring the matter up at a later stage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 16, line 11, after the word "products", it is proposed to insert the words "soybeans and their products" and a comma, so as to read:

"TERMS—OTHER COMMODITIES

"(6) In the case of fruits (including pecans and walnuts but not including apples) and their products, tobacco and its products, vegetables (not including vegetables for canning) and their products, soybeans and their products—

And so forth.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I understood that the word "soybeans", where it appears on page 11, line 6, was stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the word "soybeans" was not stricken out.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I feel that "soybeans" should have been stricken out. As I am going to move to reconsider the action upon soybeans taken this morning, I ask that the amendment which has just been stated go over, because the two provisions are directly connected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator now make the motion to reconsider?

Mr. BORAH. No; I have entered a motion to reconsider, and whatever action may be taken on the motion should include soybeans on page 16, line 11. I ask that the particular amendment now pending be passed over until we come to a consideration of my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator refers to soybeans?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; just to soybeans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 16, line 14, after the word "as", to strike out "defined" and insert "included"; and in the same line, after the word "Act", to insert "and standards established thereunder (including refined or partially refined oleoresin)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 18, line 16, after the word "the", to strike out "first", and in line 17, after the word "such", to strike out "first", so as to read:

"(F) Fixing, or providing methods for fixing, minimum prices at which any such commodity or product, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, shall be purchased by the handlers subject to such order: Provided, That such handlers, as a group, purchase or otherwise acquire not less than 50 percent of the total quantity of the commodity or product covered by such order directly from producers or associations of producers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 18, after line 20, to insert:

"(G) Fixing, or providing methods for fixing, minimum prices at which any such commodity or product thereof, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, shall be sold by the first handler thereof: Provided, That no such minimum prices shall be fixed, unless not less than 50 percent of the volume of such commodity or product is sold by an association or associations of producers, or otherwise for the account of producers, and/or by producers who are also handlers.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like the chairman to explain that provision.

It was evidently the intent of the committee to fix prices on perishable foods and vegetables. Under paragraph (F) prices can be fixed as to the purchase by the handlers from the producers; and then under paragraph (G) the price would be fixed at which the handlers may resell the product. I regard the provisions as conflicting, as not workable, and as bringing about confusion.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, that provision was discussed by the committee, and it was inserted in the bill in order to take care of the resale price where certain producers fixed the price at which they sold. The language is:

"(G) Fixing, or providing methods for fixing, minimum prices at which any such commodity or product thereof, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, shall be sold by the first handler thereof: Provided, That no such minimum prices shall be fixed, unless not less than 50 percent of the volume of such commodity or product is sold by an association or associations of producers, or otherwise for the account of producers, and/or by producers who are also handlers.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator from South Carolina think any dealer would purchase a particular commodity and then later have the producer fix the price at which he could sell that commodity?

Mr. SMITH. The purpose of this provision is to fix the price at which the producer is willing to enter into an agreement with the first handler, so as to make the price uniform.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, paragraph (G) provides for fixing the price at which the particular commodity shall be sold by the first handler.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; that is the point.

Mr. BYRD. I ask the Senator from South Carolina, as a matter of common sense and practical business—and I know he is efficient in such matters—whether any dealer would be willing to buy a certain commodity and then have the producer tell him at what price he could resell that commodity?

Mr. SMITH. The provision has for its object the protection of the resale price through the producer himself, who becomes a salesman.

Mr. BYRD. It does not so provide.

Mr. SMITH. That is the object of it. That is what the provision is for.

Mr. BYRD. I shall have to oppose that committee amendment. Price fixing is something which, though tried time and time again, never has been successful. England tried to fix the price on rubber. Brazil tried to fix the price on coffee. It has been tried in a number of other instances. The price of a perishable food, which varies in value from day to day, because of its perishable nature, as those who have shipped such products know, is determined by its condition.

Take peaches, for example. One can ship some hard peaches which may be small, but they will bring a good price on the market. Then one can ship some large peaches which are soft, and they will not sell for the freight charges on them. The attempt to write into these marketing agreements the price at which the article can be first purchased, and then, further, the attempt to fix the price at which it can be resold, seems to me to be an absurdity; and if it is done, it will be absolutely unworkable.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will allow me, no one should know better than the Senator from Virginia himself that the object of this amendment is to keep the handler from doing as he has done from time immemorial, especially with respect to perishable products, namely, getting any price he sees fit, at any time, anywhere, and under any conditions, regardless of the interest of the producer. The Senator knows that unless there is some kind of an agreement among the producers, aided by the Government, to arrange some kind of a price by which they can protect themselves, the producers will, because of the perishable nature of the product, be unable to dispose of the product at a profit.

Mr. BYRD. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Suppose a certain price were fixed on beans, and the consuming public would not pay that price; then what would be done with the beans?

Mr. SMITH. I take it for granted that the producers, now being organized and having an agency of the Government to aid them, would find at what price the beans could be sold; and if it became evident that the public did not want them at a price which would remunerate the grower, it would be a question of ceasing to produce beans.

Mr. BYRD. Does not the Senator understand, though, that the condition of perishable foods changes from day to day?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. By the time one came back to Washington and went through all the different processes whereby he would find out who was going to fix the price, the beans would have been thrown into the garbage can.

Mr. SMITH. No; the Senator misunderstands the whole process. There will be an understanding before there is any shipment to market.

Mr. BYRD. I understand that; but suppose the price is fixed before shipment to market and the market will not pay that price; it will be a week or 2 weeks before the price can be changed by the method which has been fixed in the bill.

Mr. SMITH. I take it for granted that the price fixed would represent nothing more nor less than a reasonable return to the producer.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is assuming, in the Department of Agriculture, an ability which has never been possessed by any person or organization in the history of the world, if he assumes that the Department of Agriculture can determine at what price perishable products shall be sold.

Mr. SMITH. It has been possessed from time immemorial by the purchasers.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is mistaken. The purchasers frequently make purchases of perishable foods on which they have great losses.

Mr. SMITH. That is only an exception. I have proof in my possession that a carload of watermelons was shipped to New York, and the growers not only did not get enough for them to pay the freight charges, but they had to pay the purchasers a bonus to take them. I also know of an instance concerning artichokes right at my own door, where there had been a contract prior to the production of the artichokes to buy them at $5 a barrel, and the expenses to the grower were $4.90.

Mr. BYRD. Why does not the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, who is giving such attention to this matter, advocate price-fixing for the nonperishables? Why not fix the price for wheat? Why not fix the price for corn? It would work much better, if it would work at all, than to fix the prices for perishable foods.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not know that the time will not come—it ought to come—when the producer will fix his minimum price. Why should he not do so? Who fixes the prices of the shoes we buy? Who fixes the prices of the clothes we wear? Who fixes the uniform price of the shirt I have on? In spite of the absurd fluctuations in cotton from day to day, the price of the shirt remains stable throughout a year.

Mr. BYRD. Has it remained stable?

Mr. SMITH. It has remained approximately stable, as the Senator knows. I have to pay $2.50 for 5 ounces of material to go on my back. The shirtmaker gets about $9 a pound in the form of shirts to wear, and 9 cents a pound goes to the man who produces the cotton. The manufacturer of shoes gets $12 for a pound and a half of cow-skin to go on a man's foot in the form of shoes, and it takes about 48 hours to make a shoe.

Mr. BYRD. Will the Senator from South Carolina cite one instance in the history of the world where price fixing has succeeded?

Mr. SMITH. Not when it comes to the farmer; no. That is simply because he was unorganized, and nobody in good faith ever stood by him. He has fed and clothed and shod the world from time immemorial, and he is the most notoriously poor individual in all our organized society.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator thinks the problem of the farmer can be solved by price fixing, I suggest to him that he do so by fixing the prices of all farm products.

Mr. SMITH. Let us start with the products we are now discussing.

Mr. BYRD. Let the Senator provide for fixing prices of all farm products instead of picking out perishable foods, which are the least possible to control by price fixing.

Mr. SMITH. I think they are the ones which should be regulated, because they quickly pass out of existence by perishing.

Mr. BYRD. They perish; but who pays the freight on them? The Senator just mentioned the case of the freight on a carload of watermelons.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; but if I can get a provision in the bill by which a majority of those who produce the products can indicate that a certain price is agreeable to them, I think they ought to have that right, and they should have the support of every loyal American citizen who knows the condition of the farmer.

Mr. BYRD. This amendment actually proposes to fix the price at which the first handler can resell a commodity he has purchased; and presumably it will be fixed after he has made the sale. I ask the Senator, what purchaser of an agricultural product of any kind would buy it and then later on have the producer tell him at what price he could resell it?

Mr. SMITH. If he is foolish enough to sell the thing before he buys it——

Mr. BYRD. I am not speaking about selling it before he buys it, but this provision says that the price can be fixed, not necessarily before he makes the purchase.

Mr. SMITH. How could he make the purchase unless the price was fixed?

Mr. BYRD. I am speaking of the price at which the handler resells what he has bought from the producer. That is what this provision affects.

Mr. SMITH. It is to take care of the producer who himself becomes the salesman.

Mr. BYRD. It does not take care of the producer who himself becomes the salesman. It applies to any handler in any field included in the title of the bill, and it provides that if a handler buys vegetables or fruit, then the producers can say at what price they will be resold to the public. I submit that that is simply an absurd condition; that is absolutely unworkable and will bring discredit and confusion upon this bill, if it be included in it.

Mr. SMITH. I do not think, Mr. President, that that necessarily will work any hardship, because, whatever the resale price may be, there must be taken into consideration the price at which the commodity was purchased. The object of this whole section is to protect the producer himself in getting a reasonable return for the commodity which he sells. If we do not control the resale price, someone, in order to break down the whole market, may lower the price to a point where he would suffer a loss in order to create demoralization.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator has overlooked the most fundamental condition that exists in the country, namely, the law of supply and demand. He thinks that we can legislate here on what the price of beans, for instance, will be next year.

Mr. SMITH. No, Mr. President.

Mr. BYRD. The fact is that those who buy beans and other perishable foods, where there is competition between them, will unquestionably fix the price before their purchase.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; but the Senator overlooks another natural law, which is as irrevocable as is the law of supply and demand, namely, the law of least resistance. The man who has suffered from that law from time immemorial is the producer, the farmer. We may talk about the law of supply and demand as much as we please, but the law of the line of least resistance is as powerful as is the law of supply and demand, and the farmer is the man who can offer no resistance. Whenever there is sales resistance as to any article, the man who is attempting to sell it recoups by deducting from the price paid the producer. That is as ancient as farming itself. The Senator from Virginia knows, as I know, that even the processors of meat, whenever there is sales resistance because of the price of their product, do not curtail dividends and do not reduce salaries, but simply reduce the price of the cattle and hogs which they purchase, until they have reduced that price to a point where the farmers are under mortgage.

Mr. BYRD. Why does not the Senator attempt to fix the price of meat in this bill?

Mr. SMITH. Because we are now dealing with vegetables; but I state unhesitatingly that wherever the processor has a right to fix the sales price, including all overhead and all expenses, and then fixes the price to the public accordingly, the man who furnishes the raw material ought to have an organization and a resource to fix the price of the commodity which he sells. The shoe manufacturer fixes his price and governs his product accordingly; the manufacturer of cloth fixes his price, he takes into account all the overhead necessary for its production; but when it comes to the farmer, who ever heard of a farmer fixing his price on anything? When did the Senator from Virginia ever hear of it? When did he ever hear of a farmer in America fixing the price of any of the commodities he produces and sells, except sometimes locally on a dozen eggs or perhaps a rabbit? [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair admonishes the occupants of the galleries that they are here as guests of the Senate and any demonstrations of approval or disapproval or amusement are strictly prohibited by the rules.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from Virginia knows that never, in the history of organized commerce, has a farmer ever fixed the price for any commodity. He has an inferiority complex, and will say, "What will you give me for this?" And whatever is offered, that ends it; and yet he will turn right around and ask the purchaser of his products "What will you take for what you have to sell?"

The Senator knows that in this day of education and transportation and communication it is time for us, as legislators, to do all in our power that is fair and legitimate to secure a reasonable return for the man who clothes and feeds and shoes us.

I am surprised that the Senator from Virginia should make such a point of this provision. There is enough room in this bill otherwise for real difference of opinion; but, my God, when we come to the question of trying to fix a reasonable price for the poor devil out in the field, let us—well, I do not want to get started along that line. We have voted $5,000,000,000 with which to do what? Nobody knows. I stood in this Chamber and asked for $100,000,000 to enable the distressed and mortgage-ridden farmers of America to borrow sufficient to enable them to remain on the farm and make a crop—just a hundred million dollars; not to give it to them but to lend it to them and take a mortgage on their crops. Senators stood here and chiseled and argued until the amount was cut down to $60,000,000 for all the farmers in America, while we poured out billions in the form of relief to the rag-tag and bobtail and the ne'er-do-well, who, God knows, are never going to pay a nickel back. And those farmers to whom we loaned the money have paid back 90 percent, in spite of the low prices and the disastrous conditions under which they have had to produce. Now, we have before us a bill which says to them "All of you get together and discuss it, and whatever 50 or 60 or 75 percent of you agree on we will undertake to carry out, so far as interstate commerce is concerned; and if you can get your State to agree, we will dovetail the Federal activities with those of your State and see if we cannot put up a little resistance."

The line of least resistance! What has the law of supply and demand got to do with a disorganized crop? It does not make any difference whether the farmer produces little or whether he produces much so long as the other fellow fixes the price; the law of supply and demand has nothing to do with it, but the law of least resistance has much to do with it. If the farmer makes a big crop he obtains a low price, and if he makes a small crop he secures little return. So far as the farmer is concerned, it is like what has been said about the doctrine of predestination. "I can and I can't; I will and I won't; I will be damned if I do and I will be damned if I don't." [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of attention to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina. He says the law of supply and demand has nothing to do with the price of food products, but the line of least resistance has much to do with it. That is a new theory.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not wish to be too radical in my statements. I think the law of supply and demand has a little to do with it, but I know, from bitter experience as a farmer, that the line of least resistance has all to do with it; and the Senator also knows it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I think it is absolutely unworkable and impracticable to try to fix the prices of perishable foods or of any foods. I do not yield to any man in this Chamber in my desire to help the farmer. I think I may claim to be a farmer; I have been in the farming business for 30 years; I know something about shipping perishable foods; and I say there is nothing more sensitive to the law of supply and demand than are perishable foods. Let me tell the Senator from South Carolina something about that phase of the question. One can ship a hundred carloads of peaches to New York City in 1 day and secure a small price for the peaches; he can ship 50 carloads the next day and obtain a large price. That is the law of supply and demand.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRD. Wait a moment until I finish. The condition of those peaches determines their value. The grade of the peach—and I use peaches as an illustration because I happen to be familiar with the peaches which are a perishable product—does not determine its value; it is the condition of the peach, whether it is hard or whether it is soft, which determines the value. This provision proposes to fix prices at which the handlers will resell the products they have purchased from the producer, and the handlers under another provision of the bill are to be fined $500 a day if they violate any provisions of these marketing agreements. Suppose, for example, a producer shipped a carload of peaches to New York, and due to the condition of those peaches, according to the kind and variety—grade and condition are very different things, as the Senator knows—suppose they became soft because of abnormally hot weather, then, under this bill, the handler would have to pay a fine if he sold such peaches for a price less than that fixed.

Mr. SMITH. I hope the Senator will read line 23, where it says "grade, size, or quality." Of course, nobody is going to be simple enough to say that if a carload of spoiled peaches were sold for less than the price of sound peaches the handler would be subject to the law.

Mr. BYRD. The peaches may not be entirely spoiled, but only slightly soft.

Mr. SMITH. Even if the quality did not justify the price fixed under the law, I presume those administering the law would exercise common sense?

Mr. BYRD. Have the departments of this Government always exercised common sense, in the judgment of the Senator?

Mr. SMITH. I do not like the Senator to ask me any leading questions.

Mr. BYRD. I have heard the Senator himself time and again denounce the officials of the Department in Washington.

Mr. SMITH. Well, the Senator from South Carolina has not changed his mind up to the present time.

Mr. BYRD. Then why does the Senator state that they will exercise common sense?

Mr. SMITH. Because we are exercising it in the law and putting the burden on them to do so.

Mr. BYRD. We shall not be exercising it if we try to fix the price on perishable foods.

Mr. SMITH. That would be a very common-sense thing in connection with the farmer.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Has it occurred to the Senator from Virginia that paragraph (G) may have been inserted in the bill for the benefit of the handlers? Paragraph (F) of the bill to which the Senator has referred provides that the purchase price of the handler shall be fixed. Paragraph (G) provides that the sale price may be fixed.

Mr. BYRD. The reason why I am discussing paragraph (G) is because it is the only section in order at this time for amendment. It is the committee amendment, while paragraph (F) is a part of the House bill and not now subject to amendment. My intention is to move now to strike out paragraph (G) and later, when it shall be in order, to move to strike out paragraph (F). I do not believe in any price-fixing at all.

Mr. HATCH. If paragraph (G) should be stricken out, it would leave the bill in bad shape, would it not? In other words, if we should have paragraph (G) we should also have paragraph (F).

Mr. BYRD. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. They both go together.

Mr. BYRD. I should like to ask unanimous consent to consider them together in order that I may move to strike them both out at the same time.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICE (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. Paragraph (G) to which the Senator refers covers the point which he has been discussing but refers only to resale by handlers. I desire to call his attention to the proviso in paragraph (G), which reads:

> That no such minimum price shall be fixed, unless not less than 50 percent of the volume of such commodity or product is sold by an association or association of producers, or otherwise for the account of producers, and/or by producers who are also handlers.

So that the paragraph, it seems to me, clearly applies only where producers are handlers to the extent of at least 50 percent of the commodity.

Mr. BYRD. But it says "or otherwise for the account of producers." That means if a certain commodity should be consigned to commission merchants——

Mr. McGILL. Where the producers are actually the handlers.

Mr. BYRD. I fully understand it. It provides for any commodity when not less than 50 percent of the volume of such commodity is sold by an association or association of producers "or otherwise for the account of producers or by producers who are handlers." Many of these commodities are consigned to commission merchants and sold for their account in this country and abroad. That would probably apply to a great many fruits and vegetables which are included in the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it occurs to me the Senator from Virginia has raised a very serious question. As suggested a moment ago, if paragraph (G) should be eliminated the bill would be in bad shape if then paragraph (F) should be left in the bill. I understand the Senator to ask unanimous consent that both sections be considered together. I am of the opinion that such consent should be granted and that they should be considered together rather than to have arise a situation similar to that which arose the other day with relation to canned fruits.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I think we had better either reject or adopt the Senate committee amendment and then when we have finished them any Senator can move to strike out paragraph (F) or he can move still further to amend the bill as he desires. I think we would make better progress to take the action first on the committee amendments and then take up in order any amendments from the floor. I shall insist that we have a vote on the amendments which have been passed over and then any Senator may make such other efforts to amend as he may see fit.

Mr. BYRD. The two provisions are closely related. I should want paragraph (G) to remain in the bill in the event paragraph (F) remains in the bill, because paragraph (G) gives some voice to the producers. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will not insist upon his opposition to my request.

Mr. SMITH. I think if the Senate adopts paragraph (G) and later on a motion is made to strike out paragraphs (F) and (G) it would be within the right of any Senator so to move.

Mr. BYRD. As I understand the parliamentary situation it is that the question now before the Senate is the committee amendment. If it is now adopted by the Senate, then it would be necessary later to reconsider the vote by which it was adopted.

Mr. SMITH. That does not preclude the Senator from moving to strike it out later on. He would still have the right to move to strike it out even if the Senate should adopt it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the information of Senators the Chair will state than an amendment agreed to must be reconsidered by unanimous consent of the Senate before a motion to strike it out could be considered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am very sorry the Senator from South Carolina has taken that attitude, but in view of the fact that he has done so, I shall have to move to strike out paragraph (G) which provides for the fixing or providing of methods for fixing minimum prices, and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment has not yet been adopted.

Mr. BYRD. I hope the Senate will reject the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, let me say that I think it is perfectly apparent that if paragraph (F) is retained, paragraph (G) should also be retained. Paragraph (G) ought to be retained, as I understand the attitude of the chairman of the committee, and I am in accord with that view, if paragraph (F) is retained. If paragraph (F) should later be stricken from the bill, I think the committee would not resist reconsideration of the vote by which paragraph (G) was adopted, and let paragraph (G) go out, because paragraph (G) has no place in the bill without paragraph (F). I think it would be well to adopt the committee amendment, and then later the committee would not resist reconsideration of that vote, and paragraph (G) could be stricken out if in the meantime paragraph (F) had been stricken out.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BAILEY. I thought the Senator from Virginia had concluded his remarks.

Mr. BYRD. No; I have not.

Mr. BAILEY. At the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Virginia I desire to address an inquiry to the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BYRD. If it is the purpose of the Senator from South Carolina to refuse me unanimous consent to consider the related matters together, then I suggest the absence of a quorum, and we shall discuss the matter further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bulkley	Costigan	Guffey
Ashurst	Bulow	Davis	Hale
Austin	Burke	Dickinson	Harrison
Bachman	Byrd	Dieterich	Hastings

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, attending a conference on the social-security bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

BARLOW-MOORE TOBACCO CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 239) for the relief of the Barlow-Moore Tobacco Co., which was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "representing" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States for."

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

STANDARD DREDGING CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 780) for the relief of the Standard Dredging Co., which was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out all after the word "of" down to and including the word "line", in line 9, and insert "$2,486.25, in full settlement of all claims against the United States."

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the pending question is on the adoption of the committee amendment appearing at the bottom of page 18. I sincerely hope the Senate will reject that amendment. It provides that the orders issued pursuant to section (6) shall contain terms and conditions—

"(G) Fixing, or providing methods for fixing, minimum prices at which any such commodity or product thereof, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, shall be sold by the first handler thereof: Provided, That no such minimum prices shall be fixed, unless not less than 50 percent of the volume of such commodity or product is sold by an association or associations of producers, or otherwise for the account of producers, and/or by producers who are also handlers.

I am asking for the rejection of the committee amendment because, as a producer of food, I am firmly convinced that much more harm than good will result from the attempt to fix prices, those prices to be paid by the consumer; and especially is it entirely unworkable, to attempt to fix prices for perishable foods, fruits, and vegetables, because the value of those perishable foods is determined by their condition, which varies from day to day. A certain vegetable may be in good condition one day, and, due to the hot weather, may deteriorate and be in bad condition another day. So it is absolutely unworkable to attempt to fix a minimum price for which these particular commodities can be sold. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that never in the history of the world have minimum prices of food products, or, in fact, any other products, been successfully fixed.

We all know that England, for example, tried unsuccessfully to fix the minimum prices for rubber. We all know that Brazil, which has a virtual monopoly of the production of coffee, endeavored unsuccessfully to fix the price at which coffee was to be sold. We all know that Cuba—and I happened to be in Cuba at the time—which produces a large part of the supply of sugar for this country, attempted to fix a minimum price for sugar, and was unsuccessful in doing so. We must remember that in the final analysis the law of supply and demand will control the price of those products which are offered to the consumer.

There is no Member of the Senate who is more anxious than am I to advance, in an effective and sound manner, the interests of the farmers, because, if I may say so, I have been in the farming business for 30 years. I have shipped products to every corner of the globe; and I think I can claim for myself some experience in the operation of farming and in the marketing of farm products, because I have given my life to it.

I am opposing this committee amendment because I believe that the attempt on the part of the Department of Agriculture to establish minimum prices at which, first, the product can be purchased by the handler; and, secondly, the handler must resell that product, is an absurdity to the *n*th degree.

I cannot conceive of anything more unworkable, or anything that would bring greater confusion to the industry as a whole, than the effort made to fix two prices on a given product, as this bill provides, because section (F) provides that under certain conditions the price at which the handlers buy the product may be fixed, while section (G) provides that the price at the resale by the handlers may be fixed; and by the time all this red tape is unwound here from Washington these perishable foods and vegetables will be consigned to the garbage can. We all know how slowly the great bureaucracies in Washington operate, sometimes two or three thousand miles away from where the product is either produced or sold.

How are these licenses first to be imposed upon the producer? We have been told by the chairman of the committee, and Mr. Chester Davis in the hearings has repeatedly said, that nothing is to be done under this proposed legislation without the approval and consent of the producers; yet the bill provides that these rules and regulations, these marketing agreements, may first be imposed by 50 percent of the handlers. In other words, 50 percent of the dealers in a given commodity can license and tell the growers what they can do, and, as a part of the licensing agreement, at what price they may sell their own products.

I have an amendment which provides that no such action may be taken without the consent of 75 percent of the growers; but the fact remains that this measure, as now presented to us, gives to 50 percent of the handlers the power to license the producers; and no one can deny that, because it is plainly and clearly written in the bill.

Mr. President, for a moment now let us see what these licenses may provide. I call them "licenses" because they are licenses. In order to circumvent, by legalistic language—and that is all it is—the decision of the Supreme Court in the N. R. A. case, the proponents of the bill have changed the name from "licenses" to "orders." So far as I am concerned, I should just as soon be "licensed" from Washington as to be "ordered" from Washington to do a given thing, and so far as I can see the effect is just the same.

Let me read section (A) to show what it is proposed to do under the licenses which are to be imposed, not by the producers, but by 50 percent of the handlers of a given product. The bill provides that the orders issued pursuant to the section shall contain terms and conditions—

> Limiting, or providing methods for the limitation of, the total quantity of any such commodity or product, or of any grade, size, or quality thereof, produced during any specified period or periods, which may be marketed in or transported to any or all markets during any specified period or periods by all handlers thereof.

In other words, although the decision of the Supreme Court clearly defines the power of the Government to control only interstate shipments, by the language found in paragraph (A), at the bottom of page 17, it is proposed to control any product that may be "marketed in or transported to any or all markets during any specified period or periods by all handlers thereof"—a clear effort to circumvent the decision of the Supreme Court.

In paragraph (B) it is provided that these orders shall contain terms and conditions—

> Allotting, or providing methods for allotting, the amount of such commodity or product, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, which each handler may purchase from or handle on behalf of any and all producers thereof, during any specified period or periods, under a uniform rule based upon the amounts produced or sold by such producers in such prior period as the Secretary determines to be representative, or upon the current production or sales of such producers, or both, to the end that the total quantity thereof to be purchased or handled during any specified period or periods shall be apportioned equitably among producers.

In other words, it is proposed to go to a commission merchant in one of the cities and tell that commission merchant how much of a given grade of a given product he may handle throughout the year, which is another absurdity.

Then in paragraph (C) the bill provides that these orders shall contain terms and conditions—

> Allotting, or providing methods for allotting, the amount of any such commodity or product, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, which each handler may market in or transport to any or all markets, under a uniform rule based upon the amounts which each such handler has available for current shipment, or upon the amounts shipped by each such handler in such prior period as the Secretary determines to be representative, or both, to the end that the total quantity of such commodity or product, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, to be marketed in or transported to any or all markets during any specified period or periods shall be equitably apportioned among all of the handlers thereof.

First, we tell the grower how much he may produce, and then how much to market in any and all markets—clearly, as I say, in defiance of the Supreme Court decision.

Second, we propose to allot to dealers how much they may handle of a given commodity.

Third, we propose to say how much of a given product may be shipped to a given market—to say how many beans may be shipped to New York, how many beans may be shipped to Baltimore, how many beans may be shipped to the city of Washington. Mr. President, how can anybody ascertain the consuming power of the different markets of the country with respect to the different products?

Then the bill provides for the determination of the surplus of a product. That is something which those engaged in the agricultural business have been attempting to do from time immemorial—to attempt to ascertain, when a product is harvested, how much of that product will remain after it has been first consumed; in other words, how much of it may be stored.

Then the bill provides for the establishment of reserve pools to sell the surplus of a commodity, which, as I understand, permits the Government to go into business, and to sell the products in these pools, and then distribute the proceeds to the producers of the particular commodities.

Mr. President, marketing agreements have been tried from time to time. They were tried in the case of the citrus fruits in Florida. If there is a single fruit produced in this country which is better subject to governmental control than any other, it is the citrus fruits, because they are produced in a very limited area. A resolution has been sent me by the citrus growers of Florida with respect to the experience they have had with their marketing agreements, which resolution I desire to read to the Senate. It is as follows:

> Whereas the Congress of the United States is considering the passage of the Agricultural Adjustment Act amendments, H. R. 8052, modified further by revisions recommended to the House Agricultural Committee by A. A. A. officials;
> Whereas these amendments and revisions propose giving the Secretary of Agriculture absolute authority which is far greater than any heretofore granted and contrary to settled American principles in that he is empowered to act both as judge and jury, since his decision is not reviewable by court, providing a license or order issued by the Secretary is deemed in accordance with law;
> Whereas paragraph 3 of section 4 gives the Secretary of Agriculture arbitrary right to impose licenses and orders even if the majority of those to be licensed or to be affected by his orders are opposed to a marketing agreement;
> Whereas it is proposed that the Secretary be empowered to tax agriculture, which function belongs exclusively to the Congress;
> Whereas these amendments propose giving the Secretary unlimited authority, "for providing methods for the limitation of the total quantity of any such commodity or product, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, produced during any specified period which may be marketed in or transported to any markets by all handlers thereof";
> Whereas under great pressure, vegetables have been excluded, under the proposed amendments, nevertheless A. A. A. officials have insisted upon including fruits under its proposed expanded power and provisions, thereby unfairly discriminating against our industry;

Whereas otherwise the bill further contemplates making the Secretary supreme dictator contrary to fundamental American principles: Therefore this body at its annual meeting, officially representing 1,459 grower members and 105 shipper members (such membership representing over 50 percent of the total citrus fruit shipped from Florida) does hereby Resolve, That unless these amendments are changed to apply only to basic commodities, and unless it can be arranged where our Florida citrus industry will be excluded from the destructive features of regimentation permitted in proposed amendments, does emphatically protest the passage of these amendments and earnestly requests that our representatives at Washington do everything possible to defeat this bill and particularly urges that citrus fruits be exempted from any further authority that the proposed amendments or revisions may contemplate extending to the Secretary of Agriculture.

That resolution was adopted by the Associated Citrus Growers and Shippers of Florida, signed by A. M. Pratt, secretary and manager, and it was sent to me on June 19.

What I particularly wish to discuss with the Members of the Senate is the unwisdom of beginning price-fixing programs for perishable products. In my judgment, a price-fixing policy whereby the consumer is compelled to pay a given price is unworkable as to any agricultural product.

We must remember that different kinds of foods can be substituted for others. If wheat becomes too high, consumers can use something in the place of wheat. If meats become too high, they can use something in the place of meats. If one certain vegetable becomes too high in price, then the consuming public can purchase another vegetable. The same thing applies to fruits, if apples sell too high, the people can eat cherries, they can eat pears, they can eat other fruits.

What I say is that if Congress desires to go on record as establishing a price-fixing policy, then it ought to include all agricultural products; it ought to include wheat; it ought to include corn; it ought to include meats, because there is competition between the different food products whereby a consumer may substitute one product for another and receive just as much sustenance as if he ate the product he perhaps most desired.

I myself think it would be disastrous to have any price fixing, and I should like to ask the proponents of this legislation if any such plan has ever succeeded in the history of the world.

We severely criticized the Hoover administration because by a method of purchasing wheat they attempted to fix the price of wheat; and that is the only way, in the final analysis, by which the Government can fix the price. If there is a surplus of a product in the market, the only way to maintain the price is to have someone purchase the surplus. Yet the Democratic Party in its platform, and every speaker on the Democratic side, in addressing the public, severely abused the Republican administration and criticized Mr. Hoover because he attempted to fix the price of wheat by purchasing the surplus wheat offered on the market. But now, in defiance of what I regard to be the platform of the party, there is an attempt to fix the prices of perishable foods, and my objection is that it will bring chaos and confusion to that industry. I speak, as I have said, with some knowledge of it, because of the long experience I have had. It will bring much more harm than any good that could result.

Of all the proposals that have been presented to this body, conceived in the agile and fertile minds of the "brain trust", I know of nothing more ridiculous and absurd than the attempt to fix the prices of perishable foods, to fix them, first, at the prices at which the handler can purchase them, and then attempt to say at what prices he shall resell them for consumption by the people. It will simply mean that those who attempt such a thing will bring such confusion relating to the industry affected that the losses will be beyond our comprehension.

Then we must consider that under these marketing agreements any dealer who does not carry out a marketing agreement, who does not charge the price he is supposed to charge according to the marketing agreement, is fined $500 a day so long as he violates any part of the marketing agreement; and the facts are not reviewable by the courts. The Secretary of Agriculture determines the facts, and all a court can do is to say whether or not the man concerned has violated a marketing agreement, and then it may fine him $500 a day. He may have good reason for his inability to charge a particular price. The food he has may have deteriorated in value, and therefore he may not have been able to get the price for it that he should get under the marketing agreement; but the courts, under these agreements, cannot go into the facts, and can simply determine a case upon the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. President, as I have said, I do not yield to the Senator from South Carolina, for whom I have the highest respect, or to any other Member of the Senate, in my desire to help the farmers of this country. I know their problem, I know the difficulties they have had, and throughout my public career, as Governor of Virginia and in the Senate, I have done my utmost to promote their interests. But I am not going to stand on the floor of the Senate and advocate something which I think is impractical and absurd, and which will bring disaster instead of benefit to those it is intended to benefit.

I do not question the good intentions of the Department of Agriculture, I do not question the good intentions of those able young men who are advising the Department in connection with this proposed legislation, but I say that it is not based upon practical experience, that they are attempting to do something which cannot be done, and which, I submit to the Senate, has never been done, by attempting to fix the price of an agricultural product or any other product.

Mr. President, I have no defense of the manufacturers of the country. The Senator from South Carolina says that a manufacturer can arbitrarily fix the price of that which he sells. We know that that is not the case, because in the recent depression we know of the low prices at which many manufactured products were sold to the public, and, after all, we must recognize that the law of supply and demand regulates the price at which a given product is sold. Furthermore, many of our products are exported. Take the case of citrus fruit. There is quite an exportable surplus of citrus fruits.

If we attempt to fix prices in this country, and those prices are not in line with the foreign markets, we simply cannot sell the given product in the market, wherever it may be. For instance, if we attempted to fix the price of any product that is exported from this country, let us assume that the price fixed here is higher than the price in the European market, or any other market, wherever it may be sold; then we would simply be excluded from shipping that particular product to that market.

I hope that the Senate will eliminate section (G), which provides for price fixing; and should that section be eliminated, I will later make a motion to eliminate section (F), because under the bill there are two price fixings which are contemplated. In other words, there is the fixing of the price at which the dealer is supposed to purchase the commodity, and then there is the fixing of the price at which the dealer is supposed to resell the commodity. When we consider the perishable nature of the foods which are dealt with in the bill, fruits and vegetables, I think that any man with common, ordinary sense can see that such a proposal is entirely unworkable.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. Does the Senator agree that the amendment with regard to subsections (F) and (G), on page 18, should be voted on at the same time?

Mr. BYRD. I do, and I have asked that, but there has been objection.

Mr. McGILL. Can we not have unanimous consent that if the amendment in subsection (G) be agreed to, the two subsections may be included in the motion to strike out, if the Senator from Virginia desires to make such a motion?

Mr. BYRD. I asked for such unanimous consent, but the Senator from South Carolina refused to agree.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, it is obvious that if we are to make any progress at all with the bill we will have to go through the usual procedure of determining whether the Senate will accept or reject the committee amendments.

I suggested to the Senator from Virginia, and it was also suggested to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], that action be taken on this committee amendment; and then, when we shall have concluded our consideration of the committee amendments, if the Senate should vote to reject paragraph (F), and if paragraph (G) should be agreed to, I, as chairman, would not resist, and I think the Senate would agree to reconsider that vote, because the two would go together.

However, if we are to begin to amend the text without regard to completing the committee amendment, we shall get into all sorts of confusion. I do not wish to estop the Senator from Virginia, and I could not do so if I wanted to, from making the motion to strike out both paragraphs. At the proper time he will have that privilege and I shall not resist a request for reconsideration of the vote if paragraph (F) shall be voted out of the bill.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, if the Senator from Virginia will yield further, I will say that my object in rising was to have an agreement now that in the event paragraph (G), the committee amendment should be adopted, then when the Senator from Virginia moves to strike out paragraph (F) he may also include in that motion a motion to strike out garapraph (G).

Mr. SMITH. That situation will take care of itself when we take up the bill and return to amendments to the text.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BYRD. I notice that in paragraph (F), on page 18, line 16, there is a committee amendment; and that being the case, would it not be in order to consider the elimination of paragraph (F) as well as paragraph (G)?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Virginia that there is a unanimous-consent agreement to consider the committee amendments prior to offering any other amendments to the bill. The Chair understands that the pending committee amendment begins on page 18, line 21, and goes to line 4 on page 19. The Senate has the right to agree to it or reject it.

Mr. BYRD. The point I am making is that there is also a committee amendment on page 18, lines 16 and 17 of paragraph (F); and that being the case, would not that section likewise be subject to a motion to eliminate or strike out?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair finds that on page 18, lines 16 and 17, there are committee amendments to strike out the word "first." Those are committee amendments. The Chair understands they have already been adopted.

Mr. SMITH. They have been adopted.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, would it be in order to move that paragraph (F) be eliminated, in view of the fact that it has in it two committee amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. In paragraph (F), on page 18, there are two committee amendments, in lines 16 and 17, to strike out the word "first." The Chair understands that those two amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BYRD. I wish to ask, if the vote whereby these particular amendments in paragraph (F) were agreed to should be reconsidered, would it then be in order for me to move to eliminate paragraph (F)?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia makes a parliamentary inquiry, which, as the Chair understands it, is, if the Senate should reconsider the vote by which it adopted the amendments on page 18, in lines 16 and 17, striking out the word "first", whether it would be in order, after reconsideration of the vote by which that action was taken, to move to strike out paragraph (F). The Chair understands it would not be in order at the present time. Later on, before the Senate shall have completed its action on the bill, it will be in order to go back and move to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I desire to address an inquiry to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, with respect to paragraph (G), which has been read a number of times, for the purpose of ascertaining just what its objective is.

As I read the paragraph, it is an inducement to bring about what has heretofore been known as "cooperative marketing." Is that correct?

Mr. SMITH. That is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. And it relates, according to the paragraph numbered "(6)", on page 16, to fruits, tobacco, and its products, vegetables, soybeans, poultry, and other commodities, but certainly to tobacco and its products. Is that correct?

Mr. SMITH. That is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to remove any misapprehension as to the fact that tobacco and its products are included in paragraph (G), and that it is in contemplation that paragraph (G) offers an inducement to bring about cooperative marketing of tobacco and tobacco products.

Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the senior Senator from South Carolina and also of the Senate to the exceedingly disastrous experience which the tobacco farmers in the flue-cured belt—Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia—had in the matter of cooperative marketing about 6 or 7 years ago, the consequence of which experiment may be stated in general terms as being the loss of the crop for one entire year.

I am perfectly satisfied that the tobacco farmers of North Carolina are immensely delighted with the A. A. A. and its consequences in 1933 and 1934; but I am equally satisfied that the producers of bright tobacco in North Carolina would view with the utmost alarm any inducement by law or any movement from any source tending to alter the present system of marketing, and that they would be ready almost to fight a battle rather than to go into the cooperative marketing proposal.

No one in the Senate is better informed on that subject, and there is no one whose heart is more interested in that subject, than my friend, the senior Senator from South Carolina. He has stated very frankly what are the facts. I am not going to ask him to corroborate what I have said about the attitude of the farmers in the flue-cured belt toward cooperative marketing. I do not think that will need any corroboration from any source in the section directly involved. I should be bound from any point of view to oppose this paragraph on the ground that on its face it undertakes to offer a reward by way of minimum prices to induce, in my State, a return to a system which practically ruined the farmers for the period of 3 or 4 years.

That is all I wish to say to the Senator. I believe that upon reconsideration he will agree with me that this paragraph ought to be stricken out; and if striking out the paragraph necessitates the striking out of paragraph (F), then when we come to that again, I take it, we can all agree to strike it out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, paragraph (G), on pages 18 and 19.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask for a division.

Mr. GERRY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Brown	Coolidge	Gibson
Ashurst	Bulkley	Copeland	Glass
Austin	Bulow	Costigan	Gore
Bachman	Burke	Davis	Guffey
Bailey	Byrd	Dickinson	Hale
Bankhead	Byrnes	Dieterich	Harrison

McKellar	Nye	Shipstead	Walsh
McNary	O'Mahoney	Smith	Wheeler
Maloney	Overton	Steiwer	White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, before the vote shall be taken on the adoption of the committee amendment covered by section (G), I wish to address the Senate briefly on that subject.

The argument of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] goes to the authority contained in paragraph (F). Paragraph (F) was adopted by the other House and has not, so far, been under consideration in the Senate. Paragraph (G) was adopted by the Senate committee as a supplement to paragraph (F).

I think it is generally recognized, and possibly by the Senator from Virginia, though I am not authorized to speak for him, that if paragraph (F) should be retained in the bill paragraph (G) should also be retained.

While I did not hear the entire statement of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], I feel sure, from what I heard and from information which has come to me, that he has a wrong impression about the construction and purpose of paragraph (G).

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I inquired of the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I so understood.

Mr. BAILEY. If the objective of paragraph (G) was to bring about a system of cooperative marketing. He said it was. Then I asked him if it included tobacco and its products. He said, "Yes", which appears on the face of the bill, of course. Then I was simply content to make the point that the tobacco farmers of North Carolina, having had a most disastrous experience in cooperative marketing—I will not undertake to describe it; I will merely say it was a most disastrous experience, one of the consequences of which was that they lost the value of their entire crop—I was sure they would not desire that I should support or that the Senate should adopt this amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not taking issue with the conclusions drawn by the Senator from North Carolina, nor am I, in fact, taking issue with him at all. As I understand and construe paragraph (G)—and I am anxious to clarify the situation in controversy and to have an understanding of the real purpose and effect of this subsection on the part of the Senator from North Carolina and others—that paragraph, instead of being prepared for the purpose of promoting cooperatives, really does not have that effect, and is not intended for that purpose, as the Senator will realize if he will examine it carefully. On the other hand, it is a limitation and restriction upon the sale by cooperatives when such action would come in conflict with the limitations placed upon the handlers of the farm commodities involved.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama whether or not the "fixing, or providing methods for fixing, minimum prices" would apply to any commodities not moving in interstate commerce?

Mr. BANKHEAD. This entire bill applies to interstate commerce and to that alone.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. First, let me proceed with the point raised by the Senator from North Carolina. We are coming back to the merits of subsection (F).

Mr. TYDINGS. I will not interrupt the Senator further at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will be glad to yield at the appropriate time, but I wish to point out to the Senator from North Carolina the real purpose of the subsection. I understand the reasons which actuate him; I probably would entertain the same idea with the same facts before me, if the purpose of the subsection were as he understands. I know that he had such information as he has indicated, but doubtless the chairman of the committee misunderstood what was involved.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, let me add that the chairman of the committee now happens to be out of the Chamber, but I do not think he misapprehended the question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not only going upon my own construction of the language but upon the object stated before the committee when this section was adopted by the committee. It provides:

> (G) Fixing, or providing methods for fixing, minimum prices at which any such commodity or product thereof, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, shall be sold by the first handler thereof: Provided, That no such minimum prices shall be fixed, unless not less than 50 percent of the volume of such commodity or product is sold by an association or associations of producers, or otherwise for the account of producers, and/or by producers who are also handlers.

We will assume, for the purpose of the discussion of this subsection, that a price agreement has been established and an order covering it has been issued. That price must be paid, of course, by the handlers who buy from the producers, and thus the first step in the price progress of moving the commodities to market is established.

This paragraph is intended for the protection of the handlers who are under orders and under a marketing agreement fixing the price, so that the cooperatives, associations of producers or the producers themselves, cannot then go into a market and make sales at a less price than that which governs the handlers who are under orders. It is intended to create a uniform price situation, and is one of the provisions of the bill which are intended purely to protect those who are under the orders of the Government and governed by the price which is fixed against competition in prices even though it may come direct from the producers themselves.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I wish to make it clear to the Senate that in the event my motion shall prevail I will also move to strike out paragraph (F). I agree with the Senator from Alabama that if paragraph (F) remains in the bill paragraph (G) should also remain, but the chairman of the committee denied me unanimous consent to have a vote taken on both at the same time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood from the Senator's argument that that was the conclusion he had reached.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, now may I ask the Senator some questions if he has finished with the point he had in mind?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand, the Senator from Alabama contends these provisions deal only with commodities which pass in interstate commerce. If that be true of the provisions dealing with the fixing of minimum prices, it occurs to me that the minimum price in interstate commerce and the actual minimum price in intrastate commerce may be at variance; in one case the intrastate minimum price may be higher and in another it may be lower. Does the Senator feel that minimum price fixing will be sound under a provision where only the interstate feature is covered and where the intrastate features are beyond the scope of the law?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that is purely an administrative matter as to whether or not, where a State is not cooperating the interstate price for that territory shall be fixed. I think I have authority to say that it will not be fixed. The whole purpose of this program is to give power to the administration in connection with products moving in interstate commerce to cooperate with and work with State authorities. We well know, as was so well pointed out on the floor the other day by the Senator from Nebraska, that where the intrastate program is liable to be or is being broken down by shipments across State lines, the State is helpless, and the local authorities have no power. On the other hand, if we deal only with interstate shipments, then, of course, we have confusion and conflict and accomplish nothing for the producers or for the stability of the market without State action also. So let me say to the Senator that it is the avowed and declared purpose of the administrators of this program to secure authority for the sole purpose of exercising the same power over a commodity in interstate commerce that is agreed to be exercised in intrastate commerce in cooperation between the State and the Federal Government.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has stated that, in his opinion, the paragraph in question, insofar as the Federal Government is concerned, deals only with those commodities which are moving in interstate commerce?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The bill specifically so declares.

Mr. TYDINGS. What authority, if any, has the Federal administration to fix prices for articles in interstate commerce?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, that, of course, brings up a fundamental question.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask the question in good faith.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know the Senator does. I expected that probably that question would arise. It is a natural question, a legitimate inquiry, and one which the Senate must consider.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to say to the Senator from Alabama that I am not only interested in that feature of the case, namely, whether we have the authority to fix prices, aside from whether it would be helpful or harmful to do it, but I am likewise interested in knowing why this rather exceptional language was chosen on page 10, which, of course, was taken from the Supreme Court decision, but from a reading of which there appears to be a desire for an open door where the Federal Government may go into the intrastate feature as well as the interstate feature.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can only answer one question at a time, and I shall do my best.

The question presented by the Senator from Maryland involves a fundamental question relating to the power of Congress under the commerce clause of the Constitution. It may not be necessary to remind some Members of the Senate, and it may be necessary to remind others, that 2 years ago, when the passage of the original Agricultural Adjustment Act was pending before this body, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] presented an amendment to the bill which proposed to fix the price of the basic farm commodities at the cost of production with some reasonable additional charges. I mention it only to indicate that the question of the power of Congress to fix prices in matters controlled under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution has previously been before this body on a similar occasion. It was debated for at least a day or two, and the varying viewpoints of lawyers in the Senate, and also of those who had varying and differing viewpoints upon the economics involved, were threshed out.

At the conclusion of the debate a majority of the Senate voted that Congress had that power because it adopted the amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act based upon fixing the price upon cost of production as the fundamental element in the equation.

The bill went to conference and the amendment was rejected. It came back to the Senate for a second vote in the Senate and, probably with the acquiescence of the Senator from Nebraska to avoid tying up the program, the Senate yielded and the amendment went out of the bill.

I mention that circumstance merely to disclose to those who have not followed the history of the subject that price fixing being within the power of Congress in matters regulated and controlled under the interstate-commerce clause is not a new and not a novel one for consideration by this body.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows of any bill heretofore presented to the Congress and passed by the Congress which fixed prices?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not familiar with the history of any bill where that principle has been adopted. I think it is in large part because this body has for so long a time been controlled by a majority who believed in the doctrine of laissez faire and who are unwilling under any circumstances to move forward in the evolution of social and economic progress in this country.

Mr. BYRD. If this is such a wise thing to do, why is it that never in the history of the world has such a plan been suggested and adopted?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I cannot cover the world, and I doubt if the Senator can.

Mr. BYRD. Why is it that the Senator himself has not proposed price fixing sooner? He has been interested in such legislation for a long time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I cannot cover all fields, but I cover some, and I think I have covered them pretty well.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. My particular interest in directing my interrogatories to the Senator from Alabama was not to ascertain whether or not Congress had embraced this doctrine and whether it was wise or unwise, but rather whether or not, as a matter of law, the Senator could point out any decision of the courts or any provision of the Constitution or any precedent where it had been upheld in whole or in part, so we might have that as a guide by which we could measure the merit of the proposal from a legal standpoint alone and not as a matter of philosophy at all.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the Senator will be patient and listen as I proceed with the discussion. So far as I know, there is no direct precedent based upon an act passed by Congress, because none has been passed. Therefore, we must look to elementary fundamental principles and to analogy in other fields of legislation and judicial decision, and to construction by implication and analogy of the powers given to Congress and taken from the States under the interstate commerce clause of our Constitution.

Mr. President, there have been declarations even of our highest judicial tribunal which point the way to a judicial determination of this question. Since the Supreme Court decision recently rendered in the New York milk case, we all recognize that within their police power, within their authority to protect the public welfare, within their power to protect the producer and thereby retain a reliable supply of products upon the market, the States possess the power to fix prices upon any commodity as to which the public good may require it. If there is any question about the extent to which that decision went it may be well for me now to read a few of the headnotes from that case as it appears in Two Hundred and Ninety-first United States Reports, page 502.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that the States having created the Government and being the sovereign of all power and retaining all for their own internal commerce except that which they have yielded to the Federal Government, there might be a considerable number of Senators who would not question that the States had the right to fix prices for certain particular reasons.

My particular question was addressed not to the power of the States, but to whether or not the Federal Government, which had only such power as the States themselves granted to it, would have the power to fix prices in interstate commerce when only the authority to regulate was given.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think, in view of the concession of the Senator from Maryland, it may not be advisable to take the time of the Senate to bring to its attention the extent to which the Supreme Court of the United States went in the New York milk case in fully sustaining the constitutional power to fix prices.

Mr. TYDINGS. By the States?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; by the States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator agree that nearly all the States in the Union, guarding as they have the rights of the people and the public welfare, have enacted statutes against monopolies and conduct in restraint of trade, and that such statutes were in effect a denunciation of price fixing and prohibited price fixing?

Mr. BANKHEAD. What has that to do with the power involved in the question we are here discussing? That would be purely a matter of policy if it were involved at all. It certainly throws no light upon the question of whether the Congress under the Constitution may exercise the same power in matters of interstate commerce that the States are authorized to exercise, whether they exercise it or not, under their own local domination and control.

Mr. KING. Perhaps I have misconceived the attitude of the Senator from Alabama. I thought he was contending that it was for the benefit and welfare of the people to have price-fixing organizations set up in the United States. I wanted him to understand, or, at least, I hoped he would remember, that nearly every State has statutes against price fixing and against monopoly and against any policy involving restraint of trade.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In answer to the Senator from Utah I will say that the Supreme Court laid down this rule:

> The legislature is primarily the judge of the necessity of such an enactment; every possible presumption is in favor of its validity, and though the court may think the enactment unwise—

As, of course, the Senator from Utah usually thinks—> it may not be annulled unless palpably in excess of legislative power.

So the doctrine stands without question. The State possesses the power to fix prices when the legislature of the State deems such action best in the interest of the common welfare and the public good.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; though I should like to follow up this matter.

Mr. TYDINGS. I can well understand that on a matter such as this one may change his views from day to day; and I do not wish to confound the Senator by something he said earlier in the consideration of this matter. On April 12, 1933, however——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know what the Senator has in mind. Just wait a minute. I want the Senator to look further. I know what he is talking about.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me read this to the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. All right; go on and read it, and read my remarks about the amendment made to that bill applying it to matters in interstate commerce. Read it all, if the Senator wishes to put it in.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall try to do so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not read the statement since it was made.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator said on April 12, 1933—page 1554, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> I prefer merely to make it a matter of record that it does seem to me that there is no grant to Congress to fix prices of commodities, whether we consider the question from the standpoint of those moving in interstate commerce or those which are confined solely within the respective States.

Let me say to the Senator that even if he thought that then and now thinks differently, I do not say he is to be criticized for it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then why does the Senator develop it, if he wishes to be frank about it?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am simply showing that necessity sometimes can help to mold a man's opinion. I know the Senator believes in the philosophy of this bill, which was not before the Senate in this form on April 12, 1933; but I submit the proposition that there is no decision of the Supreme Court or of any United States district court or circuit court, and there is no act of Congress heretofore, which approves or upholds the policy of fixing prices on commodities passing in interstate commerce.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that I did not vote for the Norris amendment because I did not feel that the basis of the cost of production was a proper basis, and so stated on the floor of the Senate. I will say further that when the Senator offered an amendment confining the program to interstate commerce, I made the comment that I thought it was more nearly in line with the Constitution. The Senator will find that in the RECORD. I will say to him further, if my personal views are of concern, that I had grave doubt about the power of a State to fix prices until the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Nebbia case. That decision, however, has given me, following it as the law of the land, an entirely different viewpoint as to the power of Congress to follow along similar lines.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama further yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. TYDINGS. Whether or not we agree with the Senator from Alabama, I think all of us concede that there is no man on this floor who is more anxious than is the Senator from Alabama to better the lot of the farmer. I am not questioning his intent or his purpose at all, but I am going to make, for whatever it is worth, the observation that, in my humble judgment, not only will the price-fixing provision of this bill——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the Senator will not take me away from the legal question into the philosophy of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not going to do that. I am coming right to the legal question. Not only the price-fixing provision of this bill but its rather obscure interstate character, the confusion of intrastate and interstate provisions, are going to involve so many law suits all over the country that it will be known as "the law-suit bill" rather than the "A. A. A. bill"; and thousands of cases will be filed as the result of the manner in which the measure is drawn.

It may be a good piece of legislation. It may be that if nobody would file law suits testing its constitutionality it would work. I am only saying that as a practical proposition the courts of the land are going to be swamped with injunction proceedings against the Federal Administrator, in which proceedings it will be set forth that the Congress has exceeded its authority, and that the Federal Administrator, acting in pursuance of the law, has likewise exceeded his authority; so that there will be a total break-down pending the final outcome of the litigation because even the Congress has not a single decision to which it can point to uphold the philosophy of this bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator will wait, I have just submitted to an interruption to which I wish to give some consideration.

Mr. GORE. What I wish to say refers to what has been said by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well; I yield.

Mr. GORE. I merely desire to remind both the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Alabama that the Supreme Court, in discussing the rights of property, declared that the right of an owner of property to part with it for whatever price he saw fit was one of the inherent rights of property.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator seems to have forgotten the Nebbia case, to which I called attention a short time ago, in which the Supreme Court said that price fixing did not violate either the fourteenth or the fifth amendments to the Federal Constitution.

Mr. President, referring to the suggestions of the Senator from Maryland, I submit that I cannot take into consideration mere suggestions and anticipations of obstructions to the passage of a law as affecting its constitutionality. Of course, how great resistance will develop among the people, how they will clog the courts with suits, may be a legitimate argument as to the policy of passing a law here; but it certainly can have no weight with a legal mind in considering what power Congress has of this subject under the Federal Constitution. I must say that, however in former years I may have been deterred by the thoughts presented by the Senator from Maryland, here is something new, something Congress never has done before; and, therefore, the fact that there has been no direct adjudication on the subject by the Supreme Court is no reason why we should not now dare to venture into new legislative fields. That is the doctrine of those whose thoughts and minds are riveted to the days which existed prior to the great world-wide depression; but, Mr. President, I cannot remain with them.

I cannot stand still upon the Senate floor, in my representative capacity, and accept the doctrine that what was brought upon us by the laws and by inaction prior to the great depression stand out as a monumental and perfect test of the order of things that should continue to exist merely because they formerly existed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama further yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, I did not mean to reflect on the Senator, or to say that he is not actuated by the highest motives, or even to say that he may not be right. What I did mean to say is that, as I see it, instead of moving forward, his bill is taking us backward at a very rapid rate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know to what the Senator refers, and it is a matter of total indifference in the discussion of this issue.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will yield further, as an underlying philosophy, it is my claim that all mass taxes are a burden on commerce; that all mass taxes are a burden on industry; that the less taxes there are on the farmers or the consumers of the country, the greater ability they have to produce and to consume; and the "blessings" which come under the guise of taxes which ultimately are passed on to the consumer as a matter of actual observation quite often do more harm than good to those whom all of us desire to serve.

May I illustrate?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. May I illustrate just a moment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No, Mr. President; I decline to yield for a speech, and I do not think the Senator ought to insist on it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not making a speech.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator does not call his statement a speech, what does he call it?

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to ask the Senator if he is familiar with this situation——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would rather the Senator would not interrupt me further. The Senator from Maryland provoked me into a discussion of the legal and constitutional aspects of this subject; and when I am bearing down on him, and creating an impression upon the judgment of impartial minds, the Senator from Maryland wishes to digress and move out upon the economic and philosophical questions involved in this program. Later, I may be willing to enter that field with him; but I certainly hope he will let me, while dealing with the legal question, proceed to the conclusion which I, at least, have reached, and to submit it to the legal minds of the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a legal question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama further yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield if it relates to the question the Senator asked me in the beginning.

Mr. TYDINGS. I desire to ask the Senator whether, from a legal standpoint, the underlying philosophy of this bill does not run counter to the underlying philosophy enunciated by the Supreme Court in the N. R. A. decision.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think the N. R. A. decision has a thing on earth to do with the philosophy of this measure. There was no philosophy in the N. R. A. decision. [Laughter.] It was a declaration of law.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will bear with me, he will recall that the court questioned the authority of Congress to fix hours of work and rates of pay in the respective States. Now the Senator is arguing the legality of a bill which, in my judgment, attempts to fix prices in the States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The N. R. A. decision, as the Senator from Maryland knows, dealt with only two legal questions. It dealt with no economic philosophy, it dealt with no question of policy; it dealt simply with the constitutional authority to delegate power, and then with the question of what, under particular facts, constituted interstate as distinguished from intrastate commerce. So, of course, that decision has nothing to do with the legality of the authority of Congress to fix prices upon commodities moving in interstate commerce.

Having established that the States have the power, as recently so thoroughly confirmed by the Supreme Court, let us see what has become of that power over commodities over which the States have no power left by reason of granting certain power to the Federal Government. In other words, here are commodities, the prices of which, if they are moving in interstate commerce, the States have no power to regulate. If they are then put into the flow of interstate commerce, does the power everywhere, under the State or the Nation, vanish and disappear? When it was surrendered by the States to the Federal Government, I ask the judgment and reason of Senators, did not the power which the State possessed while the articles remained within the confines of the State move with the delegation of power into the Federal Government?

The Supreme Court, in the case of Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. (175 U. S. 211), at page 213, laid down this proposition:

> If neither Congress nor the State legislature have such power then we are brought to the somewhat extraordinary position that there is no authority, State or National, which can legislate upon the subject of or prohibit such contracts. This cannot be the case.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me ask the Senator if this thought is not worthy of consideration in connection with the legal argument he is now making? The States themselves, of course, have only such power as the people have given them in their various constitutions. The Federal Government had only such power as the States have conferred upon it. Therefore the people are the natural reservoir wherein resides all the power not delegated to either one of the two agencies. It may be that the people do not wish either the National Government or the State governments to have the power to fix prices. It may be that there are many fields of governmental activity where the people, the sovereigns, do not care to have unlimited delegation of power given to either agency, National or State. I rather think that that is the philosophy which has prevailed heretofore, and that the National Government has no more power to fix prices than the States have to regulate interstate commerce.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think, on the other hand, that the power of Congress is exactly the same as that of the States, one with intrastate, the other with interstate.

Let me read a declaration by John Marshall in the case of Crutcher against Commonwealth of Kentucky:

The power to regulate commerce, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, and may be exercised to the utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution.

The power to fix prices is not prescribed, as the Supreme Court held in the milk case, by any section of the Constitution. I read further from the Crutcher case:

If, as has always been understood, the sovereignty, the Congress, though limited to specific objects, is plenary—is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of power as are found in the Constitution of the United States.

In short, Mr. President, when the States delegated to Congress the power to regulate interstate commerce, that power was without restriction, without limitation; the power is plenary, and is as extensive as if all the States were one government, one State, under that specific grant of power to Congress.

Let me read another extract or two. In the case of Gibbons against Ogden the Court laid down the rule that—

The power over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government—

The same principle—

having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of power as are found in the Constitution of the United States.

In the Northern Securities case (193 U. S. 342) the Court said:

Subject to the limitations imposed by the Constitution the power of Congress over interstate and international commerce is as full and complete as is the power of any State over its domestic commerce.

Can any lawyer in the Senate who is dealing with this question as a lawyer, not as one with fixed views from an economic or policy standpoint, insist that, after that specific declaration by the Supreme Court of the United States, Congress is without the power sought to be exercised here? The Court says " is as full and complete as is the power of any State over its domestic commerce." We recently have had the statement of the Supreme Court that the State has this specific power over its domestic commerce.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me point out to the Senator that I do not think there is a man on the floor of the Senate, regardless of his thought on the pending bill, who will say that the power of the Federal Government to regulate interstate commerce has any restrictions put upon it insofar as the word " regulation " is concerned. However, I think that the Supreme Court is not unlikely to hold that things cannot be done under the guise of regulation which have not regulation for their purpose, and one of those is price fixing.

I might say that that legal philosophy is carried out very well in the child-labor case, where the Court said that the power given Congress to do one thing could not be used to do another thing whose manifest object was not the carrying out of a power which Congress would have a perfect right to exercise.

No one here is contending, may I say to the Senator from Alabama, that there is any restriction on the word " regulation ", but regulation itself is restricted within the terms of the meaning of the word " regulation " and new meanings cannot be read into it. The dictionary will not show that regulation can be defined as price fixing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator to the oft-repeated declaration of our Supreme Court that the fourteenth amendment as applied to the States and the fifth amendment as applied to Congress are the same in their restrictions and limitations upon the exercise of the respective powers. In the Nebbia case the Supreme Court held not only that the fourteenth amendment did not prohibit the State of New York from price fixing under the conditions specified there, but held also that it did not violate the fifth amendment to the Federal Constitution.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me suggest to the Senator that it seems to me the bill before us is not one of abstract principles. It relates to the applicability of the Federal power and the State power to transactions with which we are dealing. The Senator has very clearly demonstrated that within the field of interstate commerce the Federal Government is supreme; but the Supreme Court decisions have also laid down the principle that within the State its power over intrastate matters is supreme.

Let us suppose that a State undertook, in the exercise of its power, to fix prices, and that the Federal Government undertook to fix prices also. We would probably run into a very difficult situation. Is not the difficulty, however, the necessity of determining just where a transaction of that kind becomes an interstate transaction?

The Senator will recall that in the N. R. A. case about the chickens the Court denounced the code provision with respect to the resale of chickens, and said the purchaser had the right to select the one particular chicken he wanted instead of selecting the " mill run " of the chickens, if that is a proper term. The Court further held that while the chicken had been in interstate commerce since it originated over in New Jersey somewhere, and until the end of its journey was reached, what happened to it from there on was not in interstate commerce but in intrastate commerce.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I recognize that situation.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is the question of the applicability to the facts in each case which determines whether it is the Federal power we are asserting or the State power.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I agree entirely with the Senator from Texas, and I made a statement about it before the Senator came on the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I made a statement to the effect that it is fully recognized by the sponsors of this bill that it does not go to the extent, and could not under the N. R. A. decision go to the extent, of controlling intrastate commerce in any way. I made the further statement, which I think should be given consideration by the friends of this agricultural program, that the administrators of this program had stated from time to time, before our committee and elsewhere, that it was not their purpose to invoke the power under this bill with respect to the specialty crops included in it, except on the request and application of State authorities to cooperate with them. In other words, where the State of Maryland, as was pointed out by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] in the Baltimore case, was unable to control a milk situation by virtue of milk being shipped across the State line—a case with which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is familiar—they needed and requested the cooperation of the Federal Government in adjusting interstate shipments and sales upon the same basis as they had been handled in the State of Maryland. It is in such situations that the administration would go to the relief of the States and help them protect their local situations by exercising the power given it in interstate commerce.

So, of course, the legality of the program is not affected. I recognize, as the Senator from Texas—he is a practical man—well says, that there are cases, and illustrations may be pointed out, where there would be a conflict and a destructive conflict in this program between the State and the Federal Government, if there did not exist a spirit and purpose and determination upon the part of the administrators of the Federal program to do nothing except in cooperation with the authorities of the various States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does not the Senator think our difference in looking at the legal side of this question arises primarily out of the fact that he presents the argument that all power resides either in the State or in the Nation with regard to commerce, whereas I am contending that all power resides either in the State or in the Nation or in the people? There are some powers which the people have never given to either the State or the Federal Government.

In conclusion, I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that under the N. R. A. decision, to which the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has referred, where it was an intrastate occurrence upon which the Court passed in its ruling, the State of New York did have the power to do many of the things which were criticized as being done by the Federal Government, but the State of New York had not cared to exercise them; and the fact that it had not cared to exercise them did not give the power to the Federal Government, because the people were the ultimate repository of all power which the Federal Government did not have up to that time. So, in my humble judgment, it is not a sound premise to say that all power which the State governments do not have must reside in the Federal Government, because the people still retain powers that they have never reposed in either government, and, in my judgment, they have wisely retained such powers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. How are the powers which are supposed to have been reserved to the people—by which is meant that they are neither in any State constitution or in the Constitution of the United States, and have not been exercised—to be placed in the Constitution? What is the process by which it can be done?

Mr. TYDINGS. By means of a constitutional amendment, either by the State governments or the Federal Government, in just the way it has always been done. If the governments, State or National, desire powers which the people never have conferred upon them, the proper way to obtain such powers is by constitutional amendment; and, in the absence of constitutional amendment, all the laws in the world will not confer them on either State governments or the Federal Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the States cannot amend the Constitution unless Congress submits such an amendment to them.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; they can.

Mr. BARKLEY. How?

Mr. TYDINGS. They can do it by the action of the States under the provision set up in the Constitution, if a sufficient number of people wish it to be done.

Mr. BARKLEY. They cannot do it except through the initiative of the Congress.

Mr. TYDINGS. Who elects the legislators? Who elects the Senators and the Representatives?

Mr. BARKLEY. The people elect them.

Mr. TYDINGS. Why cannot they take the initiative?

Mr. BARKLEY. They have not done it.

Mr. TYDINGS. If they have not done it, how would the Senator have it done? Would he have it done without any reference at all to them?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. My understanding of the Senator's argument on the question of price fixing is that the Constitution gives to the Federal Government full, unrestricted power to regulate interstate commerce; that in the decision quoted from Mr. Chief Justice Marshall it was stated that the power of the States to regulate intrastate commerce was equal to the power of the Federal Government to regulate interstate commerce; and then that the United States Supreme Court having held that the State of New York had the right to fix milk prices, he reaches the conclusion that the Federal Government has the same right. I was going to ask, if that is a correct statement of the argument—I ought to know, but I do not know—whether or not the Supreme Court, in the New York milk case, specifically based its decision upon the exercise of the powers over commerce by the State?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it did not.

Mr. ADAMS. Or did it base it upon inherent powers?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It based it upon inherent powers to protect the public welfare and the public interest.

Mr. ADAMS. Then it was not based on the internal commerce power of the State?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It applied solely to intrastate commerce; and my position is that the Federal Government has the identical power as to interstate commerce that the State has as to intrastate commerce in any particular commodity.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator's contention is that the Federal Government has, in addition to the powers granted to it, police powers such as are conceded to the States?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. That is a point upon which I am not clear.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It has the same police powers as have the States upon subjects not specifically and exclusively turned over to them.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me to close the argument on my case? Then I shall not interrupt him again.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator has closed his argument several times, but I will yield to him.

Mr. TYDINGS. In answer to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and other Senators who argue that either the Federal Government or the State governments have all powers, and the people none, I read amendment X of the Constitution:

> The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respecively, or to the people.

There it is in black and white.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Of course it is clear that there are certain powers which are given to the Government and certain powers which are reserved to the people. That is true with reference to the State and the Federal Government. As I understand the argument of my colleague, however, it amounts to this: The Supreme Court has held in the New York case that under the police power of the State, the State has a right to fix prices.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BLACK. And my colleague says further that the Congress alone has the power to regulate interstate commerce.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BLACK. And, therefore, that the Congress has the right to fix prices in interstate commerce. I call his attention to the fact that in line with that argument, the Supreme Court of the United States has expressly held that the Congress does have the right to exercise the police power with reference to transactions in interstate commerce.

It was held in the white-slave case, and it was also held in two other cases, that since the Congress had the complete power to regulate interstate commerce it carried with it the right to exercise a police power with reference to the regulation of interstate commerce.

That has been held in three separate cases by the Supreme Court of the United States. So it is not an argument, as has been insisted, and which has been made, as I understand, that a power which is left with the people can be taken away from the people without a constitutional amendment; but the Constitution itself gave to Congress the right to regulate interstate commerce, which carries with it the right to exercise police power to regulate interstate commerce, as is done with reference to liquor, as is done with reference to the white-slave traffic. It follows necessarily that if the States, in the regulation of commerce, can fix prices under the police power, the United States Government can in the same way fix prices under the police power, under the constitutional provision as to the regulation of commerce.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think my colleague has very clearly stated the proposition.

I had just announced the doctrine, in answer to a question by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], that Congress has the police power, just as the States have it, on those subjects specifically and exclusively granted under the Constitution to Congress. I did not have time to obtain the decisions at the moment; but I know, as my colleague has pointed out, that the Supreme Court has expressly stated that on certain subjects Congress has the police power.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator give us a brief definition of some of the police powers of Congress? The power to regulate commerce is not a police power, as every Member of this body knows. It is a delegated power. The police powers in any given instrument are necessary powers to enforce the granted powers. The power to regulate commerce is no more a police power than I am a policeman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall answer the Senator's question by reading a definition from Twenty-fifth Encyclopedia, page 863, which I formerly used in a legal argument from the floor of the Senate. It reads:

> Police power is the name given to that inherent sovereignty which is the right and duty of the government or its agents to exercise whenever public policy in a broad sense demands, for the benefit of society at large, regulations to guard its morals, safety, health, order, or to insure in any respect—> or to insure in any respect such economic conditions as an advancing civilization of a highly complex character requires.

There is the definition of police power, such police power as the State of New York exercises, such police power as the Congress has the right to exercise where the power of the States has been specifically transferred to Congress in all its aspects, not only, as the Senator doubtless knows, to regulate, but to prohibit. In every way where the complex moving economic conditions of the people require action, then Congress has the power under the police power.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the Senator contending that Congress derives its power to fix prices under the police power of the Constitution or the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution, or both?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Both. I have specifically stated that the police power followed the grant of the interstate commerce power and went with it as an incident, as a necessary attribute included in it. Of course, the Federal Government would not have that power except for the interstate-commerce clause granting the power.

Mr. President, I have submitted my views upon the subject. I recognize that they are but my views. However, I hope the authorities and suggestions submitted may be helpful.

As the chairman of the committee on numerous occasions has tried to impress upon the Senate, this is a program intended for the benefit of the agricultural producers of the country. Let me say to Senators who are not entirely sympathetic that this program is not needed by the cotton growers and it is not needed by the wheat and hog and corn producers except from the standpoint that the bill straightens out and conforms the law from a legalistic standpoint to the decision of the Supreme Court in the N. R. A. case. It is necessary from that standpoint absolutely because here we have disposed of the question of the delegation of power.

This bill ratifies and confirms the act of the agent of Congress, whether that act has been wrong, whether it has been purposely and from a legalistic standpoint properly delegated or not. It was an act under color of law by an agent of the Congress of the United States. No one doubts the power of a principal to ratify and confirm the acts of an agent. I have never had much doubt about the necessity for doing it.

I have believed from the beginning that the delegation of power in the original act providing the difference between the cost of production and the present price, the parity price, was a sufficient standard, certainly as definite as, if not more definite than, the power given to the President under the flexible tariff law. There the only standard was the cost of production abroad and in this country. It was a subject of investigation, a matter of fact finding, but a standard fixed, and when fixed it authorized the President to levy the tax. The Supreme Court has sustained that power, as we know.

But now we have lawsuits by grasping and greedy producers and handlers in different sections of the country, some of whom came before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and told the committee that they had taken the processing tax on hogs out of the producer. Still we find these handlers, who have insisted the power was directly in the interest of the producers, organizing through the courts a raid upon the taxpayers.

Why take any chances about the program? From the standpoint of the basic commodities it is important. From the standpoint of the Government it is valuable. From the standpoint of the taxpayers it is helpful. From the standpoint of the removing of uncertainties in the situation, as reflected in the flour trade, the textile trade, the meat trade, it is well for Congress by specific declaration now to ratify what it authorized and thought it was legally authorizing its agent, the Secretary of Agriculture, to do.

Except from the standpoint of clarifying and strengthening, if necessary, the authority under the act from a legal standpoint, the producers of the basic agricultural commodities have no vital concern. However, there are 2,000,000 farmers who are not engaged in the production of basic agricultural commodities, but who produce fruits and vegetables of all kinds. They, together with the dairymen and others, have been appealing for help. They have pointed out that this program has rescued agriculture from bankruptcy in the great basic commodity areas. They have been appealing to the Department of Agriculture to give them some benefit from marketing agreements.

I am standing here today pleading with Senators, as did our chairman, to look favorably upon this program for the 2,000,000 unorganized and scattered farmers producing special crops all over America, not to put anything upon them that they do not want, but to give them the opportunity, if they want these marketing agreements, to help adjust supply to demand, to help them market their crops in orderly fashion, and to feed into the markets, in appropriate ways and under proper circumstances, the fruits of their year's labor in a manner that will give them something at least approaching parity prices.

No exorbitant prices are expected. No unreasonable or unfair requests were made by the representatives of the farmers, either through their cooperative organizations or through their Representatives in the Congress of the United States. Men who stand upon the floors of these two Houses when a protective tariff bill is up appeal with eloquence and persuasion for a tax which will enable industry to pay a good wage to the industrial workers, which will enable the producers of manufactured articles to charge the consumers a higher price. They plead for those things. As a rule, they have been in the majority. I do not mention that subject now to start a tariff debate. I mention it simply to ask Senators from the Eastern States, who are generally, though not uniformly, opposed to every program in the interest of the agricultural producers which has come to Congress, to bear in mind that the industries of their States cannot operate, cannot maintain their profits, cannot pay their industrial laborers what they ought to have, if the Senators and Representatives from those States continue a program of holding back the farmer, of holding down his returns, of almost destroying the market for industrial commodities among 30,000,000 consumers upon the farms of the country.

I have not stood here, nor have other Senators from the agricultural States, and fought any program which tended to increase the wages of industrial workers.

We recognize that there is a relation of interdependence between these two great groups of workers. So here is a program designed to bring up to a little better level, to give a little fairer proportion of the national income to 2,000,000 farmers engaged in the production of specialty crops. There they are, unorganized, not vocal. For more than a year they have urged the Department of Agriculture to bring them under the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Some who were under it were taken out by actions in the courts brought by processors and handlers and shippers. They do not want this program.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to suggest to the Senator that the difficulty which confronts me is not so much the legal aspects as the economic aspects of the matter, the wisdom of fixing price below which a commodity may not be sold. Purchasers might not wish to pay the minimum price, and as a result of that the market might become glutted; and in the case of perishable fruits and vegetables, for instance, they might deteriorate, and the result would be a loss rather than a gain.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator from Texas, as I have said to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] since he spoke, that it is not the purpose of the Department to administer this bill as to perishable vegetables or fruits.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is no exception in the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator will draw an amendment along proper lines, distinguishing between perishable and nonperishable fruits and vegetables, so far as I am concerned I shall be glad to accept the amendment, because Mr. Davis has reconfirmed that statement since the Senator from Virginia spoke. It is not their purpose to administer the bill in any harmful way. Of course injurious circumstances may be visualized, may be conjured up, for which neither the Senator from Texas nor I would stand for a moment. Here, however, is a department working with the producers, not forcing prices upon the producers, not forcing any program upon the producers, but yielding to the request of the producers themselves in regard to these programs; and if any abuse should arise within 3 days, the measures taken under the bill could be changed to fit changing conditions.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to suggest to the Senator that giving a power which we concede ought not to be exercised is the very thing to which the Senator from Texas is opposed; and yet we are giving some bureau chief, or somebody in a department of the Government, authority to exercise a power which we say should not be exercised, and salving our consciences with the statement that "Well, he has told us privately and in the committee that he is not going to do it." If he is not going to do it, why should we give him the power to do it?

Much of the reaction which is taking place over the country as to acts of Congress arises from the fact that the people are complaining that the Congress seemingly has divested itself of its own judgment and its own discretion and its own legislative wisdom, if it has any, and is placing these transcendent powers in some little bureau chief who is appointed by somebody else, and who has no responsibility directly to the people, and to whom, when we give him the power, we have to go, I will not say on our bended knees, but on some other portion of our anatomy, and sit in the outer door for a day or two in order to approach the throne of this two-thousand-dollar or three-thousand-dollar autocrat, and beseech and beg and plead with him for a day or two to get him not to do something which we did not intend to have him do when we passed the law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. My difficulty has been in getting him to do something. I have had no trouble about getting him not to do things. I think the whole trouble in this particular department has been failure to move far enough under the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. CONNALLY. If it is hard to move them forward, it is just as hard to move them backward. It ought to be more so, because their nature is to go forward rather than backward.

I am willing to go as far as the Senator will go to advance the interests of agriculture. I come from a great agricultural State, and I am in sympathy with the agricultural program; but I think that when we write an act of Congress we ought to say what we mean, and not give a great power to somebody to exercise at his will.

The Senator illustrates the wisdom of that view. He says he cannot get the authorities to do certain things. It is just as bad if they will not do what they should do as if they do something they should not do. So I hope the Senator will amend this measure in such a fashion as to remove that particular thing from the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas states that he is a friend of this measure, and I believe him; I am sure of that. All his actions here show that his disposition is to aid the farmer in every possible way; but, as a friend of measures of this sort, I wish to submit calmly to the Senator's judgment that with a program involving 2,000,000 people, scattered from Maine to California and from Canada to the Rio Grande, with all sorts of crops, with all sorts of differing marginal conditions, it is almost humanly impossible to write into the letter of the law every authority which should be granted, and every limitation on authority which somebody may imagine might be improperly exercised. It is a very difficult thing to do.

The House committee worked for several weeks on this bill. All of its members are friends of the farmer. When the bill came over here, the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry worked on it for days and days, and did as faithful and conscientious work as any committee upon which I have ever served.

I wish to say before I conclude that the suggestion made by the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] about "brain trusters"—one which I have heard come from many sources—is entirely inappropriate when applied to this program.

Our committee took no advice from any "brain truster." The truth is, I regard the term "brain truster" as a compliment, because I believe it means they have a trust on the brains of this country.

The committee took the bill as it passed the House and tried to correct whatever defects in it we thought needed correction. We had Mr. Chester Davis before us, but he gave no advice. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] stated that on the floor of the Senate the other day. There was an attorney present, purely from a legalistic standpoint, to help straighten out the provisions of the bill, and to give his advice and to furnish us authorities, which I will say to the Senator I consulted with an open mind, and other lawyers on the committee acted with open minds.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. When I finish this statement I will yield. We made changes as a result of our own legal investigations. When we sought information, we got the information, the best that Mr. Davis and his department could give us.

They propose no program and urge nothing upon us. Mr. Davis frequently stated, with that fine frankness and manhood which characterize him, that they wanted no added authority. In my judgment, every Member of the Congress who has come in personal contact with Mr. Davis has respect for him and confidence in him. He stated there time and again, as members of the committee know, "We are simply here ready and willing to carry out any program Congress may order us to carry out. We are not seeking new responsibilities and new work. We are simply here to serve the committee." And in that spirit, I will say to the friends of this measure, such amendments as were made were worked out by that sort of united effort.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I promised first to yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wanted to say, in reply to what the Senator from Texas stated a moment ago, that while I perhaps shall vote with the Senator from Virginia on some of his amendments from a purely legal standpoint, if the proposition were as stated by the Senator from Texas, I should not vote for any portion or part of the bill. But in fact the bill does not confer upon the Department of Agriculture or upon any official such powers as were described by the Senator from Texas. The only way the powers which this bill confers can be brought into play, if the amendment which will be proposed by the Senator from Virginia shall be adopted, is by the action of the producers themselves through their marketing agreements and by their votes. With that amendment in the law, no arbitrary power will be conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture by the proposed statute at all, and it will leave almost entirely with the producers themselves the power to outline and carry on the program which they believe to be best suited to their particular needs in their own particular localities and areas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Allow me to say to the Senator from New Mexico that what the Senator from Texas expressed was provoked by the Senator from Alabama saying that the Department did not intend to exercise these powers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not all of them; I said as to perishable fruits.

Mr. HATCH. They cannot exercise the power until the producers ask them to.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator from Texas has erred, it has been through the information he received from the able and charming Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, what I stated was in answer to the argument the Senator from Virginia had made before I took the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to say one other thing, and this is also provoked by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator from Texas seems to be in a state of mind easily provoked.

Mr. CONNALLY. I use the word in no offensive sense. What the Senator from Texas said was not said as any reflection on the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I recognize that. If the Senator will permit me, I was answering the Senator from Virginia, as he understood.

Mr. CONNALLY. I regard the Committee on Agriculture as having performed a very laborious piece of work in considering the pending bill. It is a bill which is so complicated, if I may use the term, so diverse in its provisions, that I know it entailed much study and a great deal of thought on the part of the committee, and I congratulate the committee. But after all, the Senate has to confirm what the committee does, and while we are all disposed to follow the recommendations of the committee that does not mean that the Senate is blindly to follow just what the committee did.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have never asked that.

Mr. CONNALLY. If that were to be the rule, there would be no occasion for the Senate meeting. We could just pass our bills and resolutions in the committees. The Senator knows that frequently the Senate reverses a committee. What I had particularly in mind was the case of perishable fruits and vegetables upon which someone might fix a minimum price, and thereby harm, rather than benefit, might be brought about to the producer because if he could not sell them except at a minimum price he might not be able to sell them at all. That is what I had in mind in bringing to the attention of the Senator from Alabama the particular point in which I was interested.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I assure the Senator that nothing he said left an impression on my mind that he was criticising the committee, and my statements on that subject were in answer to statements of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] earlier in the afternoon, about the "brain trusters" promoting the program.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Alabama has conveyed to the Senator from Virginia the information that the Department does not intend to control perishable fruits and vegetables. In view of that statement, I think it would be well if we could adjourn this afternon and see if suitable amendments could not be framed to prevent them doing what he says they are not going to do, but what the bill gives them the power to do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I stated to the Senator that I thought we could agree on an amendment. The only difficulty is in getting an amendment which will clearly differentiate between perishable and nonperishable products.

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator that every fruit is perishable and every vegetable is perishable.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly, in the course of years.

Mr. BYRD. No; not in the course of years. In the course of a very short time fruits and vegetables are perishable.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, if the Senator has in mind an amendment tending to destroy the bill, we cannot reach an agreement. I thought the Senator was trying to protect some very perishable products.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Alabama volunteered the information to me that he was willing to agree to such an amendment, and in accordance with that suggestion I am asking him to pass over the pending amendment and see if we cannot agree on an amendment. I am not asking the Senator to agree to it. I am willing to leave it to a vote of the Senate.

With respect to the "brain trusters", what I said was that nothing more absurd had ever originated in the fertile mind of any member of the so-called "brain trust" than the idea of fixing minimum prices for perishable fruits and vegetables.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I think it would be proper, before the Senator completes his remarks, to insert in the RECORD a quotation from the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Champion against Ames. The Senator has very ably presented the legal aspects of this matter, and has asserted that Congress has the right to exercise police power in relation to interstate commerce. In the case of Champion v. Ames (188 U. S., p. 321) the Supreme Court said what I shall read in a short extract from their opinion:

> Congress, in exercising its constitutional power over interstate commerce, may adopt police regulation, as well as the States, and it has power to adopt not only means necessary but convenient to its exercise.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Is it the Senator's view that the Congress has general police powers, or mere power to protect the commerce itself?

Mr. BLACK. I can state that better by reading from another Supreme Court opinion.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to know the Senator's view.

Mr. BLACK. I am going to give the Senator my view by reading from Mr. Justice Harlan as to just what power they have in that regard:

> That the power to regulate commerce is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States; that such power is plenary, complete in itself, and may be exerted by Congress to its utmost extent, subject only to such limitations as the Constitution imposes upon the exercise of the powers granted by it; and that in determining the character of the regulations to be adopted Congress has a large discretion which is not to be controlled by the courts simply because, in their opinion, such regulations may not be the best or most effective that could be employed.

It is my view, in line with those two opinions, that the Congress has the same right to regulate interstate commerce that the State has to regulate intrastate commerce, and that within the field necessary to exercise that power the Congress has the right to exercise a police power exactly as the State has the right to exercise a police power on commerce purely within the State.

Mr. GEORGE. I take it the Senator means that the Congress has general police power?

Mr. BLACK. No; I do not mean that.

Mr. GEORGE. That is what I thought.

Mr. BLACK. I mean that it has general police power with reference to the exercise of its constitutional power to regulate commerce between the States.

Mr. GEORGE. I take it the Senator means that the interstate-commerce clause, as we refer to it, gives to the Congress general police powers over interstate commerce.

Mr. BLACK. Over regulating interstate commerce among the States.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I merely wished to ascertain the Senator's view; and I take it that his colleague from Alabama takes the same general, broad position. I do not think there can be any question of doubt that the grant of a specific power gives to the Congress a special police power with respect to that thing, or a police power, if one wishes to put it in general terms.

Take the case of milk: If the commerce clause, applied to milk, carries with it generally the police power that we find in the States, or in an absolute sovereignty, then the power necessarily resides in Congress to make a criminal offense certain methods of feeding the cow or caring for the cow which produces the milk which goes into interstate commerce. That is not my idea at all. That is a general police power which resides in the State—there is no doubt of that—but that is not my idea at all of any true or proper interpretation of the police power which necessarily goes with the grant of the power to control and to prohibit interstate commerce.

The full power, whether we call it police power or not—it is rather an implied power—the full power goes with the grant to the Congress to protect interstate commerce. It may arrest people and strike down people in order to control it, but in no direct or definite or material way can it be said, in my judgment, that the price at which the article is sold really has anything to do with interstate commerce within the meaning of the implied power or the police power to regulate interstate commerce.

If, however, it be the theory of those who have drawn this proposed legislation that the grant of power—for instance, the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce—carries with it the grant of police power in an unrestrained sense, then we can enter the backyard of every farmer in the United States who ships a pound of butter or a quart of milk, and we can say what he shall feed to his cow, because that can be done under the State law; we can say what care he shall give to the cow, for that can be done under the State law; we can regulate every miserable step up to the time the article goes into commerce, and until finally somebody consumes it in the State into which it has been sent.

I do not subscribe to that doctrine; but, if I did subscribe to it, I should rather go out of that door feet first than to vest the exercise of such power in any bureau or any division of Government in Washington.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the personal feelings of the Senator from Georgia. I ask unanimous consent to have published, in connection with my remarks at this point, the headnotes in the case of Nebbia v. New York (291 U. S.), at page 502.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The headnotes are as follows:

SYLLABUS

[Nebbia v. New York (291 U. S. 502). Appeal from the county court of Monroe County, N. Y. No. 531. Argued Dec. 4, 5, 1933. Decided Mar. 5, 1934]

1. As a basis for attacking a discriminatory regulation of prices, under the equal-protection clause of the fourteenth amendment the party complaining must show that he himself is adversely affected by it (p. 520).

2. A regulation fixing the price at which storekeepers may buy milk from milk dealers, at a higher figure than that allowed dealers in buying from producers, and allowing dealers a higher price than it allows storekeepers in sales to consumers, held consistent with the equal-protection clause of the fourteenth amendment because of the distinctions between the two classes of merchants (p. 521).

3. As part of a plan to remedy evils in the milk industry which reduced the income of the producer below cost of production and threatened to deprive the community of an assured supply of milk, a New York statute sought to prevent destructive price cutting by stores which, under the peculiar circumstances, were able to buy at much lower prices than the larger distributors and to sell without incurring delivery costs; and to that end an order of a State board acting under the statute fixed a minimum price of 10 cents per quart for sales by distributors to consumers and of 9 cents per quart for sales by stores to consumers. Held that, as applied to a storekeeper, the regulation could not be adjudged in conflict with the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment, since, in view of the facts set forth in the opinion, it appeared not to be unreasonable or arbitrary or without relation to the purpose of the legislation (pp. 530 et seq.).

4. The use of private property and the making of private contracts are, as a general rule, free from governmental interference; but they are subject to public regulation when the public need requires (p. 523).

5. The due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment conditions the exertion of regulatory power by requiring that the end shall be accomplished by methods consistent with due process; that the regulation shall not be unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious; and that the means selected shall have a real and substantial relation to the object sought to be attained (p. 525).

6. It results that a regulation valid for one sort of business, or in given circumstances, may be invalid for another sort, or for the same business under other circumstances, because the reasonableness of each regulation depends upon the relevant facts (p. 525).

7. The power of a State to regulate business in the public interest extends to the control and regulation of prices for which commodities may be sold, where price regulation is a reasonable and appropriate means of rectifying the evil calling for the regulation (pp. 531 et seq.).

8. There is no principle limiting price regulation to businesses which are public utilities, or which have a monopoly or enjoy a public grant or franchise (Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113; p. 531).

9. To say that property is "clothed with a public interest", or an industry is "affected with a public interest", means that the property or the industry, for adequate reason, is subject to control for the public good (pp. 531–536).

10. There is no closed class or category of businesses affected with a public interest; and the function of courts in the application of the fifth and fourteenth amendments is to determine in each case whether circumstances vindicate the challenged regulation as a reasonable exertion of governmental authority or condemn it as arbitrary or discriminatory (p. 536).

11. Decisions denying the power to control prices in businesses found not to be "affected with a public interest" or "clothed with a public use" must rest finally upon the basis that the requirements of due process were not met because the laws were found arbitrary in their operation and effect (p. 536).

12. So far as the requirement of due process is concerned, and in the absence of other constitutional restriction, a State is free to adopt whatever economic policy may reasonably be deemed to promote public welfare, and to enforce that policy by legislation adapted to its purpose. The courts are without authority either to declare such policy or when it is declared by the legislature to override it. If the laws passed are seen to have a reasonable relation to a proper legislative purpose, and are neither arbitrary nor discriminatory, the requirements of due process are satisfied, and judicial determination to that effect renders a court functus officio (p. 537).

13. The legislature is primarily the judge of the necessity of such an enactment; every possible presumption is in favor of its validity, and though the court may think the enactment unwise, it may not be annulled unless palpably in excess of legislative power (p. 537).

14. If the law-making body within its sphere of government concludes that the conditions or practices in an industry make unrestricted competition an inadequate safeguard of the consumer's interests, produce waste harmful to the public, threaten ultimately to cut off the supply of a commodity needed by the public, or portend the destruction of the industry itself, appropriate statutes passed in an honest effort to correct the threatened consequences may not be set aside because the regulation adopted fixes prices—reasonably deemed by the legislature to be fair to those engaged in the industry and to the consuming public (p. 538).

15. This is especially clear where the economic maladjustment is one of price, which threatens harm to the producer at one end of the series and the consumer at the other (p. 538).

16. The Constitution does not secure to anyone liberty to conduct his business in such fashion as to inflict injury upon the public at large or upon any substantial group of people (p. 539).

17. Price control, like any other form of regulation, is unconstitutional only if arbitrary, discriminatory, or demonstrably irrelevant to the policy the legislature is free to adopt, and hence an unnecessary and unwarranted interference with individual liberty (p. 539; 262 N. Y. 259; 186 N. E. 694, affirmed).

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the proposed amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, it was not my intention to enter this discussion at all, except to read an extract from a Supreme Court decision.

I do not gather that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has attacked the Supreme Court opinion. I see no reason for the emphatic and enthusiastic argument on matters which I did not at all suggest. I simply read a statement from the Supreme Court of the United States, which is the law of America. I recognize it as the law, and I think the Senate will recognize it as the law—a direct, unequivocal statement from a Supreme Court opinion. That opinion simply says, in substance, that there are certain powers given to the United States Congress. One of those powers is the power to regulate interstate commerce.

The States have the power to regulate intrastate commerce. Where that line is to be drawn, I am convinced largely depends upon the decision in each separate Supreme Court case. It is practically a question of fact. At least, one who studies the opinions of the Supreme Court on this highly controversial subject must reach that conclusion.

I do not withdraw my opinion that the Supreme Court of the United States was right when it said, in the case from which I read and in five other opinions rendered by that Court, that the Congress of the United States, in exercising its power under the interstate commerce clause, has the right in that connection to exercise a police power. I do not state exactly every transaction that is interstate and intrastate. I have my own ideas about what the Constitution meant when it gave to the Congress the right to regulate interstate commerce. I believe it meant what the early opinions said—that the Congress of the United States had the right to regulate interstate commerce as fully and completely as though it were one Nation and there were no State lines. I am not now referring to intrastate commerce, but to interstate commerce; and certainly no one can state that that would mean that the Congress had a right to go into the back door of every farmer in America and determine exactly when the farmer's wife should milk her cow and when she should churn her butter.

It is my opinion that the Supreme Court will eventually return to the early opinions written by the courts of the country and hold that with reference to the regulation of interstate commerce—not intrastate, not butter that is churned and sold to the next-door neighbor, but with reference to interstate commerce—Congress has the right, just as was said in the case to which I referred, in carrying out its authority under the commerce clause, to regulate that commerce the same as though it were one nation, as it is. If not, who has the right to regulate it?

No power within the boundaries of this Government except the Congress of the United States has the right to regulate a single thing that moves in interstate commerce. If it be not true that the Congress has that unrestricted right to regulate interstate commerce, then it is true that the power is left suspended in mid-air and nobody has the right to exercise it. It was intended to give that full and complete power.

I simply read the opinion because my colleague had made what I conceived to be a very logical argument. I did not argue the policy of the situation for which my colleague has spoken. I did not even intimate I was for or against the policy. I did say, as he had argued, that the Supreme Court of the United States has held that in the regulation of intrastate commerce the State had a police power which authorized it to fix prices.

Who has the power to regulate interstate commerce? The Congress. Who has the power to carry out the police power under that constitutional provision? The Congress. If the State has a right under the police power to fix the prices within the State on purely intrastate transactions, and if the Congress has the same right to exercise the police power with reference to interstate commerce that the State has with reference to intrastate commerce, there is no one who has logic enough or force enough or power enough to convince me that the Congress has not the right to enact price-fixing legislation under the constitutional provision. Whether that is a good policy or not, I make no statement at all.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I want to make a statement with reference to the two paragraphs which have consumed the afternoon in the way of legal argument which I hope will be or has been settled to the satisfaction of all Senators. I think we all now understand just exactly what we understood before the argument began.

These two paragraphs have reference more to the cooperatives than to anything else. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] asked me if these paragraphs do not pertain to the fostering of cooperative marketing. They do, but with this distinction: Heretofore every attempt at cooperative marketing has been a failure because the quantity handled by the cooperatives was so small and insignificant that they were bound to fail.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. Not until I get through with this explanation.

It is proposed in both paragraphs with reference to the handling that when the producers handle 50 percent with the assistance of the Government, then they may fix a minimum price in favor of the producer. That is all both sections mean.

Mr. BAILEY. The second section provides for organization of cooperatives of the producers.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; if the organization or association, or whatever is set up, has 50 percent or more of any given product.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. The first section has nothing whatever to do with cooperatives. It does not mention cooperatives. It refers to where purchases are made by handlers to the extent of 50 percent. It is only the second section that refers to cooperatives.

Mr. SMITH. But the first section has to do with the handlers of 50 percent of any given commodity—that is, those who will distribute it.

Mr. BAILEY. The handlers as a group.

Mr. SMITH. Exactly. That means the handlers of 50 percent of the commodity may fix a minimum price, but not otherwise. That is to guarantee success. They must have 50 percent because otherwise, without doubt, all efforts would prove a failure, as they have in the past.

As to all the discussion this afternoon as to constitutionality, and so forth, the two paragraphs are predicated upon a voluntary agreement among the producers——

Mr. BYRD. After my amendment shall have been adopted. The bill provides at present that 50 percent of the handlers may impose licenses upon the producers.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no; not at all. If it will relieve the Senator's mind, I think his amendment is a pretty good one, because I thought the paragraph was drawn in a rather slovenly way, but still I thought the context was sufficient to care for it. The words "and a certain percent of the producers" have nothing to do with the object of the two paragraph, and especially paragraph (G), which recognizes that all cooperation heretofore has failed because there was not at least a majority of the products in the control of the producers.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Am I perfectly safe in assuming that the benefits of the minimum price-fixing for producers will not be available except upon the sale of 50 percent of the volume of the commodity—in this case tobacco?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. "By an association or associations of producers"? That is the language of the bill.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; and that is its object.

Mr. BAILEY. "Or otherwise for the account of producers"?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I confess I do not quite understand that phrase "or otherwise for the account of producers."

Mr. SMITH. I take it that it means that wherever the producers select even a commission merchant, he may act in lieu of the cooperative.

Mr. BAILEY. That would mean they would get together in a group to sell 50 percent?

Mr. SMITH. The Senator is right.

Mr. BAILEY. Or all producers who are also handlers could get together and become handlers to do it, but it would have to be 50 percent?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; and all of it to the benefit of the producer, recognizing that the small amount handled heretofore has been the cause of the disaster to which the Senator from North Carolina referred and of which perhaps he was a victim, as I was personally, but I was doing the best I could to try to get enough of them together to control a majority of the products for the benefit of the producers.

We have a proposition here that, if a majority do come in, they may mutually agree and fix a minimum price with the Government's aid. That is all there is to it. The discussion this afternoon has been very enlightening, but very annoying to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMITH. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to ask the Senator just how this provision would operate; just what would be the procedure? If a minimum price should be fixed, how would it be enforced? How would it affect the producer to tell him that the minimum price for his product is so-and-so?

Mr. SMITH. They would get together, and a majority of those handling more than 50 percent of any given product would determine that in the movement of interstate commerce a certain price was the price upon which they had agreed. Then an order would be issued that not less than that should be paid the producer.

Mr. FLETCHER. Suppose there should not be any buyers at that figure?

Mr. SMITH. Well, suppose we had not anything to sell. We can suppose anything.

Mr. FLETCHER. But that is a very practical question. Suppose the price of grapefruit, say, were fixed at such and such a figure, and suppose nobody should be willing to pay that price.

Mr. SMITH. Let me ask the Senator, Who now fixes the price of the grapefruit of Florida?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is fixed by competition in the markets.

Mr. SMITH. Yes. Well, we have seen the results of competition in the markets. Do the Florida growers have anything to say about it? Does the Senator state before the Senate that the growers in Florida personally have any voice in fixing the price of their grapefruit?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am afraid they do not. It is a question of demand.

Mr. SMITH. Exactly; but if one of us goes downtown in Washington and undertakes to buy some grapefruit, certainly there is a fixed price there. Why not give the producers an opportunity to come in and at least fix a price which will insure a reasonable return for their fruit in the first hand, and have the Government cooperate with them in obtaining it?

Mr. FLETCHER. What I am trying to ascertain is, in case a minimum price should be fixed, and the product would not bring that price on the market, would the Government pay for it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that those fixing the price doubtless would not fix a price at which the product would not move; but, if they should do so, they could change it in 3 days.

Mr. SMITH. Let me ask the Senator from Florida a question. If a majority of the producers of the citrus fruit of Florida, which the public needs—and, God knows, they pay the price for it when it reaches here!—if 50 percent or more, by the consent of the growers, could get together and agree under the terms of this bill, on a price, and if then the Government would undertake, in the movement in interstate commerce, to say to the handlers in the course of interstate commerce, "You must give not less than that", does not the Senator believe that would be beneficial to his growers?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think very likely it would be; but does that involve the Government's controlling the amount of fruit that each shipper may ship?

Mr. SMITH. That will be done only by consent of the growers. If the Senator will read the bill he will find that the endeavor is to make all these provisions, wherever practicable, subject to the consent of the majority of the growers. The Government is trying to stand in lieu of organizations for the benefit of the growers.

Mr. FLETCHER. I realize the difficulties with which a grower now has to contend. I happen to be a small grower of grapefruit, and I sold my crop for 14 cents a box on the tree.

Mr. SMITH. And I give 5 and 10 cents a grapefruit here.

Mr. FLETCHER. Otherwise, if I should ship it, I should have to pay the cost of picking, the cost of packing, the cost of hauling, the cost of freight, the selling agent's charges, and then take what was left. In other words, the grower is working for everybody but himself.

Mr. SMITH. Exactly.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to see that situation changed, if possible.

Mr. SMITH. Let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose a majority of the grapefruit growers should get together and agree that a certain minimum price would give them a reasonable return for growing, and the Federal Government should say, "As far as we have the constitutional power to enforce that agreement in the channels of interstate commerce, we will do it." Would not the growers agree to it?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should think that would be very fair, very reasonable.

Mr. SMITH. That is all this bill does.

Mr. FLETCHER. But I am still puzzled about how the Government is going to enforce such a minimum price. If the demand is not there, the Government is not going to make good the minimum price; and in order to create the demand the supply must be regulated in some way. The Government would have to say how much fruit the market would take.

Mr. SMITH. Either the Government or the growers. I think the growers would be the ones to do it, and under the terms of the bill they might do it.

NATIONAL PULP AND PAPER REQUIREMENTS IN RELATION TO FOREST CONSERVATION (S. DOC. NO. 115)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair) laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, submitting a report on the national pulp and paper requirements in relation to forest conservation, in response to Senate Resolution 205, Seventy-third Congress (submitted by Mr. HALE), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

LT. COMDR. G. C. MANNING

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 884) for the relief of Lt. Comdr. G. C. Manning, which were on page 1, line 6, to strike out "as reimbursement" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States"; and on page 1, line 8, after "New York" to insert ": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 15, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou whose hand hath fashioned the world, and whose infinite breath quickens it, we praise Thee for the grounds of divine sovereignty. We would renew our strength, and even have the adverse things work for our good. Heavenly Father, day by day let us drink from the fountain eternal, daily feed on the heavenly manna, and may we neglect no means that shall instruct and help us. Let this be our prayer and spirit: "Thou shalt guide me with Thy counsel and afterward receive me into glory." Blessed Lord God, may we not lose the full direction nor miss the providential way. After a while shepherd us into Zion; bring us to the "city of habitation" and to everlasting glory. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 12, 1935, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6453) entitled "An act to amend the act of May 13, 1924, entitled 'An act providing for a study regarding the equitable use of the waters of the Rio Grande', etc., as amended by public resolution of March 3, 1927", disagreed to by the House, agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. CONNALLY, and Mr. JOHNSON to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 239. An act for the relief of the Barlow-Moore Tobacco Co.; and

S. 780. An act for the relief of the Standard Dredging Co.

SMUGGLING OF ALIENS INTO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes, and at the conclusion I should like to offer a resolution for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, I did not understand the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] asks unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of my remarks I propose to offer a resolution, House Resolution 271, which in substance will permit the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, seven members of which committee are to be appointed by the Speaker, to make an investigation of the smuggling of aliens along the borders.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. We granted unanimous consent to the gentleman to speak for 5 minutes. There was no consent granted the gentleman to offer any resolution, so his resolution would not be in order.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In the last 2 or 3 years a number of witnesses have come before our committee and given us some information of an alleged international smuggling ring over the Mexican border and over the Canadian border. The border patrol was created by this Congress in 1924. From information and figures, unofficial, we find there has been quite an international smuggling ring across the border.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman says they have found a great deal of smuggling across the Mexican border. What were they smuggling? Were they smuggling Mexicans or other people; and if so, who were they?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Smuggling Mexicans, and at the same time throwing over our border a number of Chinese who were smuggled into Mexico. They threw them over onto our side of the border.

Mr. RANKIN. That is what I thought.

Mr. BLANTON. We have known that for 50 years. Every month for 50 years we have known that.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. DIES. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that on June 11 the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization applied to the P. W. A. for $5,000,000 for the purpose, among other things, of increasing the patrol force along the border, and in the application the Bureau of Immigration stated they only had 800 people to patrol the entire borders, and that there was practically no protection against anyone coming across the border who saw fit?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am aware of that, but we need more than that. We want to come back to this Congress prepared to recommend legislation that will properly protect the border. Money will not do it. We must have either a reorganization of the border patrol or we must devise some means by which we can safely say that we have a border patrol. In the last number of years 24 of our men were killed in cold blood on that border. In the last few years every restrictionist who came before the committee stated that there was a group of smugglers along that border. I believe the committee in charge of this legislation should be given an opportunity to get first-hand information and find out what is wrong with our border.

Mr. BLANTON. All on God's earth the gentleman needs to do is to go back and call his committee together and vote out some of the bills that are before his committee which stops this foreign immigrant business. It takes legislation but not money.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I wish the gentleman from Texas would get this into his head——

Mr. BLANTON. I have got more in my head than the gentleman will ever have in his.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman can get something more into his head. I do not know what he has in his head, but we can pass all the laws we want to, we can pass all the restrictions we want to, and we are not going to stop certain people doing wrong things.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not have any sympathy in my head for any foreigners who are crossing our borders. I want to stop them.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I thought the gentleman would support me.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I thought the gentleman would support me.

Mr. MILLARD. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] knows the parliamentary rules of this House, and he is constantly breaking them.

The SPEAKER. The House will please be in order.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. On the northern boundary of continental United States we have 3,987 miles. On the southern border we have 2,014 miles. There are only 650 men to protect that border.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a petition to the President by the Utopian Society of America.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, I did not understand the request.

Mr. COLDEN. I asked permission to include in my extension a petition of the Utopian Society of America. This is my request.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JACK PAGE

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 298) for the relief of Jack Page, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 9, strike out all after "1898" down to and including "1898", in line 12.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LAKE B. MORRISON

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 617) for the relief of Lake B. Morrison, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read "An act for the relief of Lake B. Morrison."

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARREN. Is the Chair in a position to state what suspensions will be called today, and at what hour they will be taken up?

The SPEAKER. Not exactly, but not before 3:30. The Chair is not in a position to tell the gentleman what bills will be called up under suspension.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I was just wondering in my own mind what the suspensions are going to be or what the "must" legislation is going to be for the week.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not have any information whatsoever regarding any "must" legislation. [Applause.] The Chair just stated to the gentleman from North Carolina that the Chair was not in a position to advise what bills will be called up under suspension of the rules.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to say to the House that some 6 or 8 gentlemen want to speak this morning for periods ranging from 5 to 35 minutes. I should like to inquire of the House whether the House wants to consider the Consent Calendar or hear speeches?

Mr. BLANTON. I have asked for only 2 minutes, a very little time.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Members on this side are ready to proceed with the Consent Calendar. If we are going to consider it, we had better get started on it pretty soon.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to a Member speaking for so short a time as 2 minutes or even 5 minutes, but anything longer than that I think we ought not to permit, because Members on both sides are ready to take up the Consent Calendar; and I understand that later certain bills will be called up under suspension of the rules. I do not like to assume the responsibility of objecting to speeches; nevertheless, it seems to me some work ought to be done.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Why can we not proceed with the consideration of the Consent Calendar and wind up the day hearing these speeches? Those Members who want to hear speeches can stay after we complete the Consent Calendar and the suspensions.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, inasmuch as the gentleman from Texas so rarely talks, I am not going to object to his request, but I shall object to other requests.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, it is absolute foolishness for the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] to talk about appropriating money to investigate communism or to investigate aliens. We have had enough of that. We do not need to waste more dollars investigating.

If he really wants to stop immigration, all on earth the gentleman from New York need do, if he is as much concerned about the subject as I am, is to call his committee together and report out some of the pertinent and necessary bills that are now pending before his committee. He has plenty of such bills before his committee. If he would report some of those bills out he could have them enacted into law very quickly. This is the way to stop it.

Why, we have known about these Mexicans coming across the Rio Grande for 50 years; we have known about Chinamen coming across there; we have known about Japs coming across there; we have known for many years about foreigners from every country in the world coming across the Rio Grande. I have been trying to get Chairman DICKSTEIN to stop it. I have been trying my best to get the gentleman from New York to report out these needed bills ever since he has been chairman of this committee, but without avail; it has been futile.

I repeat, it is absolutely foolish for him to talk about wasting money on any more investigations. Let us get busy and do something to stop these immigrants, I say to my friend from New York.

Money appropriated for another investigation would be nothing in the world but another wasteful, fruitless junket. Not one new fact would be brought to light. Not one thing would be learned that we do not already know. We know all about the subject. We are thoroughly posted on it.

The time has come for us to stop these immigrants from coming here from foreign countries and taking the jobs away from our American citizens. The time has come for us to require aliens to register, and to deport them when they refuse to become good citizens. The time has come for us to deport all Communists. All it takes is a bill to be reported and passed. As chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] can report such a bill out of his committee immediately, if he wants to do so. Then why does not he do so? We cannot stop it until he does report a bill. We could spend all of the money in the Treasury investigating and yet not stop one immigrant and not deport one Communist until we pass a bill that will accomplish it.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow morning, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may be allowed to address the House for 20 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire upon what subject the gentleman from Texas desires to speak for 20 minutes?

Mr. PATMAN. I wanted to talk about the gentleman's petition to discharge the Committee on Appropriations from further consideration of his resolution.

Mr. FISH. I should like to join in that request for 20 minutes, following the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York cannot interpose a request on the request made by the gentleman from Texas. He will have to make his request separately.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object unless I can secure 20 minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. I will not object to the gentleman from New York proceeding, but I cannot grant him that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and at the conclusion of the speech of the gentleman from Texas tomorrow morning, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PUBLIC UTILITY ACT OF 1935—ALSO CALLED "HOLDING-COMPANY BILL"

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein copy of a letter which I have written to a constituent upon a very important matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following copy of letter written by me to Mr. A. E. Magill, of Houston, Tex., on the subject of the utilities holding-company bill:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 12, 1935.

Mr. A. E. MAGILL,
Kress Building, Houston, Tex.

DEAR SIR: Your welcome letter of July 8 received.

(1) I note you are disappointed at my vote on the utilities holding-company bill. I send you herewith my reasons and explanation for that vote. I think I voted absolutely right. I will not swear to uphold and defend the Constitution and then deliberately vote for a thing that I think breaks the Constitution. Again, the President and the Senate and the Democrats in the House were each and all elected on a platform that promised the American people to regulate utilities, without saying one word about wrecking them.

(2) I never had one share of stock in any utility company or any holding company in my life. I was never attorney for any utility company or holding company in my life. And I never had the support of any utility or any holding company in my life. No human being spoke to me about this bill. If there was any lobby here I certainly did not see it or even hear of it. My own opinion is that that is a mere newspaper sensation. I had no reason for my vote except the very reasons stated in this little speech enclosed to you with this that I made on July 2, 1935.

(3) I have as consistently as any man in the House supported the leadership of President Roosevelt. I am doing so yesterday, today, and tomorrow. Without him our party is lost, our country is lost and turned over again to the thieving forces. However, when I ran for Congressman I stated my own platform—those things I was for, and those things I was against. I had done my own thinking at home all my life and was willing to go down to defeat by telling the public what I was for and what I was against. They elected me on that basis. You and the rest of the 400,000 citizens cannot be here to do your own thinking and voting, so you select one of yourselves to come, and a thousand things come up here that were not anticipated at an election. A man has to follow blindly somebody else—or has to do his own thinking. I did not propose and do not propose to mind any one person on this earth if I think that person, no matter how good and no matter how wise, is in error about a position on which I must vote. In other words, I am the representative of my people and I am going to do my best sincerely to represent their highest interests. Besides, our good and great President never gives orders.

(4) In the votes we cast on this utilities holding-company bill, we did not cast any vote on utilities. It was concerning holding companies only. There is a vast difference—and yet many people are disposed to confuse the two, and because they have paid too much power bill are disposed to wreck several billions of dollars of investments in holding-company stocks by 5,000,000 people. Well, for my part, I am not going to do any such thing.

(5) I have cast hundreds and hundreds of votes here exactly as the President desired—and I have cast three votes in opposition to his views. That is a pretty good batting average, is it not? If a Congressman or a Senator must merely find out what somebody else thinks and then vote the same way every time, then his constituents would just as well elect one person as another for Congressman. In that event intellect and character and education and manhood and courage and sincerity cut no figure.

Every vote I cast results in letters praising and letters blaming. You people yourselves are cut into many factions. That is proper and fair. But it is not possible with any kind of a vote I cast to please everybody. Those who approve are not much disposed to write and say so—but those who do not approve often write me. For instance, being my political friend, and I always feel kindly toward you, you have not seen fit a single time to sit down and send me a line to tell me how fine it was that I voted with the President each time in two years and a half except on three occasions. That is your right and is all right with me—but it does illustrate human nature.

(6) I did not vote with the President on the economy bill that cut old Spanish veterans from $50 to $15, and that cut off 300,000 World War veterans, and that cut 15 percent off of the salary or wages of everybody who worked for the Government. I wanted to make big business pay that sum—and not take it out of the poor and the hungry. Don't you think I voted right in that matter? And yet that is one case where if I had followed the President you would likely have told me I should represent my people and not follow anybody else.

Again, I voted to pay the three and one-half million World War veterans their bonus. The President looked at it the other way. He is high-minded, able, and sincere. But, if the bonus law had been passed, it would have put out more than $2,000,000,000 of new money, would have paid a debt already existing, would have blessed the lives of millions of veterans and their families, would have put purchasing power in every community, and the currency would have been backed dollar for dollar with gold. Why should that not have been done? I voted to do that. Our good President, with whom I am in entire fellowship, could not see it that way. Do you not approve that vote of mine? If I had voted with the President on that matter I would have had no self respect, and would have been a vile, cringing creature in the circumstance, because I had made my campaign for Congress with the main issue paying the bonus.

(7) In the last paragraph of your letter you say these words: "The idea of (Congressmen) not wanting to record your votes is very un-American at least. I have always been taught to believe that we ought to be proud of our vote on any subject and let the world know about it."

From that it is perfectly clear to me that the newspaper report sent out by a chain of newspapers—whose object was to poison the country against Congress, so that readers would say what a great paper it is—has influenced you to believe a thing that is not true at all. Ever since this Government was established the rules of the House have provided that when a bill is taken up the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House under certain rules. Then the bill is taken up and read, section by section, and amendments are offered and debated and voted on. Perhaps as many as 50 votes may be taken on that bill. Most of the votes are voice votes—that is, those who favor say "aye" and those who oppose say "no"—and the majority wins that point. But day after day, for over 100 years, when Congress is in Committee of the Whole House, if somebody is not satisfied with that result as announced by the Chairman, he calls for a division, and in that case those who want such amendment go through the line first and the number is tabulated and stated to the Chairman, and the number who do not want such amendment then next go through that line, are counted and tabulated, and announced to the Chairman; and after that is all done the Chairman then announces so many have voted aye and so many have voted no. The reason it is done that way is because it is the only possible way in a large legislative body to get the work done. It takes about 40 minutes to call a roll of the names of 435 people and set it down and announce it. The business can be done in the way the rules provide for in a few hours or days at most on even a long and complicated bill, whereas if it were done by calling the roll on each such vote it would take a month or so to finish any long and controversial bill. We would be in session 12 months each year and never get the work done even then.

In the case of this utilities holding-company bill, the exact procedure was followed as in each and every other bill, according to usual procedure. There were perhaps 75 reporters in the gallery, and each seat was filled, the doors wide open, and the whole world seeing how each man voted if they were interested in it.

Then, in addition, when we went out of the Committee of the Whole into the House itself, we did take, as usual, a record vote of those who favored the more moderate House bill over the Senate bill that contained the "death clause", and after that we took another record vote on whether to pass the bill at all.

This takes a long time to write in this busy day, but I don't want you to fall for that newspaper bunk that said the Congress tried to hide its vote—because it is not true.

Yours truly,

JOE H. EAGLE.

EXCISE TAX ON COCONUT OIL

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, under permission to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, I want to say that on March 10, 1935, House bill 8000 was introduced by Congressman DOCKWEILER and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, where, I understand, it is now before the subcommittee, of which Congressman SAMUEL B. HILL is chairman.

I am reliably informed that if and when this bill becomes a law several additional employees will go to work in the soap industry, and, after all, this is what we want—to put people to work, and particularly without Federal funds.

More than 3,000,000 Americans are employed in industries which export extensively to the Philippines, and are, therefore, vitally concerned in the maintenance of Filipino purchasing power and favorable conditions for the easy flow of commerce between those islands and our country.

Anything that tends to constrict that market and give other nations an advantage over our exporters strikes at the well-being of the millions here engaged in the manufacture of textile products, flour, machinery, condensed and evaporated milk, and other goods which we sell to the Philippines in large quantities.

By the same token it strikes at those who supply the raw materials for our important exports to the Philippines, such as our cotton growers, dairymen, meat packers, wheat and fruit growers.

That is only a partial measure of the critical importance of the Guffey-Dockweiler bill, now pending before Congress, which would remove the burdensome tax of 3 cents a pound from coconut oil brought into the United States for industrial uses only.

That tax, deeply resented by the Philippines, imposed despite the danger signals raised by our own Government and constituting a cynical violation of economic pledges made by Congress in conferring conditional self-government on the islands, is undermining the livelihood of some 4,000,000 Filipinos producing copra and coconut oil. It is impoverishing our best foreign customer for cotton textiles, and our ninth best customer for all types of exports combined. More than that, as a palpable injustice to the Philippines, the onerous tax on an export from the islands endangers the favored position for American imports there which is so essential to use in competing with cheap goods from other countries.

Though thinly disguised as a processing tax, the impost is in effect a customs duty of more than 100 percent—this despite specific guarantees in the Tydings-McDuffie Independence Act that coconut oil and copra would be admitted duty free.

It has not the slightest revenue function, as the amounts collected go to the Philippine government, which is most anxious to eliminate the left-handed gift involved in this tax.

Neither has it any genuine protective function, since there is no adequate domestic substitute for coconut oil denatured for industrial usage. Coconut oil is needed in soap making and other processes on account of its lauric-acid content that is not found in domestic fats or oils.

The simple fact is that less than 10 percent of the domestic production of oils and fats which might in any way be related to coconut oil is used for industrial purposes. Whatever direct competition coconut oil may present to domestic goods is therefore wholly in the field of edible manufactures. Taking this factor into consideration, the Guffey-Dockweiler proposal retains the excise tax on coconut oil for edible usage, but removes it from the same import for industrial use, which absorbs about two-thirds of the total brought into the country.

The commendable anxiety of Congress to aid the American farmer has been exploited again and again by self-seeking interests in no way connected with the agricultural population. By raising the cry of "help the farmers" various special interests have succeeded in stampeding Congress into adopting legislation not even remotely to the farmer's benefit and sometimes even contrary to his interests.

The excise tax on Philippine copra and coconut oil for industrial uses is a case in point. A false impression has been created that this tax in some mysterious fashion helps the farmer. As a matter of fact, the 10 percent of domestic fats and oils in anywise affected by coconut-oil imports for industrial purposes is not only negligible in the total but consists almost entirely of inedible tallow, made by fat melters from restaurant and butcher-shop scraps. The real value of this so-called "protection" to American agriculture is nil. The disastrous effects of the tax in bringing distress and political disorders to the Philippines and in penalizing American workmen dependent on Philippine-American trade are a fantastic price to pay for such microscopic benefits.

On the other side of the scale, cotton growers, fruit growers, and dairymen have a distinct and sizable interest in keeping American exports to the Philippines at a maximum level. Dairymen on the Pacific coast have an additional interest in maintaining a normal supply of copra cake and meal, one of the most valuable feedstuffs in that region, and a byproduct of the copra-crushing industry there.

Those seeking to prevent the enactment of the Guffey-Dockweiler measure are trying to crawl under the banner of the American farmer, but they have no rightful place there. The interests of American agriculture, no less than of American industry and commerce, will be best served by removing a tax that helps nobody and works havoc for so many basic American industries.

It is well to recall the warning issued by the Department of Agriculture in March of last year against the imposition of this tax.

An important aspect of this tax proposal—

It declared in a memorandum that Secretary of State Hull transmitted to the Senate Finance Committee—is the burden which it would entail for our exporting industries, including some of the most important branches of American agriculture.

The memorandum then added:

It is especially noteworthy that agricultural products constitute an important part of our exports to the Philippines, amounting in 1932 to nearly $7,000,000 or, in other words, to 15.4 percent of the aggregate value of our exports to all countries of tobacco and dairy products, wheat flour, fruits, and vegetables. Inclusion of other agricultural products and consideration of the importance to our farming industry of such items as cotton manufactures, leather, and other commodities composed of agricultural raw materials, still further enhances the importance of the Philippine trade for American agriculture. For cotton manufactures and for condensed and evaporated milk, the Philippines are, indeed, our leading market.

Beyond these tangible losses for industry and agriculture at the exporting end, there are the effects of higher coconut-oil prices on American factories which must use this ingredient in processes for which there is no domestic equivalent. Already many smaller soap-making plants have been forced to shut down because the lauric acid supplied by coconut oil costs them more than they could shoulder. Already foreign soaps are making inroads in our domestic market on a price basis because of the additional costs of the coconut oil, and American soap manufacturers are placed at a serious disadvantage in competing with other nations in the world market.

The Guffey-Dockweiler bill thus serves no special interest but answers the needs of every group in our population. At the same time it rights a wrong imposed upon 14,000,000 Filipinos still under our flag.

Every dictate of wise political policy and far-reaching economic self-interest points to the importance of removing the excise tax on coconut oil and copra imports denatured for industrial use. I heartily endorse the bill and urge its passage.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, following the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, and at the conclusion of the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], I be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the majority leader is going to have a continuation of debate here on a particular subject tomorrow, or proceed to do the business that is at hand?

Mr. BLANTON. We can meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning and get all of these speeches out of the way.

Mr. RANKIN. No. We are not going to meet at 11 o'clock to listen to speeches.

Mr. MILLARD. Upon what subject does the gentleman desire to speak tomorrow?

Mr. TRUAX. I will talk about the same subject that will be discussed by the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I object. I think 40 minutes of that will be enough.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-five Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 125]

Andrew, Mass.	Corning	Kimball	Ransley
Andrews, N. Y.	Darden	Knutson	Robertson

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-four Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

THE BLESSINGS OF STABILITY

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered by myself at the Institute of Political Affairs, University of Virginia, on July 12.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech which I delivered at the Institute of Political Affairs, University of Virginia, on July 12, 1935:

When we glance over the world of today we cannot escape the conclusion that the political institution generally denominated democracy is facing a crisis. Prior to the World War most of the nations of Europe were devoted to the democratic ideal and there seemed to be little doubt that, step by step, the nations, with few exceptions, were gaining ground toward the objective, government by the people. For years prior to 1914 autocratic governments, governments in control of privileged classes, despotic governments, encountered emphatic challenges in ever increasing number—challenges uttered by those who, devoted to a true liberalism, insisted upon the American theory that governments should derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. As the years passed the challengers made headway and the general tendency was in the direction of a more effective democracy. The movement even spread to the ancient peoples of Asia. Here and there were exceptions, in that in certain countries the challengers, though persistent, accomplished little. But these exceptions proved the rule. With the Great War the movement was halted, for during that crisis internal political differences were largely forgotten and in most nations, by common consent, all efforts were concentrated upon the objectives of the war itself.

For a comparatively short period following the cessation of hostilities a great wave of democratic feeling seemed to spread over the world and justify the hope that government by the people would shortly go forward with tremendous strides. In fact, this hope had been voiced in the slogan, "Make the world safe for democracy." For that short period the tendency was all in the direction of democracy, and the hopes of millions of people who prior to that time had lived under autocratic government were raised as never before. Shortly, however, those hopes were shattered, and in large measure they lie shattered today. For example, in Russia, where the Romanoffs had ruled for generations with scarce any approach toward government by the people, the imperial dynasty was overthrown, and for a brief moment a government was set up parliamentary in form, to the great joy of the liberals. It lived but a day and was succeeded by a regime which achieved power by the exercise of force and has kept that great nation to this very hour subject to a dictatorship no less complete and intolerable than that of the Czars. In Italy, where the parliamentary form had existed for years, a national political crisis resulted in its overthrow and the establishment in its place of a virtual dictatorship under the leadership of the impelling Mussolini. Scarce any of the elements of democracy survive in that nation. In Germany the imperial government perished with the departure of the Hohenzollerns and a republic was set up to take its place. It lasted but a few years, and now that great people have given themselves up to a dictatorship established and maintained by the picturesque Hitler.

In Austria, in Hungary, and in other European countries the attempts to reach the more democratic form since the war have been virtual failures, and we find in most of them dictatorships more or less complete. Apparently the world is today less safe for democracy than it has been for a long, long time. For the time being at least the true liberal must drink of a bitter cup when he contemplates what has been going on over the world in these last few years. This wide-spread reversal of the trend which we were all counting upon so confidently only a few years ago should give pause to all thoughtful people. Even we Americans would better do some thinking for ourselves, for there are among us many who contend that our Government in its present form has outlived its usefulness and should be changed in most substantial fashion. If we are to give serious consideration to such proposals (and I assume we should, for they are being pressed upon us with great energy) we would better first take into account an extraordinary fact—one which I have endeavored to emphasize upon several occasions in the past. That fact is that the Government of the United States is today, with certain very minor exceptions, the oldest Government upon the face of the earth. By that I mean that it has been in existence, without substantial change in its form or in the principles underlying it, longer than the present-day government of any other important nation. Such a statement may come as a surprise to those who are accustomed to regard us as a very youthful nation. True, we are a young nation, but compared to others our Government is very, very old.

Let us look into it for a moment. Washington was our first President. He took office in 1789. In that year the new Government of the United States started to function in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution which had been ratified by the requisite number of States a short time before. That Government, under the Constitution, has been functioning ever since without substantial change in form or in underlying principle. It functions today, despite some attacks upon it—attacks, happily, unsuccessful. Compare that record with that of other governments. Since 1789 France had seen a succession of monarchial, terroristic, imperial, republican, monarchial, and imperial again, and, finally, republican governments. Since 1789 Spain has seen at least 2 republics, 2 monarchies, and 1 practical dictatorship. The principalities and petty kingdoms of the Italian Peninsula were not welded together until the 1850's under the leadership of Cavour. Our Government was more than 60 years old at the time. It was not until 1870 that the German kingdoms and states were merged under one imperial government by Bismarck. Now, the Hohenzollerns are gone and we have seen two distinct governments since they departed. I have already mentioned Russia. In that great nation the Romanoffs are gone and we have Stalin. The Austro-Hungarian Empire has been scattered to the winds, the Hapsburgs are gone, and its constituent states have been set up under separate governments as lately as 1919. In several of them dictatorship has already displaced the parliamentary form. Follow the story down into the Balkan Peninsula and we find nothing but change and disruption.

Approaching the Bosporus, we no longer find a Sultan wielding despotic power and hailed as defender of the faithful. Mustapha Kemel and his followers established a Republic across the straits in Asia Minor only a few years ago. Turning our attention to more ancient peoples, we find that only about a generation ago the Manchus were expelled from the imperial throne of China and desperate efforts inaugurated to establish a republic—efforts characterized by a welter of banditry and blood. Prior to 1850 the Shogunate wielded its despotic power in Japan. It was not until an American naval officer, Commodore Perry, dropped in at a Japanese port in the middle of the nineteenth century that the Japanese people consented to have dealings with the rest of the world. That consent was followed shortly by the establishment of that parliamentary form of government which today rules over Nippon. Even in Great Britain, whose people have contributed so tremendously to the cause of liberty, whose government for generations has been stable far, far above the average, we find a substantial change taking place only a few years before the World War. In 1911, I think it was, pressure against a small remnant of class rule in Great Britain became so great as to result in taking away from the House of Lords that equal legislative power which it had enjoyed along with the House of Commons and giving to the latter practically exclusive control over all money bills—a change as substantial as if we were to exclude the Senate of the United States from all consideration of taxes, revenues, and appropriations and concentrate their consideration in the House of Representatives.

I have not time to trace the story of all the governments, but I think I have followed it far enough to prove the substantial correctness of my assertion that of all great governments, the Government of the United States is the oldest. Dynasties have toppled from their thrones. Democracies in one form or another have been set up and have tumbled down. Revolutions have come and gone. Power has been transferred from one extreme to the other, from the democratic to the dictatorial. Nearly all the world has been in a state of flux and instability, and yet through it all, ever since 1789, our Government has stood like a rock. This is not a mere accident. There must be some reason for it. Ours is an intelligent people, but I do not think our intelligence so superlative as to make us proof against error. We are humans, and under ordinary circumstances we would probably make as many mistakes as other people. There must be something in the circumstances themselves, something out of the ordinary, which has kept us comparatively free of destructive error. In fact, there must be something in the form of our Government and in its philosophy which accounts for this extraordinary record. To identify it and understand it we must go to the Constitution, the fundamental law upon which our Government is founded. Its authors dreaded the tyranny which comes from a concentration of power in the hands of one man or group in the Government, and they knew that parliaments, swayed by ruthless majorities, could be just as tyrannical as kings. Hence the checks and balances which prevent either the Congress or the Chief Executive acquiring complete predominance. Should one subdue the other, we would have despotism in short order. We came perilously near it with the impeachment of Andrew Johnson.

The pendulum of prestige may swing a little from the legislative toward the executive and back again, but year in and year out the balance is pretty well preserved and no true liberal can assent to its destruction. I like to think of the continued maintenance of this balance as the carrying out of a pledge made by our forefathers, binding upon themselves and upon their posterity—a pledge that liberty shall live. Occasionally the Congress or the Executive steps over the line, whereupon any citizen, feeling himself injured, may appeal for a judicial determination of his rights. The judicial power is vested in a Supreme Court, and the final determination of the citizen's rights, guaranteed to him by the covenant which binds us all, is reached by that independent body. Those who complain against the power of the Court to declare an act of the Congress or of the Executive unconstitutional, and thus null and void, must, if they are consistent, assent to the proposition that the citizen may not appeal to the Court for relief against oppression at the hands of his Government. With that privilege gone, liberty as we know it would soon be an ephemeral thing. The function of the Supreme Court in this respect is unique. Scarcely any other government includes such an institution. Far from being an engine of oppression or obstruction, the Court helps us to preserve our liberty—that liberty which we insist upon in our Constitution. It helps us to remain faithful to a great ideal—an ideal which in our sober moments we would never abandon. It is the great stabilizer. In very large measure it is responsible for ours being the oldest of governments. Can any thoughtful person ignore the blessings which flow from that stability? Take a look around the world. With what nation would we change places?

I have already stated that a demand for a change has been heard in this country. It reached considerable proportions with the advent of the present administration. A number of measures, some of them affecting agriculture, some industry, and some the monetary system, have been passed, which, viewed collectively, present a new conception of government and which, if thoroughly established and maintained, will transform it into something very, very different from the government we have become accustomed to. These measures are intended to inaugurate and carry on a "planned economy", to use the phrase coined by the President. They involve a very wide extension of the Federal power over agriculture, industry, the management of the price level, and the control of credit. That the advocates of this conception of the proper function of government, from the President down, are perfectly sincere cannot be questioned, else these measures would not have been urged so emphatically nor would we find each one of them fitting in so perfectly with all the others as to become a part of a general scheme. It is contended that the time has come for the central government to help plan and to control to an important degree the ways and means by which the citizen seeks to earn his living. The plans must be approved by the Government and in certain cases may be actually promulgated by the Government. The scheme generally includes machinery for ascertaining the wishes of a majority of the persons engaged in a given business. If the wish of the majority is satisfactory to the Government, then it is to be translated into a set of regulations which are to have the force of law. The protesting minority is to be bound by the regulations just as securely as the assenting majority. The prosecuting machinery found in the Federal courts is to be employed by the Government in punishing those who disobey. Thus the element of force enters into the situation. Indeed, it is essential that force be employed if we are to have a planned economy.

Aside from its purely constitutional aspects we encounter in this scheme a new principle, to wit, that a majority, backed by the power of the Government, may determine how the minority shall earn its living. With the support of Government 100 men engaged in a certain business can impose a rule of conduct upon 75 men engaged in the same business. This reaches deep down into the roots of our existence and implies an appalling change in the American conception of liberty. It deprives the individual of his freedom of choice as to the means by which he shall pursue happiness, and thus runs directly contrary to the ideal expressed in the Declaration of Independence. It might be interesting to discuss whether or not any government is so endowed with wisdom as to enable it effectively to plan the economy of all its citizens. We may very well doubt it, but that element of the problem is comparatively unimportant. The all important and fundamental element can be expressed in the questions: "What is to become of liberty as we have known it since 1789?" "Is it to be supplanted by regimentation?" "Is the citizen to be the master or the subject?" These are questions that are actually facing us today. They have been brought out into the light of the recent Supreme Court decision. In passing the National Industrial Recovery Act the Congress sought to extend its power under the interstate commerce clause in the Constitution to the regulation of a business carried on within a State on the theory, it is to be presumed, that all business, great and small, in some way or other finally affects interstate commerce. This theory, if accepted and carried to its logical conclusion, would mean there is no limit whatsoever to the powers of the Federal Government.

The Court, in its unanimous opinion, pointed out that the particular business involved in the suit affected interstate commerce only remotely, that it was essentially intrastate in character and thus outside the scope of Federal power. The decision served as a sharp and enlightening reminder that our Federal Government may exercise only those powers which are delegated to it and that the powers not delegated are reserved to the States and to the people as provided in the tenth amendment. The tenth amendment, so often overlooked, must now become the subject of Nation-wide discussion and understanding. Its vast importance is now apparent. To get a better understanding of it, let us go back to 1788 when the new Constitution, written by the Philadelphia Convention of 1787, was before the Thirteen States for ratification. The people of that day were very jealous, were very fearful and suspicious of concentrated power. They agreed that we must have some central government, but they feared that the Government would take more and more power to itself as the years went by and finally become oppressive over the people in their communities and in their local affairs. They demanded that certain specific limitations or prohibitions directed against the new Government should be included in the fundamental law, else they would oppose ratification. What might be a gentlemen's agreement was finally reached, to the effect that immediately upon the establishment of the new Government the Congress should submit to the States a series of amendments designed to protect the individual in the enjoyment of certain rights and privileges deemed essential to the preservation of his liberty. So the First Congress submitted 12 amendments. Ten of them had to do with the preservation of liberty as against encroachment by the Government. The remaining two related to other subjects and have never been ratified.

Those first 10 amendments have been known ever since as the "Bill of Rights", and have been regarded generally as a part of the original instrument. Paraphrasing them, they are the voice of the people saying to their Government, "Thou shalt not deprive us of freedom of speech or of a free press. Thou shalt not seek to control the manner in which we worship God. Thou shalt accord to every one of us the right of trial by jury. Thou shalt not unreasonably search our houses or seize our private papers. Thou shalt not quarter troops upon us in time of peace. Thou shalt not take our property except by due process of law and with just compensation." Thus the people voiced commands to be obeyed by their Government. Then, as if to make assurance doubly sure, they said to their Government, "We have delegated certain powers to you. Go ahead and exercise them. And remember that we reserve for the States and for ourselves, the people, all powers not delegated. Keep your hands off until you get our permission in the manner prescribed." There is your tenth amendment. In a very real sense it is the keystone in the arch of the Federal Union of States. Blast it away and you transform our whole Government from that of a Federal Union to one imperial in character.

However that may be, let's return to that decision for a moment and consider its implications a little further. The Court made it very clear that the Federal power does not extend over the business of manufacturing or the business of farming conducted within a State; that the conduct of those businesses was not interstate in character but intrastate. This being the case, the power to regulate farming and industry is reserved to the States and to the people. The famous N. R. A. with its codes has simply ceased to exist. Practically all manufacturing and all merchandising carried on within a State are out of the picture of Federal control. You will find the administration and its supporters in the Congress struggling to give the Agricultural Adjustment Act some color of constitutionality by a change of verbiage here and there—a desperate attempt to save it. But it is doomed as an effective compelling Federal agency, for if the Federal Government cannot regulate a manufacturing plant it cannot regulate a farm. The same may be said of the Labor Disputes Act recently signed. Its provisions regulating the relations to be maintained between employer and employee are doomed just as surely as was the effort of the Federal Government to regulate the chicken picker in the Schechter plant in Brooklyn under an N. R. A. code. Indeed, it would seem that the whole program for a planned economy under the forceful supervision of the Federal Government has fallen to the ground, for the simple reason that the people have delegated no such power to the Central Government but rather have reserved these powers to themselves and to the States.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the President should greet the decision of the Supreme Court with certain evidences of dismay. In his carefully planned statement to the press correspondents, delivered 4 or 5 days after the decision was handed down, Mr. Roosevelt made plain his disappointment. Incidentaly he made it exceedingly plain that he has abandoned the strong views he entertained only 4 or 5 years ago when he was Governor of New York regarding the grave menace of Federal encroachment into those fields of power reserved to the States and to the people. He has a perfect right to change his mind. But in changing it he has made the issue exceeding clear. For that we should be grateful to him. In effect he contends that the Government of the United States should possess all these powers for the regulation of factories, stores, repair shops, farms, ranches, and every other business or avocation pursued by men; that it is a great pity that the Supreme Court has found that the Government does not possess such power; that the people themselves must decide this thing, not this year, perhaps, but within 4 or 5 years. Obviously the central Government cannot be put into possession of these powers except by an amendment to the Constitution itself specifically delegating them to it. So when the President says that the people must decide he must mean that they must make the decision through the ratification or the rejection of an appropriate amendment submitted and passed upon in accordance with the amendatory article of the Constitution.

While the President refrained from urging the adoption of an amendment, the plain fact is the vast program of planned economy under the new deal cannot be put into effect without an amendment. That's all there is to it and we might just as well face it. If this administration is to be consistent it must press for such an amendment. Failure to do so would mean abandonment of the new-deal program by its own champions. I am well aware that it is rash to prophesy concerning political developments in the future, but I venture to state as my belief that the questions involved in the preservation or abandonment of the tenth amendment, that keystone of the arch, will be pressed upon the attention of the American electorate in 1936. It is very doubtful that it can be settled in one election. The subject is too big. It may take several years. Unless I am very much mistaken a fundamental question is arising in this country of vastly greater importance than anything which we have faced in generations.

The issue involved in the eighteenth amendment was indeed fundamental, but its potentiality, its ramifications, its effect upon the life of the Nation will seem of dwarf-like insignificance when compared to the immensity of the decision which must be rendered finally by the people with respect to the tenth amendment and the preservation of a Federal union of States. Shall we join the procession in which we see so many European nations marching, abandon the form of government which we have maintained since 1789, and concentrate at a central point power sufficient to compel, day by day, the honest citizen to pursue his honest happiness as those in authority shall prescribe? If so, what of liberty, that aspiration which lives deeper in the human soul than any other, that intangible yet precious thing for which men have struggled for centuries, that blessing which, never conferred, must always be earned? It must be the devout prayer of liberals the world over that Americans shall guard well this liberty that Americans have earned, not only for their own sake but for the sake of mankind. Let there be at least one light shining steadily in a darkened world.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the gentleman could not put that off until after we have had a couple of hours on this Consent Calendar. I appreciate the gentleman hardly ever asks for time, and I appreciate also the respect which everybody has for him and I shall withdraw my objection if it is inconvenient for him to come back.

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak for 5 minutes at this time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

FRAZIER-LEMKE BILL

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, for 5 minutes or less I want to speak about something pleasant, something that will sooth your jagged nerves and make you forget the heat and be willing to stay here until the next session convenes if necessary. What I want to speak about today is the petition filed by our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE], known as "petition no. 7", to have the Frazier-Lemke bill brought to the floor of the House for scanning, discussion, and analysis. It is only fair that this should be done.

Mr. Speaker, there are almost a sufficient number of signatures on the petition. All that is necessary is a few more; perhaps a half dozen. There are reasons why some men should sign this petition who have not done so up to the present time. I have been around among the Members of the House, and I find that the objection made by some of them is that the administration is opposed to this bill. I am reliably informed that the administration is not opposed to it; so there you have a fine example of fair-mindedness on the part of the administration. Then, besides that, I have signed the petition. So there are two great examples for you to follow. [Applause.]

The reason I am eager personally to see this petition signed is because when I go home to California, my constituents and neighbors are going to come to me and say: "You were a fine bunch there in Congress. You gagged yourselves. You allowed yourselves to be gagged." I want to be able to say to them: "How come we were gagged?"

"Well, you had a gag rule." I want to be able to say, "Gag rule, your grandmother, no such thing; if we wanted a bill brought out on the floor all we had to do was to sign a petition and get 218 Members to sign it. Look at petition no. 7 for considering the Lemke bill. We got the signers for that and nobody gagged us, nobody tried to gag us, nobody wanted to gag us; we are a free body, the greatest deliberative body in the world and would not permit anybody to gag us." [Laughter and applause.]

Now, I want you all to be good sports. The distinguished gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE] is a very useful Member of this House. The purpose of this bill is to help people, but in signing the petition you are not committing yourself to the bill at all. All we want is to have it brought out on the floor of the House and let us take it apart and look at it.

So I trust there will be a sufficient number sign this petition right away, today. I should like to see the Members of the House stampede right now up to the Clerk's desk and sign this petition.

Mr. LUNDEEN. How many names are on the petition now?

Mr. McGROARTY. There are over 200 names on the petition now. We are so near the necessary number it will just take a little shove to put it over. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

CENTRAL STATISTICAL COMMITTEE AND CENTRAL STATISTICAL BOARD

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7590) to create a Central Statistical Committee and a Central Statistical Board, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "of", insert "the Secretary of the Treasury."

Page 2, line 5, after the word "President", insert "with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am one of those who thought this was a bad bill when it was up for consideration. I think we ought to have an explanation of the bill and the effect of the Senate amendment before we agree to the request. Will the gentleman tell us what the amendments do?

Mr. GASQUE. The amendments add the Secretary of the Treasury to the general Cabinet set-up with respect to the Central Statistical Board, and another amendment provides that the chairman of the acting Board shall be confirmed by the Senate when appointed by the President. Another amendment strikes out the words "competitive examination" for the persons who compose this bill and leaves them subject to noncompetitive examinations.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I think under the circumstances I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

House Resolution 295

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of S. 1404, an act to promote the efficiency of the national defense. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Committee on Military Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION FACILITY, ALEXANDRIA, LA.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3038) to authorize the transfer of certain lands in Rapides Parish, La., to the State of Louisiana for the purpose of a State highway across a portion of the Federal property occupied by the Veterans' Administration facility, Alexandria, La., and consider the same.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, this bill simply provides for the transfer of some land in order to get a road through the Veterans' Administration facility?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes; and they are very anxious to have this done. The bill involves no appropriation and no expense whatever.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the State of Louisiana, without expense to the Government of the United States, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a certain strip of land crossing the Veterans' Administration facility at Alexandria, La., along the Alexandria-Shreveport Highway, State route no. 1, and State route no. 615, in sections 1 and 2, township 4 north, range 1 west, Rapides Parish, La., upon condition that it shall always be used and maintained as a public highway, said strip of land being described as follows:

Beginning at a point in the located center line of the Alexandria-Colfax Highway at Engineer's station 152 plus 05.3, which point is in the south line of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 1, township 4 north, range 1 west, and north 89°54′ east, a distance of 325.5 feet from the southwest corner of the said northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 1, township 4 north, range 1 west; thence north 89°54′ east, along the said south line of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 1, a distance of 51.37 feet to a point in the easterly right-of-way line of the Alexandria-Colfax Highway, said point being 50 feet easterly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence along the easterly right-of-way line of said highway, the following two courses: Northwesterly along a curve to the left having a radius of 3,204.03 feet, a distance of 283.92 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the left; thence north 17°6′ west, a distance of 1,637.37 feet to a point in the mesh-wire fence enclosing residence lot, said point being 50 feet easterly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence south 68°1′ west, along said fence line, a distance of 20.07 feet to a point, said point being 30 feet easterly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence along the easterly right-of-way line of the aforementioned highway, the following courses: North 17°6′ west, a distance of 121.3 feet to the point of the beginning of a curve to the right; thence northwesterly along a curve to the right having a radius of 5,699.65 feet, a distance of 310.04 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the right; thence north 13°59′ west, a distance of 306.6 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the left; thence northwesterly along a curve to the left having a radius of 746.78 feet, a distance of 224.4 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the left; thence north 31°12′ west, a distance of 626 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the left; thence northwesterly along a curve to the left having a radius of 508.34 feet, a distance of 261.43 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the left; thence north 60°40′ west, a distance of 338.9 feet to a point, said point being 30 feet northeasterly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line, same point also being 30 feet northeasterly and at right angles to the center line of the existing concrete highway from Alexandria toward Shreveport; thence north 29°20′ east, a distance of 10 feet to a point, said point being 40 feet northeasterly and at right angles to the aforementioned center lines; thence along the easterly right-of-way of the road from Alexandria toward Shreveport, the following two courses: North 60°40′ west, a distance of 113.15 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the right; thence northwesterly along a curve to the right having a radius of 429.64 feet, a distance of 363.79 feet, more or less, to a point in the north line of section 2, township 4 north, range 1 west, same being in the north boundary line of the Veterans' Administration property, said point also being 40 feet easterly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence along the said north line of section 2 and the north boundary line of the Veterans' Administration property and crossing the aforementioned highway, the following two courses: West a distance of 40.84 feet to the center line of the existing concrete highway at Engineer's station 197 plus 93.8; thence west a distance of 40.7 feet to a point in a curve to the left in the westerly right-of-way line of the existing concrete highway from Alexandria toward Shreveport, said point being 40 feet westerly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence southeasterly along said curve to the left having a radius of 509.64 feet, a distance of 198.9 feet to a point, said point being 40 feet westerly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line and said point also being 30 feet northeasterly and at right angles to the highway leading to Regollet; thence along the northeasterly right-of-way of said highway leading to Regolett, the following two courses: North 60°40′ west, a distance of 75.24 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the left; thence northwesterly along a curve to the left having a radius of 1,303.57 feet, a distance of 397.58 feet, more or less, to a point in the north line of section 2, township 4 north, range 1 west, same being in the north boundary line of the Veterans' Administration property, said point also being 30 feet northerly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence along the said north line of section 2 and the north boundary line of the Veterans' Administration property and crossing the aforementioned highway, the following two courses: West a distance of 185.26 feet to the center line of the highway leading to Regollet; thence west a distance of 198.33 feet to a point in the westerly right-of-way line of the highway leading to Regollet; thence along the westerly right-of-way of the aforementioned highways, the following courses: South 81°18′ east, a distance of 307.35 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the right, said point being 30 feet southwesterly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence along a curve to the right having a radius of 1,243.57 feet, a distance of 447.83 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the right; thence south 60°40′ east, a distance of 767.2 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the right; thence southeasterly along a curve to the right having a radius of 448.34 feet, a distance of 230.58 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the right; thence south 31°12′ east, a distance of 626 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the right; thence along a curve to the right having a radius of 686.78 feet, a distance of 206.37 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the right; thence south 13°59′ east, a distance of 306.6 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the left; thence along a curve to the left having a radius of 5,759.65 feet, a distance of 313.3 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the left; thence south 17°6′ east, a distance of 131,58 feet to the corner of a mesh wire fence, said point being 30 feet westerly and at right angles to the center line of the Alexandria-Colfax Highway; thence south 51°36′ west, along said mesh wire fence, a distance of 21.47 feet to a point, said point being 50 feet westerly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence south 17°6′ east, a distance of 1,617.88 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the right; thence along a curve to the right having a radius of 3,104.03 feet, a distance of 251.92 feet, more or less, to the south line of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 1, township 4 north, range 1 west, same being in the southerly boundary line of the Veterans' Administration property, said point also being 50 feet westerly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence along the said south line of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 1 and the south boundary line of the Veterans' Administration property, north 89°54′ east, a distance of 51.21 feet to the point of beginning; containing in all 9.188 acres, more or less, and being shown in detail on a map showing the right-of-way required by the Louisiana Highway Commission through lands of the Veterans' Administration facility in sections 1 and 2, township 4 north, range 1 west, Rapides Parish, La., and dated April 24, 1935.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 8653) was laid on the table.

THE FIRST SESSION OF THE SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not going to object, but I am giving notice that this is the last request that I shall not object to.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman gave that notice a little while ago, and he ought to now live up to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons why the House and Senate should quickly adjourn this session of the Seventy-fourth Congress. [Applause.]

It is impossible to state all of these reasons in 2 minutes. Chief among the reasons is the fact that more than 20 of our colleagues—to be exact, 26—are now either in hospitals or at their homes suffering from heart trouble or a nervous break-down. This Congress has worked long, and faithfully, and well, and, personally, I insist that the Senate bring its business quickly to an end so that we may agree on the matters that must be agreed upon between the House and the Senate, and that all future hearings on House bills, many of which I am for, be extended until a session in the fall or the next session beginning in January. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the Membership of the House, as a matter of justice to our colleagues who are now ill and some of our colleagues who are not physically able to stay here from day to day, that we also impress upon the President the importance of bringing this Congress to an immediate close. In my opinion, it will be welcomed by the great majority of the people in the whole country.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEEN. I cannot yield.

This share-the-wealth, soak-the-rich, and save-the-poor legislation, some of which I am in favor of, can wait 6 months longer, because the rich will not get too rich in a few more months, and the wealth can then be shared and the poor are being taken care of now, and I am personally appealing to the Membership of the House to let us adjourn this session immediately. [Applause.]

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the Consent Calendar.

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 5731, to amend in certain particulars the act approved February 28, 1925, entitled "An act to provide for the creation, organization, administration, and maintenance of a Naval Reserve and a Marine Corps Reserve", as amended, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, by request of the Chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GRAZING RESERVE FOR INDIANS, FORT M'DERMITT, NEV.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 4126, to reserve certain public-domain lands in Nevada and Oregon as a grazing reserve for Indians of Fort McDermitt, Nev.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PIERCE. I object.

SHOALWATER INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6236, to authorize the creation of an Indian village within the Shoalwater Indian Reservation, Wash., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Reserving the right to object, what is the need of this legislation?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. This land is necessary for a town site or Indian village to be created.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Is this a part of the program to set up little soviet Indian villages throughout the country?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Well, I cannot answer that question.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON, Mr. ANDRESEN, and Mr. TABER objected.

RICE LAKE—CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6963, to amend an act entitled "An act setting aside Rice Lake and contiguous lands in Minnesota for the exclusive use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota", approved June 23, 1926, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BOILEAU. Reserving the right to object, I should like to say that I have consulted the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and he is satisfied to have a bill passed if it excludes the Pigeon Reservation. Will the gentleman agree to an amendment to that effect?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill on the Speaker's table will be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 2532

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act setting aside Rice Lake and contiguous lands in Minnesota for the exclusive use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota", approved June 23, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 763), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That there be, and is hereby, created within the county of Clearwater, State of Minnesota, a permanent reserve to be known as 'Wild Rice Lake Indian Reserve', which reserve shall include Rice Lake and the following-described contiguous lands: Beginning at the northwest corner of the northeast quarter southeast quarter section 8, township 145 north, range 38 west, and running due east to the northeast corner of southeast quarter section 9; thence south to northeast corner of northeast quarter section 16; thence due east to northeast corner of northeast quarter section 14, township 145 north, range 38 west; thence due south to southeast corner of northeast quarter section 2, township 144 north, range 38 west; thence due west to southwest corner of northwest quarter section 3 of said township and range; thence due north to southwest corner of northwest quarter section 15, township 145 north, range 38 west; thence due west to southwest corner of northwest quarter section 16; thence due north to northwest corner of northwest quarter said section 16; thence west to southwest corner of southeast quarter southeast quarter section 8; thence north to point of beginning, which, excluding the lake bed, contains approximately 4,500 acres.

"SEC. 2. All unallotted and undisposed-of public or Indian lands held in trust by the United States within the area described in section 1 hereof are hereby permanently withdrawn from sale or other disposition and are made a part of said reserve; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to (a) accept in the name of the United States voluntary conditional grants, conditioned only upon the continued permanent use of said lands for the purpose hereinafter stated, and none other, of any lands within said reserved area now held in public, private, State, or Indian ownership; (b) acquire by purchase any of said lands not so conditionally granted at such price as he may deem fair and equitable; or (c) acquire by condemnation any of said lands not acquired by conditional grants or by purchase, so as to vest in the United States for the purposes of this act good title to all land included in any such reserve.

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to establish not to exceed three additional wild-rice reserves in the State of Minnesota, which shall include wild-rice-bearing lakes situated convenient to Chippewa Indian communities or settlements, including all lands which, in the judgment of said Secretary, are necessary to the proper establishment and maintenance of said reserves and the control of the water levels of the lakes. The Secretary is authorized to withdraw and acquire, on the same terms provided in section 2 hereof, all lands which, in his judgment, may be necessary for the proper establishment, control, maintenance, and operation of any reserve established under this section.

"SEC. 4. Any reserves established under this act, including the water levels therein, shall be maintained and operated under the supervision and control of the Secretary of the Interior, in conformity with such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the primary purpose of conserving wild-rice beds for the exclusive use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota. The said Secretary, upon such terms and conditions as he may deem proper, may enter into an agreement in writing with the State of Minnesota, through its department of conservation, or other proper State agency, for the administration of any reserve created under this act, and for its use for other or different purposes, conditioned only that such other and different uses shall not impair the primary purpose for which said reserve was created and its administration in strict conformity with said rules and regulations prescribed by said Secretary.

"SEC. 5. All costs of establishing the reserves herein authorized, including the acquisition of the lands and the construction of dams or other structures to regulate the water levels, are hereby authorized to be paid by the Secretary of the Interior out of the trust funds of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota in the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 19, after the word "lakes", strike out the period, insert a semicolon and the following: "Provided, however, That there shall be, and hereby is, excluded from said reserves any and all areas, whether of land or water, necessary or useful for the development to the maximum of waterpower or the improvement of navigation in the Pigeon River, an international boundary stream, and tributary lakes and streams."

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs approved of that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 6963) was laid on the table.

CONFERRING JURISDICTION ON UNITED STATES COURTS OVER OSAGE INDIAN DRUG AND LIQUOR ADDICTS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6625) conferring jurisdiction on United States district courts over Osage Indian drug and liquor addicts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been passed over twice. I shall have to object to that request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5452) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The SPEAKER. This bill requires three objections. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK, Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania, Mr. MILLARD, Mr. HANCOCK of New York, and Mr. HESS objected.

LONGEVITY PAY, 1933, 1934, AND 1935

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6512) to authorize the crediting of service rendered by personnel (active or retired) subsequent to June 30, 1932, in the computation of their active or retired pay after June 30, 1935.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the suspension during the fiscal years 1933, 1934, and 1935 of the longevity increases provided for in the tenth paragraph of section 1 of the Pay Adjustment Act of 1922, the personnel (active or retired) so affected shall be credited with service rendered subsequently to June 30, 1932, in computing their active or retired pay accruing subsequently to June 30, 1935: Provided, That this section shall not be construed as authorizing the payment of back longevity pay for the fiscal years 1933, 1934, and 1935 which would have been paid during such years but for the suspension aforesaid.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RELIEF OF PERTH AMBOY, N. J.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5789) for the relief of the city of Perth Amboy, N. J.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill, S. 156, will be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the city of Perth Amboy, N. J., for the recovery of money expended in 1918 by the city of Perth Amboy pursuant to an alleged agreement with the United States to extend the city's water system for the purpose of supplying water to the Raritan Arsenal and Colonial Base Hospital, No. 2, less the present estimated value of the equipment installed under such agreement.

SEC. 2. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations, except that said city shall be required to give sufficient assurance to the United States that it will preserve the facilities for furnishing water on account of which this claim is made and will not destroy or render them unfit for use except with the consent of the Secretary of War. Proceedings for the determination of such claim, and appeals from any payment of any judgment thereon, shall be in the same manner as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 5789) was laid on the table.

AID IN PROVIDING PARK FACILITIES, ETC.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6594) to aid in providing the people of the United States with adequate facilities for park, parkway, and recreational-area purposes, and to provide for the transfer of certain lands chiefly valuable for such purposes to States and political subdivisions thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLARD, Mr. PLUMLEY, Mr. TRUAX, and Mr. McFARLANE objected.

RELIEF OF PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 129, to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Porto Rico", approved December 21, 1928, to permit an adjudication with respect to liens of the United States arising by virtue of loans under such joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MEMORIAL TO SURVIVORS OF DIRIGIBLE "SHENANDOAH"

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6321) authorizing the erection of a memorial to the survivors of the dirigible Shenandoah.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, this bill calls for an appropriation to provide a memorial, not to those who lost their lives in this disaster, but to those who survived the disaster. I object.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. YOUNG. I shall permit the gentleman, but I shall insist upon my objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice, because we want to amend the bill?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he ask unanimous consent that the bill be referred back to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Library. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman write a report on it if we put the bill back there?

Mr. KELLER. I think I can.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Library?

There was no objection.

FREDERIC A. DELANO

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 195, to provide for the reappointment of Frederic A. Delano as a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the Chairman of the Library Committee if a report has been filed on this bill?

Mr. KELLER. It has been filed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In addition to the report that we objected to the last time the bill was under consideration?

Mr. KELLER. Surely, a 10-page report. I wrote it for the special benefit of the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. FISH. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not object to this bill. Mr. Frederic Delano is a constituent of mine, a very distinguished gentleman. He is known throughout the country as a man who seeks to help the President in his efforts to beautify Washington. He has been a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution for years. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the merits. My only objection was to the fact that no report had been given us about the merits of it. I have a perfecting amendment to offer which I know the gentleman will agree to.

Mr. MILLARD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FULLER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I will object to that, because I have written a report at the request of the gentleman on my left and at the request of the gentleman on my right. It is a 10-page report. It has been prepared with very great care, and I commend the attention of the House to that report, because it gives in short a history of the Smithsonian Institution as well as a history of the man who has already served there 12 years on the Board of Regents, Mr. Frederic A. Delano. There is no report that has been brought to this House that is more fully or completely or better done than that very report which I have here in my hand and which has been available to the gentleman for a full week. If the gentleman is going to object to the confirmation of Mr. Delano, let him do it now.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I for one knew nothing about the existence of this report until just now. How does the gentleman from Illinois expect anyone to read and digest that report of 10 pages so that he can act intelligently upon this bill? I therefore renew my request, Mr. Speaker, that this bill be passed over without prejudice until we all have an opportunity to read this thorough and exhaustive report.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, this report has been available for a full week. I do not believe it is the duty of the chairman of this committee to bring it to the individual attention of the Members when they have had a week to see it. I guaranteed to write it, and I have written it. I said at the time the gentleman from Ohio demanded a full report that he would not read it if I did write it. And he has not. He interjects an objection, for what reason I cannot understand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FILING AND INDEXING SERVICE FOR GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4015, authorizing the establishment of a filing and indexing service for useful Government publications.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE, Mr. COSTELLO, and Mr. TRUAX objected.

ALLOCATION OF NET REVENUES OF THE SHOSHONE POWER PLANT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6875, providing for the allocation of net revenues of the Shoshone power plant of the Shoshone reclamation project in Wyoming.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice and that I have the right to file a letter from Commissioner Mead with reference to this particular project in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Speaker, I object to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object. I renew my unanimous-consent request to print in the RECORD at this point this letter from Commissioner Mead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will; yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have examined the papers in this case. The entire situation was submitted to me by our colleague, Mr. GREEVER. It would seem to me that it is entirely proper that this legislation be passed. The people are on the land and they are having withheld from this particular project moneys that actually belong to them; and they are in dire distress.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The letter that I am asking to put in gives the commissioner's explicit reasons for opposing the passage of this legislation at this time. That is the reason I wanted to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman knows my attitude with reference to these matters.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have already objected to the bill.

Mr. GREEVER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have already objected to the bill. I am asking unanimous consent to put this letter in the RECORD.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I understand the gentleman is about to object to this bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have already objected to the bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And I understand the gentleman is coupling a unanimous-consent request with his objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It is a separate request.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I raise the point of order as to whether that request can be made in conjunction with an objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It cannot and it is not. The gentleman has already objected to the bill.

Mr. CULKIN. I object to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK].

PRESERVATION OF AMERICAN SITES, BUILDINGS, OBJECTS, ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6670, to provide for the preservation of historic American sites, buildings, objects, and antiquities of national significance, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BUST OF FORMER SPEAKER JOSEPH G. CANNON

The Clerk called the next business, House Resolution 117, to provide for placing a suitable inscription on the pedestal of the bust of former Speaker Joseph G. Cannon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RANKIN. I hope the gentleman will not object. This simply inscribes a statue that has already been erected, as I understand it.

Mr. TRUAX. I will withhold my objection temporarily.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, this is simply to put an inscription on a bust of former Speaker Joseph G. Cannon, whom we all knew as "Uncle Joe" when he was in the House. The bust is already prepared and is already in the House Office Building.

Mr. TRUAX. I will withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection the Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library is authorized and directed to provide for placing a suitable inscription on the pedestal of the bust of former Speaker Joseph G. Cannon, now located on the second floor of the Old House Office Building, containing the name of such former Speaker, his home residence, the congressional district represented by him, the number of years of service as a Member of Congress, and the number of years of service as Speaker of the House of Representatives. The expenses of providing such inscription shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STATUE OF GEN. ROBERT E. LEE

The Clerk called the next resolution (H. J. Res. 232) authorizing the erection of an equestrian statue of Gen. Robert E. Lee in the Arlington National Cemetery.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, this bill has already been passed over once. If it is passed over again, it probably will never be reached. I hope the gentleman will not object to consideration of the bill. Otherwise I think I shall have to object to passing it over so we can reach it at the next call of the Consent Calendar when it will take three objections to displace it. The gentleman has not any serious objection to it, I feel sure.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I may say that this is a very unusual bill. To begin with, it authorizes an appropriation of $50,000, and I am frank to say this does not appeal to me. For this reason I was constrained to object, but I have more or less of an open mind in the matter and am willing to give it consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that there was any valid objection to my request that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. FULMER. I understand that if objection was made to the gentleman's request that it would take three objections to displace the bill at the next call of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will take three objections to displace the bill at the next call of the calendar.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, we might as well cross this bridge right now. I object.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman object to consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE. No; I am just objecting to the bill being passed over without prejudice. Let us cross the bridge right now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DEVELOPMENT OF MINERAL RESOURCES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7958, to relieve unemployment in mining districts, increase the monetary gold and silver reserve of the United States, and to develop strategic, deficiency, and noncompetitive mineral resources of the Nation, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Mr. TRUAX, and Mr. McFARLANE objected.

DEVELOPMENT OF INDIAN ARTS AND CRAFTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6468, to promote the development of Indian arts and crafts and to create a board to assist therein, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE, Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. TABER, and Mr. MILLARD objected.

FILLED MILK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6361, to amend the Filled Milk Act.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I objected to this bill at the last call of the Consent Calendar. Since that time I have received certain information from cooperative milk organizations in Ohio explaining the bill at length, which explanation has convinced me that it is a meritorious bill and should be enacted into law. I withdraw my reservation of objection, therefore, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of March 4, 1923, entitled "An act to prohibit the shipment of filled milk in interstate or foreign commerce" (U. S. C., title 21, ch. 3) be, and the same is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following section:

"SEC. 4. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to make and enforce such regulations as may in his judgment be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, and there is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $10,000 annually for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act."

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFARLANE: Strike out all after the word "act", in line 10, page 1.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to make any extended argument on this bill. As I understand it, sufficient money is available in the Department of Agriculture with which to carry out this work. My amendment strikes out the authorization of $10,000. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman know what is to be done with this $10,000 appropriated in the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE. No; the bill does not specify, neither does the report.

Mr. TRUAX. They certainly could not expect to cover the entire United States with enforcers for $10,000.

Mr. McFARLANE. Insufficient money is appropriated if the intention is to carry out enforcement of the act with this sum alone.

Mr. TRUAX. That is true.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAYMENT OF NON-INDIAN CLAIMANTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7741, to authorize an appropriation to pay non-Indian claimants whose claims have been extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, but who have been found entitled to awards under said act as supplemented by the act of May 31, 1933.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Mr. TABER, and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection for the time being to permit the gentleman to make an explanation.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the gentleman objects because the bill carries an authorization for the appropriation of $45,000.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will examine the report he will find set forth in detail the facts regarding these claims.

This is not a question of just raiding the Treasury to the extent of $45,000.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is what appeals to me. It refers to non-Indian claims, and the money is to come out of Federal funds. This involves nearly $50,000. Why should not the gentleman bring this up under a suspension and give us a chance to talk on the matter?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Of course, if you force me to do that, I will have to do it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I would rather the gentleman bring it up under suspension.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER, Mr. MILLARD, and Mr. JENKINS of Ohio objected.

ENROLLMENT OF CERTAIN PERSONS WITH THE OMAHA TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7202, to investigate the claims of and to enroll certain persons, if entitled, with the Omaha Tribe of Indians.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ROGERS] a question? If this bill is passed, enrolling these men, it means they will be entitled to participate in the tribal funds?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. COSTELLO objected.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been before the Congress a good many years. It has passed the House and Senate in previous Congresses. It has been reported three or four times out of our committee.

Mr. McFARLANE. We have this from the majority leader's office. It says:

It would probably set a bad precedent to pass this bill, as there are thousands of people in the United States who claim to possess Indian blood, and if this precedent were established, the Treasury of the United States would be unable to pay the distributive shares of each claimant. It has been about 135 years since the marriage of "Laughing Buffalo" to the gay count, and it would be rather difficult to find all the heirs.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Who said that?

Mr. McFARLANE. It comes out the majority room.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Does that come from the Department? I would like to say in that connection that if the gentleman is going to object to this bill because it has a statement in there detrimental to the bill that I wish in the future the gentleman would observe the recommendations of the Indian Department and not object to bills which have the endorsement of that Department.

Mr. McFARLANE. May I say in answer to the gentleman that we reserve our own rights on whether the Department is right or whether we think we are right. We do not always follow the departments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. COSTELLO objected.

EASTERN AND WESTERN CHEROKEES

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Resolution 125, pertaining to the settlement with the Eastern and Western Cherokees under Public, No. 105, Seventy-second Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRUAX, Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. McFARLANE, and Mr. JENKINS of Ohio objected.

MEDITERRANEAN FRUIT FLY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1419, to provide for an investigation and report of losses resulting from the campaign for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly by the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this is the old Mediterranean fly bill?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that has been before us for a long time. I have objected to it for years. The gentleman from Florida has been very persistent, and the Committee on Agriculture has recommended the bill. The Department of Agriculture has had sufficient time to interpose any objections if it wished to do so. This Department was largely responsible for this Mediterranean fly fiasco, and if it is not concerned with this, I feel that I have about discharged my duty. I have been the watchdog of the Treasury so far as this one particular bill is concerned, but now, as I am assured that no objection has come from the Department of Agriculture and the gentleman from Florida has been magnanimous enough to agree with me to a reduction to $5,000, so I am constrained to go along. This amount will not break the Government up and it will enable the small farmer who has a small claim to file his claim. He might have been unable to do so otherwise, for the strong grower can protect himself but the little fellow might be left out.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. With that understanding, I withdraw by reservation of objection and will expect the gentleman from Florida to offer an amendment reducing the amendment from $10,000 to $5,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a case where the Florida folks have come here and asked the Congress to spend a lot of money to go down there to make an investigation. The money was spent at their request. I do not see why we should have this kind of an investigation at this time; therefore I object.

Mr. MILLARD and Mr. RICH also objected.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. May I say that if the gentlemen who objected understood the situation clearly they would withdraw their objection? There was an informal committee that gathered considerable data in times past. Some of that data is of a large amount. However, the little fellows did not have their data adequately prepared.

Now, if this matter comes up in future years the grower himself and the Federal Government both would be at a disadvantage. I feel that when the matter is reasonably fresh in our minds—and as a matter of fact it has gone too far already—it would be to the advantage of the Federal Government to ascertain the different types of claimants and the different classifications involved. I could go into considerable detail with reference to the facts. The gentleman made the statement it was at the request of the State, but the original fly larva was discovered upon the ground of the Federal Department of Agriculture. That matter was gone into very carefully by the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the people of Florida asked the Government to go down there and spend some money on this particular fly. The people of Florida made that request of the Government to do this particular work. As I understand it, the gentleman is interested in trying to get the Federal Government to make an estimate of what damage has been sustained, with the idea that they will come back to the Federal Government, asking the Government to pay the damages which the fruit incurred at that time. I think the gentleman is absolutely wrong.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the State itself did not first ask for this. The pest was found in the laboratory grounds of the Federal Department of Agriculture by Federal agents and the House Committee on Agriculture has gone into this phase of the matter very thoroughly. I may say further that the man I have the greatest sympathy for is the small grower, because the Federal Government said that this fly was a plant pest and their crops hosts and that they must destroy them and consequently there was a great amount of damage suffered by these people.

I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. TABER. If the regular order is demanded, I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the regular order was demanded, I shall have to object.

THE SPANISH WAR MEMORIAL PARK, TAMPA, FLA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7085, to provide for the creation of a memorial park at Tampa, in the State of Florida, to be known as "The Spanish War Memorial Park", and for other purposes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman familiar with the House amendment which provides that there shall be no appropriation?

Mr. COSTELLO. That is not in the Senate bill.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I have an amendment which I shall offer if the Senate bill is substituted.

Mr. COSTELLO. What expense is this going to be to the Federal Government ultimately?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. The bill does not authorize an appropriation. We are hopeful we will get P. W. A. funds, and there will be donations made by the State and some by the city.

I may say further that this measure has been approved by the National Park Service, the Director of the Budget, and by the Spanish War Veterans at three national conventions and the gentlemen who have sponsored this measure for a number of years have finally got together the land, and one of them is now very ill, and I am hopeful that we may pass this bill at the present time. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. The principal argument in favor of this bill seems to be the fact that at the present time there is not a Spanish War memorial anywhere in the United States. However, during the present session of the Congress we have approved a private bill appropriating the sum of $75,000 for a memorial here in Washington, and I think this should be adequate as a memorial for the Spanish War veterans.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. This is at the port of embarkation, and the exact site was selected by the Spanish War Veterans at three national conventions.

Mr. COSTELLO. The other bill provides for the taking of one of the ships used in the Spanish-American War and anchor it in the Potomac and make it a national monument. To my mind this should be a sufficient appropriation out of this Congress for such a memorial.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object, because the Spanish War veterans all over the United States are deeply interested in this measure. They have centered on Tampa as the appropriate place to locate this memorial. I think this would be a proper expenditure of money. We have monuments all over Washington and all over the United States, and the veterans want this particular site commemorated.

Mr. COSTELLO. Having made one appropriation for a Spanish War memorial, I think that should be sufficient for this Congress.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGE ACROSS DELAWARE RIVER NEAR EASTON, PA., AND PHILLIPSBURG, N. J.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7346, authorizing the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission of the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Delaware River at a point between Easton, Pa., and Phillipsburg, N. J.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] make a brief statement on this bill. I have objected to it heretofore and then asked that it be passed over without prejudice, which was agreed to.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is not this bridge actually under construction now?

Mr. WALTER. An application for a loan and grant was made to the Public Works Administration. The authority to construct the bridge was given under H. R. 6794, at the Seventy-third Congress. This authority, however, was given to the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Subsequently, the two States entered into a compact setting up a commission which has control of all the bridges along the Delaware River. There has been some question raised by attorneys as to the legality of the authority given to the two States in view of the fact a commission was set up for the purpose of controlling all of the bridges along the Delaware River.

Mr. TRUAX. Let me ask the gentleman this question. The bill provides that tolls may be collected for a period of 40 years. I am unalterably opposed to any such provision in any toll-bridge bill. I wonder if the gentleman would be willing to accept an amendment which would reduce that period of time from 40 years to 20 years.

Mr. WALTER. I may say in that connection that the moment the cost of the bridge is amortized, it will become a free bridge automatically under the language of the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. The point is if we give them 40 years they will take it all and will be charging tolls for 40 years.

Mr. WALTER. Under the law, the moment that the tolls have paid for the cost of the bridge, the bridge automatically becomes a free bridge. The only reason the time was fixed at 40 years was to give the local people the benefit of not being compelled to pay large tolls. The engineers feel that the toll should be 5 cents for a pleasure vehicle and 50 cents for a larger vehicle.

Mr. TRUAX. Five cents regardless of the number of passengers?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. Is the gentleman willing to accept an amendment to that effect?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; but I do not think that ought to be put into the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. At the last session on the Consent Calendar I vehemently objected to the erection of toll bridges by this method. I have received a number of letters supporting my contention. If you fix the time at 40 years, they will take 40 years. If you reduce it to 20 years, it will assure the next generation that they will not be compelled to pay tolls; and if you fix the maximum so that they will not be obliged to pay more than 5 cents for a passenger vehicle, you have gone a long way. They have been charging 50 cents on a bridge over on Lake Erie. That is robbery and piracy.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman is under the misapprehension that this is being built by a private corporation. It is not. That is not the fact. It is a commission of the two States. There will be no profit made by anyone.

Mr. TRUAX. We have bills here today that are effective in the State of Pennsylvania, the gentleman's own State. An agreement has been made that the duration of time shall not exceed 20 years. I personally will not subscribe or approve of a bill that does not follow that agreement.

Mr. WALTER. The engineers estimate that this can be paid for in 17 years.

Mr. TRUAX. I shall have to object unless the gentleman will accept my amendment.

Mr. WALTER. I am willing to agree to 30 years on my own responsibility.

Mr. TRUAX. I shall have to object.

Mr. WALTER. Very well, if the gentleman wants to hold up the entire program.

Mr. TRUAX. Well, we are going to be here a long time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

WHEELER-RAYBURN BILL

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, the people of this country want and need an ample supply of electric power at a reasonable cost. Coupled with that desire is the demand for sane regulation of the producers of power and a safeguarding of such investments to the stockholders. The so-called "death sentence" in this bill has raised a storm of protest that has become national in its scope. The American people are for constructive regulation but they will fight to the last ditch against destruction of our utility corporations in the name of reform.

Recovery seems to have been sidetracked, while the main line is crowded with the hysterical propaganda of reform. That there have been glaring abuses no one will deny, but why burn down the house to get rid of a few rats?

This is no time for frenzied attacks on big business. This is a time for clear thinking and sound analysis. This is a $12,000,000,000 industry and it places $2,000,000,000 annually in pay envelops of its million employees. There are several million small investors who are vitally interested in seeing that fair play is extended to these corporations.

I shall vote for such amendments as will tend to improve the bill, but on final passage I feel it my duty to vote against it.

CONSENT CALENDAR

BRIDGE ACROSS POTOMAC RIVER, OLD TOWN, MD.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7395) authorizing M. R. Carpenter, his heirs, legal representatives, or assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Potomac River between Old Town, Md., and Green Spring, W. Va.

Mr. ZIONCHECK, Mr. McFARLANE, and Mr. TRUAX objected to the consideration of the bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS MONONGAHELA RIVER, MONESSEN, PA.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7591) granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Donora and Monessen, Pa., municipal corporations, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River between the two cities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I have an amendment to offer to which the author of the bill has agreed. Therefore, I ask that the bill be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I have been here a long time trying to follow and protect these Consent Calendars. The question of the consent of the Congress to build bridges is a very important matter. It should not be fixed in a careless way. There should be uniformity in all bridge legislation. It is a matter that comes out of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Heretofore we have had a policy, and it has not been a personal policy, it has not been the wishes or whims of any one individual; we have sought to follow according to some rules and regulations in conformity with the wishes of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. This is one of the major committees of the House, and when a Member assumes to perfect the work of such an important committee he should consult something besides his prejudices. The chairman of the subcommittee of that committee [Mr. CHAPMAN], a distinguished Member from Kentucky, is here, and I think somebody ought to assert the rights of that committee, because if that is not done we will have all kinds of bridge bills and we will have no uniformity, and uniformity is a very important matter. I rise to ask Mr. CHAPMAN how the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] comports with the rules and wishes and the regulations of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, through the Subcommittee on Bridges, has very scrupulously followed an established and approved set of forms of bridge bills, which have been worked out through long years of experience. We have stuck to those forms entirely clear through. This bill in form is according to those approved regulations and has the approval of both the Department of War and the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What effect does the request of the gentleman from Ohio have on that? I understand he asks unanimous consent to put some kind of an amendment seeking to fix the toll charge on this bill, and I am opposed to that.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I do not understand the gentleman from Ohio does that. I understand that he wanted to offer an amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like to know what the gentleman from Ohio proposes.

Mr. TRUAX. And is that one of your usual customs, to know in advance of an amendment what it is, before you permit them to be offered? I do not propose to subscribe to such a policy, even though it has been followed for years.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman from Ohio is an unusual individual, of course.

Mr. TRUAX. And so is the gentleman from the Tenth District.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And, of course, he requires unusual consideration.

Mr. TRUAX. And the gentleman from the Tenth District does not dominate me.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I know that, and I should hate to take the responsibility for doing that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Oh, the gentleman from the Tenth District [Mr. JENKINS of Ohio] has always displayed marked courtesy to all of his colleagues, so far as I know.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What I want to know is what does the gentleman propose to do or what is the parliamentary situation at the present time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only question before the House now is whether there is objection to the consideration of the bill. The gentleman tells us he is not going to object, but he is going to offer an amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And I withdraw my reservation of objection?

Mr. TRUAX. With the statement that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS], the author of the bill, has agreed to accept the amendment which I propose to offer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a matter between the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the Chair cannot be governed by that. Is there objection?

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is this a toll bridge?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Yes; and it will become a free bridge as soon as it is amortized, and the limit upon it is 20 years. Both departments approve of it.

Mr. DONDERO. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection?

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the cities of Donora and Monessen, municipal corporations of Pennsylvania, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Monongahela River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between the two cities in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches; the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same; and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "Monessen", strike out "municipal corporations of", and in line 7 correct the spelling of the word "cities."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. TRUAX. I offer an amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRUAX: Page 2, line 15, after the word "tolls", insert a period and strike out all the remainder of line 15, all of lines 16, 17, 18, and 19, to the period in line 19, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "No toll of over 15 cents per passenger car shall be charged, and all passengers therein shall be allowed to pass over said bridge free."

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from the Tenth Ohio District [Mr. JENKINS] called attention to the fact that these bridge bills had been drawn and written by a committee so delegated to do that work. I have no criticism to offer of the committee's work, and I have no criticism to offer of any committee at this time. I feel they have done their duty and they have done it well, as they saw it. It all depends upon the viewpoint. These toll bridges have been foisted upon the people for many years. We are still paying tolls upon bridges that were built 40 and 50 years ago. We can just as well justify a toll bridge as we can justify a toll road. There is just as much justification for the one as for the other. Forty or fifty years ago there were no taxes collected with which to build roads. Those were the "horse and buggy" days. That went back to the "oxcart" days. Today the Federal Government and the States are collecting millions of dollars in gasoline taxes. The Federal Government collected $200,000,000 last year. From whom? From the motorists; from the poor man, the man of moderate means, and the man of riches. They all paid gasoline taxes. Where does the money go? It is an imposition upon those motorists, upon those travelers and users of the roads. Those roads are paid for and built with the taxpayers' money. It is an imposition and an outrage to then come before this Congress and ask from them an authorization so that companies, corporations, and even municipalities can proceed to build another toll structure to collect toll for at least 40 years. Every time a motorist crosses a toll bridge he must dig down in his pocket and pay that extortion and that toll. The purpose of my amendment is to establish a principle, establish a precedent, and cut these tolls down to not more than 15 cents per passenger car. They ought to be abolished forever.

As I said a moment ago, we have many toll bridges on the Ohio River, where the usual charge is 25 cents. We have toll bridges in some parts of Ohio where the charge is 50 cents. When they cross and come back it is a dollar. I ask you to adopt this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] has expired.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX].

We all appreciate he is strongly against toll bridges. He never misses an opportunity to expostulate loud and long as to his favoring free bridges, but it would not be wise to take that definite position as being against every toll bridge. That would be an absolutely silly position for anybody to take. There are thousands of toll bridges in the country that are a great benefit to the people. They do not complain at paying reasonable tolls. If private capital has been employed to construct a much needed bridge the people will be glad to pay a reasonable toll. Bridges are much preferred by the people to ferries. I have stood up here for years and long before Mr. TRUAX was ever heard of in Congress and objected to the Congress granting bridge franchises to people who desired them only to peddle them around to the highest bidder. I am in favor of freeing every bridge to public travel, but I am not a demagogue about freeing bridges without reimbursing those who have spent their money for the public good. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] desires to continue his position of being against all toll bridges, that is up to him, but this great Congress of the United States is not going to take that position, I am sure, when it understands the situation.

Now, this is what the gentleman seeks to do by his amendment. He seeks to write into a bill what the toll shall be. Think of the consequences of this Congress, under unanimous consent, assuming to lay down the precedent that we will fix tolls on every bridge in America, under unanimous consent. This is preposterous to contemplate.

In the first place, it is not the function of Congress to control the charges which owners make for the use of their property. Congress has no authority to control the bridges, only those which cross navigable waters, and then only as the bridges might obstruct navigation. Navigation is a privilege for the benefit of the people generally, and it is the right of sovereignty to control it. Congress has no right to say what kind of a bridge should be constructed except that it must not obstruct navigation. Congress has never assumed that authority. And further, it would be a most unusual procedure for Congress to assume to fix the toll charges. The charges on one bridge might not be reasonable charges on another. If we were to attempt to fix the charges on every bridge, when the bill for its authorization came up for passage we surely would have a mess of it. And especially to do that under the call of the Unanimous Consent Calendar, which is just what it imports. This amendment is, I think, made for the purpose of furnishing its author an excuse for him to proclaim in stentorian terms that he is the friend of the common people and that it is always his purpose to see to it that the poor people are cared for. Every Member would be glad to see all bridges free. They would be glad to see all poverty wiped out; also all sickness and unhappiness, but no sensible man can justify a course of taking property without just compensation. This motion of Mr. TRUAX will be beaten overwhelmingly. If he should submit it to a roll-call vote, it will be beaten 15 to 1. I ask you to vote down the demagogic amendment and follow the members of the committee who are attempting to do the right thing and protect the dignity of the House, and to do things in an orderly way.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

I rise at this time, Mr. Speaker, to explain, if I may, in part, the purpose of the bill which was objected to recently, providing for a survey of loss sustained during the eradication of the fruit fly in the State of Florida. H. R. 1419 provides for the investigation of the losses only, and is almost identical with a bill which I introduced some 4 years ago while the Republican Party was in power. My Republican colleagues probably will be interested in knowing that this bill was drawn as a result of a conference between Secretary of Agriculture Hyde, Chief of the Bureau of Entomology Dr. Lee Strong, and myself. We three agreed upon the language of the bill—I caused it to be drawn and introduced it. Later, it appears that Dr. Hyde retracted and failed to finally give his written approval. This bill was a little later introduced in the Senate by Florida's junior Senator, and has passed that body two or more times. One change has been made, beginning in line 12, page 2, as follows:

Provided, That such report shall serve as information only and shall not be construed as imposing any legal or moral obligation upon the Government of the United States.

Now, I cannot understand how that any Member of the House of either political party could possibly object to the passage of the resolution carrying this language.

We have, in Florida, a growers committee which has made a survey of losses sustained and are in a position to now promptly make to the Secretary of Agriculture a rather accurate report of damages and losses sustained by Florida fruit and vegetable growers.

Mr. Speaker, some of my colleagues seem to have altogether the wrong impression as to the responsibility of the Government in this matter. The fact is, the State of Florida acquiesced in the wishes of the Federal officials, not primarily in the interest of Florida and Florida growers, but primarily in the greater interest of fruit and vegetable growers in other States in the Nation. Practically all fruit and vegetable growing States were gravely alarmed at this fruit-fly pest which appeared to be a grave threat to the fruit industry in every State in the Union, particularly California and Texas.

I repeat that the eradication was carried on by the Federal Government and in the interest of the public welfare. This cause stands precisely on the same footing as the foot-and-mouth disease eradication claims and the pink bollworm claims. In each of these instances the Federal Government paid half of the damages sustained and the affected States paid the other half. Those who lost their property in the eradication of these pests were reimbursed in this manner. I am sure that any fair-thinking Member of the House would desire to see the same plan of equitable settlement carried to Florida as has been accorded in other similar cases.

Police power in Florida was indirectly turned over to the Federal Government. In actual practice, if not in theory, the Federal Government assumed the responsibility, carried on the eradication program, and is now responsibile for damages; however, this resolution does not commit the Government to the payment of damages. All that it does is to spend not more than $10,000 to make a survey by Federal and State officials in order to ascertain damages. The gentleman from Ohio, I believe, has indicated his intent to offer an amendment reducing the appropriation from $10,000 to $5,000. We accept this amendment because we fully believe that, with the unofficial survey which has already been made, the Federal officials can utilize it in making their own survey and complete the task for even less than $5,000. Florida citizens have been patient now for several years and are undoubtedly entitled to this relief.

We are expending billions of dollars primarily for the relief of the needy and the unemployed. Thousands of growers in Florida are now needy and unemployed. It is far better to expend funds in retiring a Federal obligation and at the same time relieve the needy, than it is to expend funds with nothing in view except unemployment relief.

I hope that the gentlemen on the Republican side, who are so seriously objecting today, will not object to this resolution when it is brought up on the next Consent Calendar day.

I assure you it is full of merit and, in fact, is one of the most worthy pieces of legislation now before the Congress.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GREEN. Now, I hope the gentleman will not call for the regular order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, we are deciding a very important question as to whether we shall establish tolls on these toll bridges. For that reason I must insist that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] speak in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FULLER). The gentleman from Florida will confine himself to the matter before the House.

Mr. GREEN. I trust the gentleman on the Republican side will not insist on the regular order. The matter of investigation of fruit-fly eradication damage in Florida is a most worthy subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman must proceed in order, or not at all.

Mr. GREEN. I shall be glad to speak in perfect order when some other bills are presented, and am sure I will be understood.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, in analyzing the attitude of various Members of the House toward toll bridges I fail to see why there should be any objection to a toll bridge. There is hardly a toll bridge proposed on this floor that does not replace a toll ferry. That toll ferry is much more dangerous and much more expensive than a toll bridge can possibly be. When it comes to a toll bridge, the people who use the bridge pay for the bridge and not the people who live a hundred miles away, or people who live back in the country somewhere and perhaps never use the bridge. I fail to see where there can be any fairer method devised for constructing a bridge than a toll bridge. The fact of the matter is that throughout the various States and municipalities they cannot today borrow the money to construct these bridges. In the past the municipalities have gone down into their own pockets to construct the bridges. It is only natural that they should be reimbursed by tolls. The bonded indebtedness of many counties and municipalities is so heavy that they are unable to raise money to build bridges any other way.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. When the gentleman refers to "use" does the gentleman mean use by pedestrians or by those who ride across it?

Mr. FADDIS. By those who ride and by foot passengers as well.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman says there is no opposition to the bill.

Mr. FADDIS. The gentleman misunderstood me. I did not say there was no opposition.

Mr. TRUAX. There is opposition among the poor people who have to dig down in their pockets for a quarter or 50 cents to cross somebody's bridge. Such a condition should not be; the bridges should be free, the same as the roads are free.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Speaker, I have made this motion that I may voice my opposition to the amendment. I sincerely ask this House to reject the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Ohio which would limit tolls not to exceed 15 cents per car. I do not believe a member of the subcommittee on bridges can tell what the bridge is going to cost. We are being placed in the position of fixing an arbitrary toll without relationship whatsoever to the cost of construction. What position do we find ourselves in? The subcommittee on bridges acting for the Interstate Commerce Committee has reported out a bill granting authority to two cities on the Monongahela River in Pennsylvania to construct this bridge. Two separate and distinct municipalities are concerned. If it were a private corporation, I do not know but what I might agree with my colleague from Ohio. In this instance, however, two separate and distinct municipalities on the Monongahela River have asked Congress to authorize the building of this bridge. It has been approved by the War Department and by the Department of Agriculture. The War Department usually governs and regulates the tolls to be charged on such bridges. What do we provide in the bill? Section 2 provides as follows:

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost.

That is what the bill provides. How can any man, without even knowing what the cost of the bridge or its approaches will be, advocate on the floor of the House an arbitrary limit of 15 cents per vehicle as proper toll?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLMES. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it planned to build this bridge through a bond issue?

Mr. HOLMES. Yes; that is the only way these municipalities can raise money these days.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is this a bond issue without stock?

Mr. HOLMES. The municipalities will issue bonds.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the event there should be a default in the bond interest, or if they are serial bonds and there should be a default in the payment of principal——

Mr. HOLMES. I want to say to the gentleman, in the first place, that no municipality could ever sell bonds with an amendment limiting the toll to 15 cents.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I know that all of us through the months have enjoyed being informed, elevated, and even inspired by the eloquent speeches of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] on the subject of toll bridges. I think all of us are aware by this time that the distinguished gentleman is unalterably opposed to toll bridges.

I wonder if the gentleman knows that in his own State, as well as in my State and most of the other States, there are many places where there can be no bridge constructed at all except by municipalities, counties, States, or public authorities set up to build them, with tolls to be charged until the cost of construction is paid for, when the bridges will become free and be dedicated to the public use and benefit. There are hundreds of places where bridges could not be constructed under any other circumstance and paid for and made free in any other way. All of us hope to see the day when every bridge as well as every road will be free. That is why the committee, after serious and careful deliberation, reports such bills as this, drafted according to the rules and precedents and in the form developed and approved by the committee as the result of years of experience in handling bridge legislation.

The building of bridges relieves congested traffic conditions at river crossings where at present no facilities exist but ferryboats. When toll bridges are built under such limitations as are carried in the pending bill, they become free after they have been paid for. The tolls are regulated by the War Department. After they become free the gentleman can ride over them to his heart's content as can all the rest of his fellow citizens.

My fellow Members of the House, I hope you will unanimously vote down this amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, who, in the consideration of bills by unanimous consent, would write into a bridge bill an amendment fixing the exact amount of toll that should be charged, which practice would produce unending confusion and difficulty.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I yield.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I think the most important point that has been stressed in opposition is that brought out by the gentleman from Pennsylvania a few moments ago when he said that toll bridges take the place of present facilities of crossing rivers, which is ferrying. Ferrying is dangerous to life, and if ferries can be supplanted by toll bridges under such safeguards as are contained in the pending bill, the building of such bridges should be encouraged.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I thank the gentleman from California. I think—in fact, I know—that I voice the sentiment of every member of the committee working on these problems when I declare that it is our endeavor to bring about a condition when all the bridges in the country will be free. I trust you will vote against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this amendment. I believe if we are going to have bridges, that in the large majority of cases we must have toll bridges. These bridges are built for the use of people in the immediate vicinity for the most part, and, of course, those people ought to pay in some measure for the services rendered where the municipalities are not in position to raise the funds to have a public bridge.

The time has come, however, in erecting toll bridges when we ought to give consideration to the proposition that pedestrians should be permitted to use these bridges at a minimum rate, if not entirely without cost. We ought to throw open to our people the right to cross a bridge between cities or between States without charge. [Applause.] For instance, we have a situation existing with the George Washington Bridge across the great Hudson River affecting my district where the Port of New York Authority, the Authority which built the bridge, undertook to, and did levy the tolls. The Port Authority decided to and did charge just as much for a pedestrian to cross that bridge as was charged those who rode across in busses. There was agitation against that unreasonable action, in which I took part, and after a considerable time the Port of New York Authority reduced the rate for pedestrians to 5 cents. As a matter of fact, there should be no charge to cross the bridge between New York and New Jersey on foot. The amount collected from pedestrians is negligible and from the time of the completion of the great engineering feat of the bridge the total annual revenue derived from persons crossing that bridge on foot has been decreasing and decreasing and should be dispensed with altogether as it is a source of little yield and only serves to prevent the use of the bridge by those of meager means.

Mr. EKWALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon for a question.

Mr. EKWALL. What has that got to do with the national lottery?

Mr. KENNEY. It has nothing to do with it, but I appreciate the gentleman's interest, and the gentleman will hear enough from me on that other point later.

Mr. Speaker, I come from the place where the Palisades begin, and the George Washington Bridge joins New York to the main land, and the Port of New York Authority must throw the great bridge open to the public to use without charge when afoot. When the man to whom a charge of 10 cents or 5 cents means much has to cross the bridge to and from the city of New York and New Jersey, he has to pay, for him, a heavy toll which, in the aggregate, is insignificant in the annual returns from the bridge. No good reason remains for continuing a pedestrian toll, and it should be eliminated. Furthermore, if we are to grant permission to build toll bridges in the future, the revenue to meet the obligations arising from their building should be based on income from sources other than the pedestrian who should have the right to cross and recross without charge.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio) there were—ayes 5, noes 81.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 27, nays 260, not voting 142, as follows:

The doors were opened.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Donora and Monessen, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River between the two cities."

CONSTRUCTION OF A BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER AT OR NEAR WELLSBURG, W. VA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7807, authorizing the Brookewell Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Wellsburg, W. Va.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS BLACK RIVER IN THE TOWN OF POPLAR BLUFF, MO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7575, to legalize a bridge across Black River on United States Highway No. 60 in the town of Poplar Bluff, Butler County, Mo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of the bill whether this will be a free bridge or a toll bridge?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I may say to the gentleman that this will be a free bridge.

Mr. TRUAX. There will be no tolls charged?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. No; there never will be.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State Highway Commission of Missouri to maintain and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto already constructed across Black River on United States Highway No. 60 in the town of Poplar Bluff, Butler County, Mo., as a lawful structure and subject to the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER AT SISTERSVILLE, W. VA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7592, to extend the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at Sistersville, W. Va.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of this bill as to whether or not this will be a toll bridge, owned by a private corporation, or a free bridge to be constructed by the State?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. In answer to the gentleman's question, I may say that this will be a toll bridge to be self-liquidating, at the end of which time the State will take it over.

Mr. TRUAX. At the end of what time?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. When it is liquidated.

Mr. TRUAX. Is there not a stipulation as to the period during which tolls shall be collected?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. We cannot tell how much will be collected in the way of tolls, or over what period of time they will be collected.

Mr. TRUAX. We have passed bills which have had such provisos in them.

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. I may say that this is an extension of the time for building this bridge. The bill providing for the original bridge was passed at the last session of Congress.

Mr. TRUAX. Would the gentleman object to a request to pass the bill over without objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. No.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT ST. LOUIS, MO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7620, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill if it is not a fact that the present toll in operation and the one that has been in operation for a long time is 10 cents per passenger car?

Mr. SCHAEFER. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. That is the limitation?

Mr. SCHAEFER. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. That is exactly what I sought to accomplish by my amendment, only I made it even higher because I provided for a maximum of 15 cents, and I may say this is not a privately owned bridge.

Mr. SCHAEFER. This is a bridge to be owned by the city of East St. Louis, and is eventually to be a free bridge. The charge of 10 cents is to pay the interest and the money that is lent by the Government.

Mr. TRUAX. This is a reasonable charge and I have no objection to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there anything in this bill that looks toward the fixing of the tolls?

Mr. SCHAEFER. No; it is in open competition with the St. Louis municipal bridge which has always charged 10 cents, and, of course, the P. W. A. insisted that a 10-cent charge be incorporated in this bill, or, at least, that is their intention.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The toll rate is not contained in the bill?

Mr. SCHAEFER. No.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is left, under general law, to the War Department.

Mr. SCHAEFER. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to ask the gentleman a question. Do I understand that the gentleman is agreeing to an amendment along the line of the one just voted down?

Mr. SCHAEFER. No; there is no amendment proposed at all.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Then, what is the purport of the colloquy between the gentleman and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] with reference to a charge of 10 cents?

Mr. SCHAEFER. I am simply stating that it is the intention of the city of East St. Louis to charge 10 cents.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But there is nothing in the law about that?

Mr. SCHAEFER. No.

There being no objection, the clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill., authorized to be built by an act of Congress approved May 3, 1934, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from May 3, 1935.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 4, after the word "River", insert a comma.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to read a short letter, which is proof conclusive that the sentiment for toll bridges in the territories affected is not as unanimous as it seems to be in this body. This letter is from McKeesport, Pa., from Mr. Edward L. Renner, chairman of the Tolls Protest Committee, under date of July 7:

This club is very much interested in your fight against the inclusion of tolls in the P. W. A. program. If your colleagues knew what the erection of a toll bridge in this already debt-loaded community would do to the community we would have very little difficulty in winning the fight which we have been waging for almost a year. We have two bridges at the present time, but the P. W. A. grant specifies that these be torn down and replaced by a toll bridge. If you can find anything sensible in a program of that kind, we would be pleased to have someone point it out to us. We are glad to know that America still has a few real men left who know the problems of the people, who are willing to stand up for a principle.

[Applause.]

I am sorry to be compelled to read this, Mr. Speaker; but in view of the overwhelming vote against my amendment, I feel it is justified:

Our only regret is that you are not from Pennsylvania, so that we could substantially show our appreciation at the polls. We certainly hope that you will be successful in your fight to lick the toll end of the program.

Here, Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a dozen newspaper clippings received from Pennsylvania. I assume they emanate from and are published in some of the districts of gentlemen who have sponsored toll-bridge programs. Here is one from a Pittsburgh motorist, who tells me:

The motorist already is very heavily taxed for the privilege of using his car by both the Federal and State governments for gasoline, oil, tires, accessories, license tags, drivers' licenses, and inspection fees, and now the proposed toll charges. For the benefit of the motorist, I would suggest that they take time some afternoon and make a trip from Aspinwall through the country and return to Aspinwall. The following route may prove interesting. Start in Aspinwall and cross the proposed Aspinwall Bridge (toll); then go through East Liberty to the Homestead Bridge (toll); then to McKeesport and the Jerome Street Bridge (toll); then to the airport, returning to the city through the Liberty Tubes (toll); then down the Mount Washington Roadway to Carson Street to the Glenwood Bridge (toll); through Schenley Park to East Liberty and the Aspinwall Bridge (toll); and by this time I feel sure the motorist will not want to see the toll system revived again in this county.

Unless the motorists are willing to accept this toll system, they should begin to organize a movement to protest against the obnoxious evil and keep our highways free from any further taxation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here are some cartoons, and I would like to have each one of you gentlemen who seemingly ridicule my efforts, come up and look at this cartoon and see whether or not it is a cartoon you will be proud to carry back home when Congress finally adjourns. I wonder if you will want to show this to your constituents and boast about it and say that it is a good bill; that you represent the toll-bridge interests; that you sponsor toll bridges, when your people back home are absolutely, unalterably opposed to them. They are tired of being taxed for tolls. They are tired of being taxed to fill the coffers of some investors in toll bridges.

Mr. Speaker, I have here some more clippings.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Not just now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI AT NEW BOSTON, ILL.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 7809, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near New Boston, Ill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK, Mr. McFARLANE, and Mr. COSTELLO objected.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE RED RIVER FROM MOORHEAD, MINN., TO FARGO, N. DAK.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 7809, to extend the time for commencing and completing the construction of certain bridges across the Red River between Moorhead, Minn., and Fargo, N. Dak.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if this is a toll bridge or a free bridge?

Mr. LEMKE. This is a free bridge.

Mr. CHAPMAN. A free bridge.

Mr. TRUAX. I congratulate the gentleman from Kentucky, and I hope in the future the gentleman will recommend nothing but free bridges.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of certain bridges across the Red River, between Moorhead, Minn., and Fargo, N. Dak., authorized to be built by the State Highway Departments of the States of Minnesota and North Dakota by an act of Congress approved June 4, 1934, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from June 4, 1935.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "certain", insert "two free highways."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Amend the title so as to read "A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of certain free highway bridges across the Red River, from Moorhead, Minn., to Fargo, N. Dak."

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT RULO, NEBR.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 1988, to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Rulo, Nebr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

ADJUSTMENT OF THE SALARIES OF RURAL LETTER CARRIERS

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 7936, to adjust the salaries of rural letter carriers, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 8 of the act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes", approved February 28, 1925, as amended, is amended by inserting after the first sentence thereof the following new sentence: "In case of carriers serving on routes 30 miles or less in length, rendering service to an average of 12 or more boxes per mile, the base mileage pay shall be $70 per mile per annum."

SEC. 2. Effective as of July 1, 1934, subsection (d) of the first section of the act entitled "An act to adjust the salaries of rural letter carriers, and for other purposes", approved June 25, 1934, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence as follows: "Should any such carrier be transferred to another route or other routes, the salary which he was receiving on June 30, 1934, shall be protected to the same extent as such salary would, under the preceding sentence, have been protected had such carrier continued to serve the route or routes from which he was transferred and had the length of such route or routes been changed to correspond to that of such other route or routes."

SEC. 3. When a vacancy on a route (whether now existing or hereafter established) of greater length than 60 miles occurs by reason of resignation, death, retirement, or dismissal on charges, of carriers in the Rural Mail Delivery Service, the route shall be by readjustment reduced to 60 miles or less and the excess mileage shall be distributed between routes of less than 60 miles. Box delivery shall not be denied those now receiving such service prior to such readjustment of routes.

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect on the first day of the calendar month next following the month in which this act is enacted.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "sentence", strike out the rest of line 10, and lines 1, 2, and 3, on page 2 and insert "The Postmaster General may in his discretion allow and pay additional compensation to rural letter carriers serving heavily patronized routes not exceeding 38 miles in length, such additional compensation not to exceed the sum of $10 per annum for each mile served."

Page 2, line 21, strike out all of section 3.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, after the words "June 30", strike out "1934" and insert "1935."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE MONONGAHELA, ALLEGHENY, AND YOUGHIOGHENY RIVERS

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 7438, to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction and operation of certain bridges across the Monongahela, Allegheny, and Youghiogheny Rivers in the county of Allegheny, Pa.", approved June 4, 1934.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MORITZ. I object.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. MORITZ. Yes.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, this is an important project that we have there. This bill was passed last year, and the only reason it was not carried out was the delay in getting started. We are all in favor of free bridges all around that community. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] has just read from a paper which covers the facts on these bridges, and as quickly as we can get the authorization they will be free, but we are prevented now from having them free because we cannot get enough money to make them free. That is on account of the limitation on the amount the county can borrow. As soon as we can meet this obligation they will become free bridges.

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Speaker, there are old projects here that are free which they are attempting to make toll bridges. For that reason I am forced to object.

SALE OF MUNICIPAL BONDS, PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7446) to authorize the issuance and sale to the United States of certain bonds of municipal governments in Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

REFUNDING BONDS, PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8209) temporarily to exempt refunding bonds of the government of Puerto Rico from the limitation of public indebtedness under the organic act.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any bonds or other obligations of Puerto Rico hereafter issued for the purpose of retiring previously outstanding bonds or obligations shall not be included in computing the public indebtedness of Puerto Rico under section 3 of the organic act approved March 2, 1917, as amended, until 6 months after their issue.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the resolution (H. J. Res. 257) to amend a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Porto Rico", approved December 21, 1928, as amended by the Second Deficiency Act, fiscal year 1929, approved March 4, 1929.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in carrying out the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Porto Rico", approved December 21, 1928, as amended by the Second Deficiency Act, fiscal year 1929, approved March 4, 1929, the Puerto Rican Hurricane Relief Commission or its successor is authorized, when in the judgment of the Commission or its successor it is consistent with the best interests of the United States, to make, in the name of the United States or in its own name for and on behalf of the United States, compositions and adjustments in any loans heretofore made by it upon the security of land or other property, real or personal, in the island of Puerto Rico, either by reduction in the rate of interest or in the indebtedness or by extension or other adjustment of the time for any payments of principal or interest or other indebtedness, or otherwise: Provided, That it shall be unlawful for any person to charge a fee for the purpose of preparing or assisting in the preparation of any papers of an applicant for the composition or adjustment of a loan under the provisions of this act, and any person receiving or agreeing to receive a fee for any such purpose in violation of this proviso shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both.

SEC. 2. That the Commission or its successor is further authorized to acquire title, either by voluntary conveyance as the result of a composition or an agreement with a debtor or in satisfaction of judgments or decrees of foreclosure of mortgages or at sales under such judgments or decrees, to parcels of land or other property, real or personal, in the name of the United States or in its own name for and on behalf of the United States and also to take possession and occupy and hold and administer and to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of as in the judgment of the Commission or its successor is consistent with the best interests of the United States any land or other property, real or personal, so acquired by it; and in the exercise of these powers may execute deeds or other necessary or appropriate instruments in the name of the United States or in its own name for and on behalf of the United States.

SEC. 3. The Commission or its successor is further authorized, in any case when in the judgment of the Commission or its successor it is consistent with the best interests of the United States, to subordinate the lien securing any loan heretofore made by the Commission to the lien securing any loan or loans hereafter made by the Federal Land Bank of Baltimore, or by the Land Bank Commissioner on behalf of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CHALMETTE NATIONAL MONUMENT, LA.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5368) to provide for the addition of certain lands to the Chalmette National Monument in the State of Louisiana, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire, by purchase or by condemnation, out of any funds allotted and made available for this project by proper authority, and/or accept by donation, in behalf of the United States, lands, easements, and buildings within 10 miles of the boundaries of the Chalmette National Monument as shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior as necessary or desirable for the extension of said monument, and/or maintenance thereof, the title and evidence of title to lands acquired to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the State of Louisiana shall cede and transfer its jurisdiction to the property on which said monument is to be completed in accordance with the provisions of Act No. 41 of the legislature of that State, approved July 19, 1902.

SEC. 2. That the areas now within the Chalmette National Monument and the Chalmette National Cemetery, together with such additions as may hereafter be made thereto, shall be known as the "Chalmette National Historical Park", under which name the aforesaid national park shall be entitled to receive and to accept all moneys heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the Chalmette National Monument and the Chalmette National Cemetery.

SEC. 3. The administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid national historical park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", as amended.

SEC. 4. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 5 and 6, after the words "of any", strike out "funds allotted and made available for this project by property authority" and insert in lieu thereof the words "donated funds."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

IRRIGATION CHANNEL, CLEAR LAKE AND LOST RIVER, CALIF.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6773) to deepen the irrigation channel between Clear Lake and Lost River, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to hear an explanation.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, high on the dividing line between California and Oregon is Langell Valley irrigation district. Some years ago the Government undertook an irrigation project there in connection with the Klamath irrigation district. The ditch was not dug deep enough between Clear Lake and Lost River to carry the irrigation water to Langell Valley. There is good land in the valley, and perhaps 400 people are living there. This bill simply authorizes the Reclamation Service to use $12,000 to deepen that ditch to carry out what should have been done long ago. It also authorizes $5,000 to investigate and see how far small reservoirs that have headed off the water from Clear Lake have cut down their source of supply. The authorization is all reimbursable to the reclamation fund.

Mr. McFARLANE. There is a statement that this is drawing water out of California and putting it into Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. It is on the line between the two States. It is Oregon water, but part of it flows through California. I ask that the bill be passed in justice to that little community, that they may not be forced on the relief rolls.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. PIERCE. Why can we not pass it today?

Mr. COSTELLO. The gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT] has asked me to have it passed over without prejudice, and I make that request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

CLAIMS OF CROW INDIANS OF MONTANA AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next business, Senate Joint Resolution 96, to carry out the intention of Congress with reference to the claims of the Crow Tribe of Indians, of Montana, and any band thereof against the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution?

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have this bill explained.

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Speaker, the explanation of this resolution is that in July 1926 a jurisdictional act was passed by this Congress, authorizing the Crow Tribe of Indians in Montana or any band thereof, to file suits in the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. In the meantime the Supreme Court of the United States rendered a decision to the effect that notwithstanding such provision, there is no right of appeal, in view of the judicial code as amended, unless the jurisdictional act itself specifically provides that an appeal may be had and a review by the Supreme Court. It only amends that act to the extent that either side may appeal.

Mr. TABER. Is this a situation where the Court of Claims turn down the claimants, and now they want to appeal to the Supreme Court?

Mr. AYERS. No. The situation is that there was no right of the claimants to have an appeal, unless the jurisdictional act gave them that right, and this is to extend the original jurisdictional provision of the act.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. After this act was passed Congress intended that they have the right of appeal and then the Supreme Court interpreted it that they did not have the right of appeal without a jurisdictional act. That is all this is. It is simply to give them that right.

Mr. TABER. In other words, there was an appeal by claimants against a decision of the Court of Claims?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. No; not at all.

Mr. TABER. How would the court get jurisdiction to decide that?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. It was that they have the right of appeal if the Court of Claims should turn their claim down. When the law was passed, the intention of Congress was that they should have that right, but after that the Supreme Court held it would be a violation of the Judicial Code unless there was a jurisdictional act, of this nature, specifically giving them that right.

Mr. TABER. Would the gentleman agree to accept an amendment providing that the gratuities paid by the United States Government should be offset against any claims that were allowed under that act?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I do not believe that would be necessary in view of the operation of the second deficiency appropriation act.

Mr. TABER. It would not if that becomes the law, but the Senate committee, I understand, has under consideration an amendment wiping that out, and therefore it is very important to protect the Treasury along those lines.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Of course, this is a Senate resolution and we hesitate to agree to such an amendment.

Mr. TABER. Then I shall have to object.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. But if the gentleman wants to submit such an amendment he may do so.

Mr. TABER. Unless it were agreed that that amendment would be acceptable, I would have to object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. As chairman of the committee, I shall be glad to agree to it. Of course, the committee itself has not considered the matter.

Mr. TABER. Unless the author of the bill and everybody concerned would agree to it, I should have to object.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. TABER. It does not make any difference whether it is a Senate bill or a House bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the gentleman whether he can take the case of a claimant in the Court of Claims to the United States Supreme Court according to the Judicial Code in any other manner than by certiorari?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. It would be impossible to have an appeal unless we have such a jurisdictional act as this.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In other words, you and I, not Indians, can take our case from the Court of Claims to the United States Supreme Court only by writ of certiorari?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And this bill provides that the Indians may take their Indian claims from the Court of Claims to the United States Supreme Court by appeal?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. By appeal.

Mr. WOLCOTT. So that the United States Supreme Court can hear both questions of fact and questions of law?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Why should we differentiate as against all of the other people in the United States in favor of these Indian claimants? Why should we set up a special procedure for Indian claimants that is denied the rest of the people of the United States? We have given them the right to go to the Court of Claims on an equal footing.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The gentleman will notice in the preamble of the Jurisdictional Act of July 3, 1926, which the Congress passed, that it was intended that these Indian claimants should have that right. I cannot answer the gentleman as to why we should distinguish, if we should do so, but I am simply contending that this act is carrying out the intentions of the act of Congress of 1926.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The purpose of providing that these cases go from the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court by certiorari was necessitated by the fact that if we did otherwise we would encumber the United States Supreme Court calendar with a mass of claims and questions of fact that they were not particularly interested in and did not want to rule upon. We protected the United States Supreme Court against that by providing that cases should be reviewed on certiorari only—questions of law. Why should we send these Indian claimants to the Supreme Court on questions of fact when the gentleman and I and every other citizen of the United States having a claim against the United States must bring it to the Supreme Court on certiorari or we are estopped in the Court of Claims? I cannot see the consistency of setting up a special procedure for one particular class of people, whether they be Indians or not.

Mr. BURDICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BURDICK. The Supreme Court has held in the matter of bringing these cases before it on certiorari that there must be established as a matter of law, fraud in the case, which is absolutely impossible in most Indian cases. There has been no intent on the part of Congress to defraud the Indians. As a result of the action of Congress we find that the Indians' rights have been disregarded; and I think in view of this decision of the Supreme Court the pending bill is necessary for the proper protection of the Indians' rights.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

ARAPAHOE AND CHEYENNE INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1504, authorizing the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. COSTELLO objected.

CONFEDERATED BANDS OF UTE INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 381, for the relief of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians located in Utah, Colorado, and New Mexico.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is not this another bill for the payment of Indian claims?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes. Will the gentleman yield that I may explain the bill?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Back in 1880 these bands of Indians ceded 12,000,000 acres of their reservation to the Government with the express proviso that it should be paid for at rates fixed by the Government of $1.25 for grazing land and $2.50 for lands that contained oil or oil shale. The pending bill authorizes the payment of $161,400 for 64,000 acres of these ceded lands which tract was set aside as a naval oil reserve. The price of this land has been fixed by law at $2.50 per acre. The bill has been passed by the Senate, was unanimously reported by the House and Senate Committees on Indian Affairs, and has the approval of the Bureau of the Budget.

I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this claim does not arise through the fault of these Indians. They had to cede this land, and they did it under a valid agreement with this Government. They would be very glad indeed to take these lands back, but they will not have that opportunity, and there is no way to compensate them except to pay them the price fixed by law for the acreage taken away from them.

Mr. TABER. I thought I understood the gentleman to say there was a valid agreement by which they were to be paid $1.25 per acre. The bill authorizes payment at the rate of $2.50 per acre.

Mr. MURDOCK. No; I said that $1.25 was the price fixed for land that was useful only for grazing. This land has been set aside as a naval oil reserve by reason of the fact that it contains valuable oil shale, and the price for such land was fixed at $2.50 per acre by legislation of the Congress. The Indians have had no say in the matter. These lands were taken away from them. They should be paid the $2.50 an acre provided by law. The pending bill merely carries out the intent of Congress, which fixed the value of these lands.

Mr. TABER. Does the bill provide that there shall be offset against the sum therein authorized any gratuities that may have been paid to these tribes?

Mr. MURDOCK. If there are any offsets, the Government has a right to claim they will, of course, be deducted.

Mr. TABER. Does the bill so provide?

Mr. MURDOCK. No; I do not think it does.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman accept such an amendment to the bill?

Mr. MURDOCK. An amendment to the effect that any gratuities heretofore paid these bands shall be set off against this amount?

Mr. TABER. That the Government shall have the right to offset any gratuities that have been paid to these Indians against the amount authorized in settlement of this particular claim. We do not want to pay them twice.

Mr. MURDOCK. They are not being paid at all; that is the trouble.

Mr. TABER. Maybe they have been paid already, as we have found in a great many cases.

Mr. MURDOCK. They gave up 12,000,000 acres of land in Colorado.

Mr. TABER. We have found instances where Indian claims have been paid three or four times. We do not want to get into a situation of that kind.

Mr. Speaker, unless the gentleman will accept such an amendment, I shall be forced to object to the bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. What is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. TABER. My amendment would be to add a new section providing in substance that there shall be offset against any payment that shall be made by the Government, any gratuities which have been paid to these Indians by the Government.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Will the wording of the amendment conform to like amendments offered to similar bills heretofore?

Mr. MURDOCK. The amendment must be in proper form if it is to be offered.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman has a valid amendment, why not submit it now? The trouble with these Indian bills is that they are passed over from one Congress to another until those entitled to compensation never get it, and when the claim is finally settled it goes to those who probably have no right to it.

Mr. TABER. The point is that gratuities that have been paid these Indians should be offset against this claim.

Mr. Speaker, I think I shall have to ask that this bill be passed over without prejudice at this time.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman can prepare the amendment and submit it later in the day, could we not return to this bill?

Mr. TABER. I would just as soon have the bill returned to and will not object to that procedure being followed.

Mr. MURDOCK. All right.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, we shall ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of this bill later. The gentleman stated that we could ask unanimous consent to return to this bill later today, and he would be willing to prepare his amendment in the meantime and have it ready; therefore he will not insist on passing the bill over without prejudice.

Mr. TABER. I think it ought to be passed over without prejudice. Mr. Speaker, I submit my unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

INCREASED COMPENSATION OF LETTER CARRIERS IN VILLAGE DELIVERY SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8002, to increase the compensation of letter carriers in the village delivery service.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of the act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes", approved February 28, 1925 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 106), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. Carriers in the village delivery service shall be graded with salaries for each grade, as follows: First grade, $1,400; second grade, $1,500; third grade, $1,600. That in the readjustment of salaries of letter carriers in the village delivery service to conform to the grades herein provided, village carriers who have served as such for 2 years or more shall be placed in grade 3; village carriers who have served for 1 but less than 2 years shall be placed in grade 2; and village carriers when they receive their regular appointments shall be placed in grade 1. In determining the aggregate period of service upon which promotions are to be based, all time served as a letter carrier in the village delivery service is to be included: Provided, That hereafter substitute carriers in the village delivery service when appointed regular carriers in the village delivery service shall have credit for actual time served on a basis of 1 year for each 265 days of 8 hours served as a substitute, and appointed to the grade to which such carrier would have progressed had his original appointment as substitute been to grade 1. Any fractional part of a year's service shall be included within his service as a regular employee in determining eligibility for promotion to the next higher grade following appointment to a regular position: Provided further, That letter carriers in the village delivery service shall be promoted successively after 1 year's satisfactory service in each grade to the next higher grade until they reach the third grade. All promotions shall be made at the beginning of the quarter following 1 year's satisfactory service in the grade. The pay of substitute letter carriers in the village delivery service shall be at the rate of 55 cents per hour."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on July 1, 1935.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 3, strike out after the word "grade", all of the rest of line 3 and insert in lieu thereof "$1,300; second grade, $1,400; third grade $1,500."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CERTAIN TRIBES OF INDIANS IN THE STATE OF OREGON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7779, conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine claims of certain bands or tribes of Indians residing in the State of Oregon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRUAX, Mr. McFARLANE, and Mr. COSTELLO objected.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement. If the gentlemen will tell me what their objection is, perhaps I can reach it quicker.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I objected, and I will tell the gentleman. This is entirely too large an amount of money to be considered in this manner. This bill involves $6,000,000 and we propose to pass here such a bill without investigation, without consideration, and without deliberation. I think such a system is all wrong. When we spend $6,000,000 or more to reimburse the Indians for land or for other claims, it ought to be gone into in a thorough manner. I do not believe that such a bill ought to be passed by this method, that is, by unanimous consent.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, taking up the gentleman's first objection, the amount involved is not $6,000,000. The entire amount of the claims in case they should be allowed when the cases are brought, and this bill simply confers jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine these claims, is about $1,500,000.

Mr. TRUAX. May I inform the gentleman that the total amount claimed in the suit against the United States is $6,177,587.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman will permit me to answer the two questions which he asked I will do so. It is true that the gross amount of the claims total about $6,000,000, but there are offsets which amount to between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000. The estimated net amount which the Indians would receive, therefore, in case the suits brought in the Court of Claims are decided favorably to the Indians, would not exceed $1,500,000.

As to the statement that the subject matter of this bill was not investigated, may I say that it has been investigated very thoroughly by the Indian Affairs Committee of both the House and Senate. The testimony was heard by those committees from Indians and others who testified before committees of the House and Senate and both committees reported the bill unanimously. It is not unusual for a bill of this kind to be put upon the Consent Calendar. If that objection is all the gentleman has in mind, I think in all reasonableness and in good conscience he ought to withdraw it.

Mr. TRUAX. May I ask the gentleman from Oregon a question. The gentleman understands that the Government faces a huge national debt?

Mr. MOTT. That is quite true.

Mr. TRUAX. That debt is piling up every day, and necessarily so, because there are 22,000,000 people that must be fed, clothed, and sheltered.

There has been recently proposed a new tax program. There are many who favor that program and there are many who oppose the program. I believe the opponents of such a tax program are conscientious in their belief and views, but the fact remains that this tremendous debt piles up every day. Now, is the gentleman in favor of adding to that public debt to the extent of $6,000,000, with no provision made for the securing of the funds needed to pay those claims?

I think it is poor business. I think it is a poor governmental policy.

Mr. MOTT. May I say that the gentleman from Oregon is not in favor of piling up the national debt, but I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this is not an increase of debt at all. This bill simply gives to the Court of Claims jurisdiction to hear these suits, and to try and determine them.

Mr. TRUAX. And they must be paid.

Mr. MOTT. If the Indians prevail, of course, the claims must be paid.

Let me tell the gentleman how the claims originated. Back in 1855 the Government undertook by an unratified treaty to move these Indians from western Oregon over to eastern Oregon. The Government took their lands away from them without paying anything for the lands, intending to put these Indians on reservations in eastern Oregon. They moved whole tribes of Indians over into eastern Oregon among a strange people. The Indians of eastern Oregon would not allow the western Indians to stay; therefore, they had to come back to western Oregon. When the Indians returned to western Oregon they found that their land had been sold and disposed of by the Federal Government. To date they have not received anything on account of those lands.

All that this bill provides is that the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine this long standing controversy; that is all. It does not obligate the Government of the United States to pay anything.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I understand that perfectly, but I should like to point out that if any President of the United States is ever going to balance the Federal Government it cannot be done by such work as is done in Congress. What I mean is if you were conducting your own business, running your own business, you would not entertain for a second the payment of a large claim unless you had made provision to raise the money with which to pay the claim.

Mr. MOTT. We do not know whether the claims are going to be allowed by the court, even if the court is given jurisdiction to try them.

Mr. TRUAX. That is what we are doing here every day. We are incurring more debt. We are not consulting the Director of the Budget, we are not consulting the President, and we are not consulting the Comptroller General.

In my judgment, we should stop right now on these bills involving millions of dollars. We should take an inventory, and then you and I can go out and talk intelligently about balancing the Budget.

Mr. MOTT. The question of balancing the Budget is not involved in a bill of this nature, the sole purpose of which is to give jurisdiction to a court to try a lawsuit. It is getting to be absolutely futile in this body, Mr. Speaker, for anyone to bring up a meritorious bill on the Consent Calendar if it involves more than 75 cents, without running into objection by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. This is a most unmeritorious bill, in my judgment.

Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. McFARLANE, and Mr. TRUAX objected.

STENOGRAPHIC GRADE IN THE RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7506, to provide for a stenographic grade in the offices of Chief Clerk and Superintendent in the Railway Mail Service.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. COSTELLO. I reserve the objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, the author of the bill is not on the floor, but I wish to explain to the gentleman that the bill affects about 100 stenographers in the Railway Mail Division. It provides for two classifications and it allows the men who enter the Railway Mail Service and who have to carry out these scheme examinations and stand tests ever so often to be promoted to grade 5, and I do not think the gentleman is quite fair in his objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. The Post Office Department is opposed to the bill.

Mr. SWEENEY. The Post Office Department favors the bill with the amendment.

Mr. MEAD. The Department approves of the creation of the stenographic grade, but does not approve of the promotion of railway postal clerks to grade 5. Under the recommendation of the Department he would be promoted to grade 4, but I think the gentleman will see the fairness of the legislation if he will consider two stenographers in the Railway Mail Service, one transferring over from the Department of Agriculture, not in any way subject to the schemes or the tests of the Service, one who could not be transferred to terminal work or work on the railroads, and then the other stenographer who took his examination as a railway mail clerk, who has been subject to the scheme examinations, who may be transferred to terminal or road work, and surely the gentleman will see that in the creation of a stenographic grade, the one who has the superior responsibility should be allowed to advance one grade further.

Mr. SWEENEY. I may say there are about 100 employees affected.

Mr. MEAD. I think this is a very fair bill. It is of minor importance and the Department favors it in principle.

Mr. McFARLANE. The Department states, "Their duties, being largely the routing and less responsible work to be found in large organizations, do not justify the promotion." Therefore, the Post Office Department opposes the passage of the bill in its present form.

Mr. SWEENEY. The letter of the Department also states, "A proposed bill prepared to show a stenographic grade is submitted herewith, and we recommend that it be substituted for H. R. 7506."

Mr. McFARLANE. Has the gentleman such an amendment prepared?

Mr. SWEENEY. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. If you will offer that amendment, I shall not object.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the thirteenth paragraph of section 7 of the act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes", approved February 28, 1925 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 621), is amended to read as follows:

"Clerks assigned to the office of division superintendent or chief clerk shall be promoted successively to grade 5, and in the office of division superintendent 8 clerks may be promoted to grade 6, and in the office of chief clerk two clerks to grade 6: Provided, That clerks assigned to the position of stenographer who have not entered the Railway Mail Service from the eligible list for appointment to the Railway Mail Service shall be promoted successively to grade 4."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "Service", strike out the words "shall be promoted successively to grade 4" and insert "shall not be promoted above grade 4."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SWEENEY: At the end of the bill insert:

"Clerks assigned to the office of division superintendent or chief clerk shall be promoted successively to grade 5, and in the office of division superintendent 8 clerks may be promoted to grade 6, and in the office of chief clerk 2 clerks to grade 6: Provided, That clerks assigned to the position of stenographer who have not entered the Railway Mail Service from the eligible list for appointment to the Railway Mail Service shall not be promoted above grade 4."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, if there is no other business to come before the House, I am willing for the gentleman to make a speech, but if there is going to be other business, if there is going to be suspensions, I think they should come first. I am not going to allow any speeches at this time.

Mr. GREEN. I do not want to make a speech, I want to explain the bill and then ask unanimous consent to return to it.

Mr. SNELL. I object.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF WISCONSIN

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6869, authorizing the Chippewa Indians, of Wisconsin, to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN. For the time being, Mr. Speaker, I object.

AUTHORIZING A CAPITAL FUND FOR THE CHIPPEWA INDIAN COOPERATIVE MARKETING ASSOCIATION

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6228, authorizing a capital fund for the Chippewa Indian Cooperative Marketing Association.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, and to loan such sum to the Chippewa Indian Cooperative Marketing Association. The amount so loaned to said association shall be available for all purposes, including compensation and expenses of attorneys, purchase of land and erection of suitable buildings, necessary to the businesslike operation of a cooperative marketing system to be conducted in accordance with articles of incorporation and bylaws approved by the Secretary of the Interior. All funds loaned the association under this authorization shall bear interest at 4 percent per annum and shall be repaid to the Chippewa tribal fund within a period of 10 years from date of such loans.

SEC. 2. The use of funds hereby authorized shall not disbar the association from receiving loans from any amounts appropriated pursuant to section 10 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 986), authorizing the creation of an Indian credit revolving fund.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior shall formulate rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the figures "$150,000" and insert "$100,000."

Page 1, line 10, after the word "and", insert the word "reasonable."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE ACT TO PROVIDE FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC BUILDINGS

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6645, to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes", approved May 25, 1926.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN. I object.

REGULATION OF TOLLS ON CERTAIN BRIDGES OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 7659) to provide that tolls on certain bridges over navigable waters of the United States shall be just and reasonable, and for other purposes, as amended by the committee, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter tolls for passage or transit over any bridge over any of the navigable waters of the United States, if such bridge is used for purposes of travel or transportation in interstate or foreign commerce, shall be just and reasonable; but the provisions of this act shall not apply to any bridge subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, as amended, nor to any bridge built under the authority of the legislature of the State across rivers or other waterways the navigable portions of which lie wholly within the limits of a single State.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is authorized, either upon complaint or upon his own initiative, to conduct an inquiry at any time for the purpose of determining whether any toll charged for passage or transit over any bridge to which this act applies is in violation of the provisions of section 1, and if he finds, after full opportunity for hearing, that such toll is in violation of such provisions he is authorized and empowered to determine and by order to prescribe what will be the just and reasonable toll to be thereafter charged, and after such order takes effect it shall be unlawful to collect a toll for such passage or transit in excess of that so prescribed. Any such order shall take effect upon the expiration of 30 days after its issuance.

SEC. 3. Any order issued under section 2 may be reviewed by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia or the circuit court of appeals for any judicial circuit in which the bridge in question is wholly or partly located, if a petition for such review is filed within 3 months after the date such order was issued. The judgment of any such court shall be final, except that it shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari, in the manner provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended. The review by such courts shall be limited to questions of law, and the findings of fact by the Secretary of War, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. Upon such review, such courts shall have power to affirm or, if the order is not in accordance with law, to modify or to reverse the order, with or without remanding the case for a rehearing, as justice may require.

SEC. 4. In the execution of his functions under this act the Secretary of War, or any officer or employee designated by him, is authorized to hold hearings, examine witnesses, and receive evidence at any place designated by him, and to administer oaths and affirmations, and require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents from any place in the United States. In any case of disobedience to any such subpena the Secretary of War may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents. No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, and documents in any inquiry under this act, or in obedience to any such subpena, or in any cause or proceeding, criminal or otherwise, based upon or arising under this act, on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to criminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that any individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying. Any person who shall neglect or refuse to attend and testify, or to answer any lawful inquiry, or to produce books, papers, or documents, if in his power to do so, in obedience to a subpena or lawful requirement under this act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not to exceed $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 5. In any case where there is in effect a toll prescribed by an order issued under section 2, for passage or transit over any bridge to which this act applies, any person who demands or collects a toll for such passage or transit in excess of that so prescribed shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not to exceed $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] If not, the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to ask the gentleman to yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. As I understand this bill, it is designed to correct some of the abuses that we have heard debated today. In other words, the bill will place a certain correctional charge over the toll bridges in the War Department, and the purpose of the bill is to seek a reduction of some now existing rates rather than to authorize an increase in tolls. Is that true?

Mr. SPENCE. Under the bridge law of 1906 the Secretary of War was given power to regulate tolls on all bridges that were constructed subsequent to that time, and to see that those tolls were just and reasonable. Bridges that were constructed before that time in some instances are unregulated. This bill simply gives the War Department power to see that tolls on bridges constructed before 1906 are just and reasonable and puts them in the same category with the bridges constructed since that time.

Mr. TRUAX. Does not that prove the contentions that I have been making, namely, that we have in existence today toll bridges that have been collecting tolls for 40 years and more.

Mr. SPENCE. At least the public is entitled to know whether tolls are just and reasonable. If they are not, they should receive relief; and if they are just and reasonable, they should be advised of that fact.

Mr. CHAPMAN. And is it not a fact that the War Department reported that there are only six bridges in the United States that this will affect?

Mr. SPENCE. Only 6 bridges, and 4 of those bridges are from Cincinnati to Covington and Newport, in the district I represent in Kentucky. There is one other bridge at Dubuque, Iowa, and one at Louisville affected by this bill, according to the War Department.

Mr. CHAPMAN. And is it true that they are the only bridges, so far as the War Department knows, that are regulated by no power whatever?

Mr. SPENCE. Yes. It is obviously just that there should be some regulation.

Mr. KENNEY. What is there in the bill to compel the Secretary of War to act when the complaint is made that a charge is unjust and unreasonable?

Mr. SPENCE. The bill provides that he shall act either on his own initiative or on complaint.

Mr. KENNEY. Does that mean that he shall have to act on complaint or will he do just as he does now—act or not, as he desires?

Mr. SPENCE. We have written that he must act into the law, and that is all that we can do. The language is mandatory.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill passed?

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION OF PRISON-MADE PRODUCTS

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2904) to prohibit the interstate transportation of prison-made products in certain cases, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to transport or cause to be transported, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, or aid or assist in obtaining transportation for or in transporting any goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined wholly or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation), or in any penal or reformatory institution, from one State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country, into any State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, where said goods, wares, and merchandise are intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise in violation of any law of such State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof. Nothing herein shall apply to commodities manufactured in Federal penal and correctional institutions for use by the Federal Government.

SEC. 2. All packages containing any goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined wholly or in part by convicts or prisoners, except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation, or in any penal or reformatory institution, when shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce shall be plainly and clearly marked, so that the name and address of the shipper, the name and address of the consignee, the nature of the contents, and the name and location of the penal or reformatory institution where produced wholly or in part may be readily ascertained on an inspection of the outside of such package.

SEC. 3. Any person violating any provision of this act shall for each offense, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, and such goods, wares, and merchandise shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the seizure and forfeiture of property imported into the United States contrary to law.

SEC. 4. Any violation of this act shall be prosecuted in any court having jurisdiction of crime within the district in which said violation was committed, or from, or into which any such goods, wares, or merchandise may have been carried or transported, or in any Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or the District of Columbia, contrary to the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question or two. I want to have him make a statement and explain the bill. I do not care to demand a second, as I have no desire to control time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, the Hawes-Cooper Act is a very short act and reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined, wholly or in part, by convicts or prisoners, except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation, or in any penal and/or reformatory institutions, except commodities manufactured in Federal penal and correctional institutions for use by the Federal Government, transported into any State or Territory of the United States and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage, shall upon arrival and delivery in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, and merchandise had been manufactured, produced, or mined in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in the original package or otherwise.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect 5 years after the date of its approval.

Now what Congress did there was to divest itself of its interstate commerce character on goods, wares, and merchandise produced by prison labor. So that if it was desired to send prison made goods into the State of Ohio and the State of Ohio had a law forbidding the sale of prison made goods in that State, this provided that they could not be sent into the State of Ohio. Now in this bill before us it is provided that they shall be punished by $1,000 fine if they send prison made goods into the State of Ohio.

Mr. SNELL. This gives them the right to send them in, but they must comply with the State law?

Mr. CONNERY. No. They cannot send them in if the State does not want them in. If the State of Ohio says, "We do not allow the sale of prison made goods", this law provides a penalty for sending them into the State of Ohio.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Did not the original act provide a penalty?

Mr. CONNERY. No. That is just what this law does. This provides a penalty to enforce the Hawes-Cooper Act.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I will, certainly.

Mr. RICH. If a manufacturer would send them into a State where they are prohibited, is the fine imposed on the first offense or are they notified first?

Mr. CONNERY. The bill provides that—

Any person violating the provisions of this act shall, for each offense, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, and such goods, wares, and merchandise shall be forfeited to the United States.

I would say on the first offense they would be punished.

Mr. RICH. It might be a wise thing if they were notified, and then if they violated the law they would be punished.

Mr. CONNERY. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this is one bill which came out of the Committee on Labor on which we have received no opposition from manufacturers, but plenty of telegrams in favor of it.

Mr. RICH. I am in sympathy with it, except that sometimes an individual does something not knowingly, and to give him a $1,000 fine is a pretty severe punishment.

Mr. CONNERY. He is put on notice by the laws of his State and the Federal law of the Nation at the same time, a double notice, and therefore I do not believe that he should be excused for a first offense, because all offenders would claim that they did not know the law.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

GEORGE ROGERS CLARK SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2865) to amend the joint resolution establishing the George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission, approved May 23, 1928.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the joint resolution establishing the George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission, approved May 23, 1928, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. The Commission shall cease and terminate June 30, 1937."

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, in addition to the sums heretofore appropriated for carrying out the purposes of such joint resolution, as amended, a sum not to exceed $50,000 for carrying out such purposes.

SEC. 3. The unexpended balances of the appropriations heretofore made for carrying out the purposes of such joint resolution, as amended, shall be available until expended.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that I called up by unanimous consent on last Thursday. At that time, time did not permit to fully explain the bill, although we made some headway with it.

The Senate has passed this bill, and the House committee has reported it out without any minority report, and, as I understand, it is a unanimous report.

This is an emergency measure. The George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission expired by operation of law on July 1 of this year. This bill proposes to extend the time for 2 years. It is asking for an authorization of $50,000.

The minority leader questioned me about the matter the other day, and I told him the reason for this authorization. At the time the original appropriation was made it was thought that would be sufficient to carry this project through to completion. Since then the project has been practically completed. The memorial is built. The original 23 acres that were purchased by the State of Indiana have been improved with walks and drives, and the proper landscape gardening has been applied, but at the rear of this memorial there are some three and a half or four acres of ground that carry a gas reservoir tank, which is very unsightly and which stands there in the background. I have here some photographs of it, and I have shown these to several Members and I will be glad to show them to others. The Commission believes that to complete this memorial as it should be, with the proper background and surroundings, this particular tract of ground should be purchased and embellished.

To the side of the ground there is a railroad switch, which the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad has agreed to take out without cost; but that leaves this entire fill to be made by the Commission, in order to make the ground uniform in its grade, and that operation has to be taken care of, and a river wall must be built to complete the grounds as they should be. Those items will be covered by this additional authorization.

The Commission has gone into this matter rather fully before both the House and the Senate committees. Mr. KELLER and Mr. TREADWAY have both stated that in order to complete this memorial as it should be, as you and I and every Member of Congress would like to see it completed, this authorization should be made. After all, this amount of $50,000 is a small item, if we take into consideration the fact that the State of Indiana has invested between $900,000 and $1,000,000 and the Federal Government has invested $1,775,000. This is one of the most handsome memorials to be found anywhere in the world. In fact, many who have visited it say it is the equal of the Lincoln Memorial. Of course, it memorializes a great event in the Northwest, the capture of old Fort Sackville at Vincennes, which brought into the Union the first territory that was acquired by the Thirteen Original States. This territory is composed of Ohio,

Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin. It was really the acquisition of territory that opened the gateway to the West for the Lewis and Clark Expedition to the Pacific, which made us an imperial nation. Because of its national character, because of its artistic beauty, the Commission believes that this authorization should be made.

I should be glad to yield to anyone for any further explanation.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. RICH. In reference to the expenditure of $50,000 for 4½ acres of ground, the gentleman states that this is a small item. It seems to me that $50,000 is a pretty big item. We in the House of Representatives in the last year or so have become so used to talking in terms of billions that we do not know anything about that when it comes down to talking about $50,000, which many Members of the House might know something about, we do not recognize it. I am not going to object to this bill, but I do object to the statement that $50,000 is a small item. I think it is quite a big item.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Certainly it is a large sum of money to you, to me, or to anyone; but had the gentleman been here as long as some of us, he would realize that in the construction of memorials it is impossible in advance to foresee every item. Items are bound to arise which could not be contemplated. What I say is that, compared with the amount of money the Federal Government and the State of Indiana already have invested in this memorial, the item asked in this bill is small. It is small by comparison, but I do not mean to convey the idea that it is a trivial matter at all.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. Was this gas plant there at the time the site was purchased?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes; and it was then in operation. At that time they wanted $150,000. Since then natural gas has been piped into Vincennes, and this particular gas tank and property is no longer in use. It can be purchased for a very small price compared to what they were asking at the time the site was acquired. I think it can be bought now for something in the neighborhood of $12,000 or $15,000. The removal of this structure and the landscaping of this area will be an embellishment to this memorial and complete its artistic features. This land will have to be put in shape after it is acquired. These 3½ or 4 acres are not landscaped. After the railroad switch is removed the site will have to be filled in, and there are other things that will have to be done to it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Can the gentleman assure us that this is the end?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I can assure the gentleman that this is the end. It is the end because that is the statement made before the committee. No other item or sums will be asked; and so far as I am concerned, I can make the statement that it will be the last appropriation for this purpose necessary by Congress.

Mr. MICHENER. I hope the gentleman stays in Congres, if for no other reason that that we will have somebody who is responsible. I remember when the original appropriation was made. It was just like all similar propositions; we were assured that the appropriation provided would be sufficient, that all details were provided for, that there was no question but what they could complete this splendid memorial and within the time provided. Now we are asked for an additional $50,000, and are asked to extend the life of the commission 2 years. What guarantee have we that within 2 years they may not determine that some other structure a mile or 2 away spoils the esthetic view of the memorial, that to study and determine this question the life of the commission should be extended another 2 years, and a decision reached that an appropriation is necessary to tear down some more buildings?

If the gentleman assures us, first, that he will stay in Congress—because we all hope he will—secondly, that when such time comes he will be on the floor to defend the country against a further appropriation I do not think we ought to object.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I thank the gentleman for wishing that I stay in Congress. I cannot answer that; but so far as the balance of his statement is concerned, I give him the same guarantee that was given the committee, that this will be the last time an appropriation will be asked for this purpose. This bill has been made necessary by reason of the emergency that has arisen. I showed the gentleman these pictures, but I show them to him again. He can see for himself how that gas tank stands out there and how it mars the beauty of the memorial.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. Did the original act provide that funds for the memorial should be contributed 50 percent by the Federal Government and 50 percent by the State of Indiana?

Mr. GREENWOOD. No; that was not the situation. The State of Indiana agreed to purchase the land for the memorial, the Federal Government to build the memorial and beautify the grounds.

The original request for this memorial was $1,750,000. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] was then Chairman of the Committee on the Library. He told us he would support a bill appropriating $1,000,000, but before the bill reached the stage of consideration on the floor he was converted to it and himself recommended the full amount of $1,750,000.

The pending bill provides for an item that has arisen since then.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Has the Commission any money at the present time?

Mr. GREENWOOD. It has some $10,000 or $12,000, as I understand; but I understand further that this money is committed and will be needed to complete existing contracts.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me $12,000 might be a reasonable amount to complete this project.

Mr. GREENWOOD. No; it would not. I took that up with the gentleman from New York. Other things must be done besides acquiring this gas company property. The railroad switch must be removed and the site filled, the river wall must be built, and then there is the embellishment of the three and a half acres after they are acquired, the building of certain drives, sidewalks, and other structures.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. THURSTON. Compared to the amount that has been expended for the erection of this memorial the authorization carried in the pending bill is a very small matter.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I have expressed myself on that.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. Just exactly how much money is being asked?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. STEFAN. Is that in addition to what they have already received?

Mr. GREENWOOD. That is in addition to the original authorization.

Mr. STEFAN. What was the total amount received for this particular project?

Mr. GREENWOOD. One million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. STEFAN. How much did the organizations in Indiana pay?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The State of Indiana raised between $900,000 and $1,000,000 by a special tax levy and by bond issues of the city of Vincennes and the county, until they exhausted their credit and went above the 2 percent limitation.

Mr. STEFAN. Is an additional $50,000 needed to the $12,000 now on hand?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. In other words, $62,000 is needed?

Mr. GREENWOOD. That is the amount we need, including the balance on hand.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. May I ask whether or not the gentleman, when he introduced his bill, expected to get the $50,000 or did he make it $50,000 like Texas did when they asked for $3,000,000 for their celebration, with the expectation that it would be cut in two?

Mr. GREENWOOD. May I say to the gentleman from Michigan that I did not introduce this bill? It was introduced and passed in the Senate. It is not my bill. The memorial is in my district, however. The Federal Government has been wonderful and liberal in regard to the amount allowed. We have no complaint. All the understandings have been carried out between the Federal Government and the State. The State has committed itself to take care of the memorial throughout the years, and the memorial will be added to our State conservation system. The State, of course, as I stated, has assumed the obligation to carry out the expense of maintenance of this memorial through the years.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, it appears that adjoining the George Rogers Clark memorial at Vincennes, Ind., there was a great big gas tank. I have no objection to those people out there having a memorial, but back in 1928 the Congress authorized the memorial. It was built. The first part of the situation was that we authorized an original appropriation of $1,000,000. Then they came back, and despite the protests of some of us, they got $750,000 more. We all understood when the thing came up here at first that it would be one bite and that the cut in the appropriation that was made at that time meant something and that we were not to have another bite. But they came back a year or two later and got $750,000 more. They have built this magnificent memorial. Now, with reference to the gas tank which was standing there, just as it stands now, at the time the original plans were contemplated. This gas tank was not included in the original set-up. It turns out that it has become unprofitable and its owners have abandoned it. It is going to be a nice thing now to sell to Uncle Sam or to the State of Indiana as a part of this memorial. So the State of Indiana is asked to buy this thing and the Congress is asked to put up $50,000 to enlarge the project to cover 23 additional acres.

Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to a memorial coming to the till once. When it comes to the till twice, as this one did, it is bad enough, but when it comes to the till three times it seems to me it is almost enough to make folks stop and think.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARNOLD. The State of Indiana has raised the money and bought the additional land. Does the gentleman think a memorial of this kind should be left in an unfinished condition? All on earth there is to be done with this money is to build a river wall along there, put in some walks, do some landscaping, and things of that kind, which is absolutely necessary to make this a completed project. I think if the gentleman understood the situation as I do, and I am thoroughly familiar with it because I have been there a number of times, he would raise no objection to the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this is the way I feel about the matter. I hate to get up here on the floor and object, because so many of my friends live in that neighborhood and are interested in this memorial. But I am tremendously impressed by the fact that when we go ahead and lay out plans to build a memorial, we ought at that time to have the project properly under consideration and we ought to have a plan, go through with it and complete it and have it over with. Unless we do that these things will never end.

In this particular case the appropriation was cut down once, but the cutting down did not mean anything. A new project, which was not even thought of at the time the original proposition was under consideration, is now brought up and the Congress is asked to appropriate another $50,000. For my own part I cannot see why we should spend $50,000 on an additional project that was not in contemplation at the time the original layout was made, and I want to be as liberal as possible with these people. I want to do something for my friends in that territory, but in all charity I think this proposition should be turned down at this time.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GREENWOOD. In my statement I called the attention of the gentleman and Members of the House to the fact that when this tank was in use it could not have been bought for less than $150,000. Since that time things have changed and this land with these structures, lying in the heart of Vincennes, can be bought for one-tenth of the original amount, which we considered in the beginning too prohibitive to even consider. I want to correct the gentleman's idea that somebody will unload something on to this commission, because the commission is composed of reasonable businessmen, and unless this gas tank and property can be bought at a reasonable figure they will go into court and condemn it. There is no agreement now to sell it at any fixed price.

Mr. MICHENER and Mr. RICH rose.

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from Indiana has suggested in his remarks that this is an emergency matter. As a matter of fact, the Ways and Means Committee of the House is wrestling with an emergency matter now which is a question of taxation in an effort to balance the Budget. We all realize that we must become tax conscious.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. MICHENER. Not now. We all realize that the time has arrived when we must begin to think about all this spending. It seems to me, if we have erected a splendid and beautiful memorial out there and off in the distance there stands an unsightly gas tank, perchance, we can better perform our duty by saving this $50,000 and begin today rather than to further beautify these grounds at the taxpayers' expense. We all want to do these things, and we have been continuing to do them throughout the months until the time has arrived when we must do something to save money, and if the gentleman will permit, I wish to observe that our Committee on the Library has become memorial and monument minded of late. They need someone to remind them that these things are beautiful and are timely when we can afford them, but with taxes mounting the time must come when we must stop this kind of thing, and I do not know a better time than right now.

Mr. TABER. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. We are discussing a matter of taxation and we are trying to find funds now to finish this memorial, and if it is a memorial that the gentleman from Indiana and the Committee on the Library thinks should be finished, why can they not get the money from the $4,880,000,000 that has been appropriated, so that the Ways and Means Committee will not be called upon to raise this $50,000 to take care of this project? Would it not be a good thing if they would take this $50,000 from the $4,880,000,000 appropriation?

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I am going to answer that question myself before I yield to anyone else.

In my humble opinion, and it is humble, we should not load things on to the $4,000,000,000 proposition. That $4,000,000,000 was appropriated for certain purposes. Instead of wasting a great deal of it, only so much of it as is absolutely necessary to take care of needed relief should be spent, and the rest of the money should be kept in the Treasury so that we do not tremendously unbalance the Budget, and instead of increasing the tremendous deficit of almost $4,000,000,000 a year, we should also stop the expenditure of public moneys whenever it is not absolutely necessary. This is the time for us to begin if we are ever going to stop. You can never stop, unless you stop, and we seem to be running absolutely wild in this Congress in appropriating money for everything that anybody wants.

I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey, if he wants to ask a question. Does the gentleman want to ask about a lottery?

Mr. KENNEY. I simply want to say that the gentleman would not have to worry so much about a debt of $4,800,000,000 if the gentleman would get behind the Ways and Means Committee and point out the way that the money could be raised in the practical, sensible manner that other countries use by establishing a national lottery. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TABER. I do not want to put the Government of the United States into the gambling business.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. GREENWOOD. This Commission has not undertaken to raise this money by a lottery and has not undertaken to go to the Public Works Administration as some others have. We have simply come back to the Congress which made the original authorization, on the theory that the Congress of the United States always wants to do things right and therefore wants to do this job right. The bill was passed in the Senate and we are simply attempting to complete this job as it was originally contemplated, in the same manner and in no other.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman know where we can get the $50,000?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think there is no doubt but what it will be coming along. After all, it will be spent almost entirely for labor because there must be the razing of these buildings and then there is the work on the ground in leveling and laying out walks and therefore practically all of the money will be spent in the employment of labor.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the meat of this situation seems to be that we have embarked on this enterprise and just like every other enterprise, if the Congress fails to meet its responsibility, they want to branch out. Of course, it is nice to have all these things that money can buy, but where are we going to get the money to pay for them? The only way we can get it is through inflation or by forcing the banks to call their loans against business people and then force them to buy Government bonds. I think it is time for the Congress of the United States to stop appropriating money that it does not have to appropriate and to set its face against any expenditures that are not absolutely needed.

I hope, with this situation in mind, the House will vote against this bill. I do not want to vote against my friends who live in this territory any more than the rest of you do, but I do feel a sense of responsibility to the people and the taxpayers not to load them up any heavier.

I hope that this bill will be beaten at this time.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I will yield.

Mr. KENNEY. I should like to make this statement and point out to the gentleman that it is strange that he will not admit that Congress could raise the money by a national lottery. I want to say further that when Congress years ago authorized a lottery in this country to build buildings in Washington it was approved by the President of the United States, and it was not considered gambling.

Mr. TABER. But we have developed and improved since that time. That bill preceded the great panic of 1837. I do not want to encourage any operation that will get us into that position at this time. I do not believe that we ought to embark on raising money by lotteries. We ought to stop this situation where we have been taxing the children for years and years and years, and I hope that Congress will meet its responsibility at this time.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If we continue in the way we have been going for the last 4 years expending money, how are our children and children's children going to exist?

Mr. TABER. I cannot answer the gentleman, but I hope that Congress will meet its responsibility.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], a member of the Committee on the Library.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I think there is a moral obligation existing in this small appropriation. I almost always agree with my good friend from New York [Mr. TABER] in his anxiety and desire to reduce expenditures, but here is a very meager sum in comparison with most of those which he and I have voted upon in the past. I have never seen the time when the Federal Treasury was so hard up that it could not meet a small obligation like the expenditure of $50,000.

I say there is a moral obligation to complete the construction of this memorial. It has been stated on the floor, and it was stated to the Library Committee when the first million dollars was appropriated by Congress, that it was recognized that the amount would not complete the undertaking. Then there was added to that $750,000, and that was expected to build the undertaking and, so far as I know, has; but I do not think there is a Member of this House that, if there was a hideous commercial obstruction standing in front of the Lincoln Memorial or the Washington Monument or any other great monument in this city, but that he would be in favor of making a modest appropriation to remove such an unsightly affair.

That is the situation here now. The pictures the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD] is showing indicate exactly the situation. Nearly $2,000,000 have been spent there. Why not permit at least the landscaping being done to clean up that situation? That is the only question involved. There is a hideous gas tank that does not belong there, which obstructs the attractiveness of the surroundings. I have not much of an artistic eye myself, but anybody looking at the picture the gentleman from Indiana has in his hand can see it is a disfigurement to the attractive surroundings of the neighborhood and ought not to be permitted to destroy the beauty of the landscape. We should make a decent surrounding for this handsome memorial. No more money will be spent by the Federal Government. The State of Indiana and the city of Vincennes have taken over this proposition. I think it is parsimonious on our part to prevent the cleaning up of that landscape situation. We ought to clean it up. It is just as though we had built a house in disagreeable surroundings, and when we got the house constructed realized what was there obstructing the view and we went around and bought up the land. It is no more than any woman or man in this membership would do in her or his own case. You cannot picture the whole thing when you start out. You have to take a little time to realize the surroundings in which any memorial is placed.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman is making an eloquent plea for Indiana. I agree with him in many respects, especially that we should eliminate these obstructions before a wonderful memorial. I call attention to the fact that here in Washington, about which the gentleman spoke a little while ago, there are obstructions before memorials. I think we should have the obstruction removed before the monument to William Jennings Bryan.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute more to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with the neighborhood of which the gentleman speaks. The fact that Mr. Bryan's statue is down there is no reason against making a most attractive approach along that river front. That whole river front, whether the Bryan statue is there or not, should be beautified. You are welcome to the statue of Bryan if you want it; I do not care anything about that. I think the Congress should not fight this small sum of money when you compare it with the large appropriations we are making for other purposes, and I trust that the rules will be suspended and the measure passed.

Mr. TABER. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts says that there is a moral obligation in connection with this. What does he mean by that?

Mr. TREADWAY. When this matter was first brought up it was expected that other appropriations would follow the first million-dollar appropriation.

Mr. HOFFMAN. For what purpose?

Mr. TREADWAY. Because it was known that the memorial which was under construction could not be built for the original appropriation. This is simply carrying out that agreement.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You say it was expected that more money would be appropriated to finish the memorial?

Mr. TREADWAY. It is all finished.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then they have their money and where is the moral obligation? Was not this gas tank there when they put the memorial down in front of it?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then whose fault was it? Should not the city remove it? If you want to spend money, and you are bound to spend it, apparently, there are other ways to be found in which to spend it. The other day I drove down through the country near Spotsylvania, the Wilderness, and Chancellorsville, viewing those battlefields and some of the cemeteries. If there is any moral obligation in respect to cemeteries, I don't suppose it rests on the Federal Government, but certainly it should make us all ashamed of ourselves to notice the condition of those cemeteries. They are Confederate cemeteries, it is true, but the grass and weeds have grown up so that you can hardly see the markers.

Why should we not, if money is to be spent merely for the purpose of creating work, take care of those cemeteries; at least destroy the weeds and put them into sod? True, those men fought to destroy the Government, but they honestly believed they were fighting for a just cause. The very least that we can do would be to, by our acts in caring for their graves, pay our tribute to their sincerity, their self-sacrifice, their loyalty, even though the event demonstrated they were in error.

In these days, when men are again seeking to wreck our Government, to destroy our liberties, and this without disadvantage to themselves—yes; when many times their efforts naturally result to their own political advantage—this Congress might well pause in its precipitate course of public spending, and far worse—that is, the throwing away of the safeguards which protect our people and our Government—and do this small honor to those who lie so neglected and forgotten so near the Nation's Capital.

Cannot the city where this monument for which you are seeking this appropriation, or the State of Indiana, get rid of the gas tank you consider so unsightly? Certainly they knew when they put that monument in there about the gas tank.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. I suggest to the gentleman this monument is built upon the site of old Fort Sackville, the old historic fort, and it became necessary, if there was to be a monument commemorating the event, to place it at that point. Of course, the gas tank came in there long years after that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why, surely, I suppose it did come in after the event you are commemorating, but did it come in there after you started to build the monument? No.

Mr. ARNOLD. The monument was built on the site of old Fort Sackville, the appropriate place for such memorial.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, why did you not figure on that when you were appropriating the money? When they were erecting the monument the cost of preparing the surrounding territory so that the monument might have a sightly location was properly a part of the original project, and succeeding Congresses should not, after the monument is completed, be from time to time required to appropriate additional sums. Congress, when asked for an appropriation for any purpose should be informed as to the ultimate cost of the project.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were ayes 68 and noes 22.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MCGEHEE, for 6 days, on acount of important public business.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JULY 16, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, May 13, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, July 15, 1935, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Keyes	Pittman
Ashurst	Coolidge	King	Pope
Austin	Copeland	La Follette	Radcliffe
Bachman	Costigan	Lewis	Reynolds
Bailey	Davis	Logan	Robinson
Bankhead	Dickinson	Lonergan	Russell
Barbour	Dieterich	McAdoo	Schall
Barkley	Donahey	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Bilbo	Duffy	McGill	Sheppard
Black	Fletcher	McKellar	Shipstead
Bone	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Borah	George	Maloney	Steiwer
Brown	Gerry	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Gibson	Minton	Townsend

Capper	Harrison	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hatch	Norris	Wagner
Carey	Hayden	Nye	Walsh
Chavez	Holt	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Clark	Johnson	Overton	White

Mr. VANDENBERG. I repeat the announcement as to the absence on account of illness of my colleague the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS].

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] are absent on important business.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] is necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

ELECTRIC-RATE SURVEYS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate letters from the Vice Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, compilations completed through the electric-rate survey of the domestic and residential rates in effect on January 1, 1935, in the States of Alabama, Arizona, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Minnesota, Montana, New Jersey, North Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Virginia, and Wisconsin, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORT OF BOARD OF VISITORS TO UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present for publication in the RECORD the report of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy at West Point. It begins:

The undersigned members of the Senate Board of Visitors—

And so forth. I ask that the entire report be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered; and the report will lie on the table.

The report is as follows:

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The undersigned members of the Senate Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy visited that institution on May 27 and 28, 1935.

We arrived at the Military Academy at 11 a. m. May 27, and were met by the Superintendent, Maj. Gen. William D. Connor. We then proceeded to headquarters, where the official salute was fired. We there met the members of the administration staff and inspected the headquarters offices and had an orientation discussion with the Superintendent. The schedule for the rest of our visit was as follows:

MONDAY, MAY 27

12 m. Observe cadets march to dinner.
12:30 p. m. Luncheon officers' mess with Superintendent and some members of the academic board.
1:45 p. m. Recitations in academic work.
3 p. m. Field artillery and cavalry barracks and stables; cadets at cavalry drill.
3:45 p. m. Cadet drill on plain and intramural sports.
4:30 p. m. Inspect cadet mess.
4:45 p. m. Visit bachelor officers' mess.
5:15 p. m. Review of the corps of cadets.
7:30 p. m. Dinner at Superintendent's quarters with members of academic board and officers of the Superintendent's staff.

TUESDAY, MAY 28

9:15 a. m. Arrive at post headquarters by automobile.
9:30 a. m. Visit chemical, electrical, and mechanical laboratories.
10 a. m. Surveying instruction in the field.
10:30 a. m. Visit cadet rooms.
10:35 a. m. Visit cadet store and tailoring shops.
10:45 a. m. Visit ordnance laboratory.
11:20 a. m. Organ recital at cadet chapel.
12:10 p. m. Dinner with cadets in cadet mess hall.
12:45 p. m. Tour of the post and inspection of new construction.
3 p. m. Departure for New York City.
4:50 p. m. Arrive New York City.

THE MISSION OF THE INSTITUTION

The educational objective of the United States Military Academy is to give the graduate a broad foundation upon which to build his future military career and to base his further technical studies in the Army service schools. The attention of the Board has been called to the fact that from time to time there has been some criticism of the curriculum and the pedagogic methods at the Military Academy. In considering these criticisms, one must always bear in mind the objective of the institution. West Point was founded for the sole purpose of producing officers for the Army. It has contributed in no small measure to other important activities affecting the welfare of the Nation, but these contributions of the Military Academy have been incidental to its prime function. The curriculum of the academy has developed throughout 133 years along lines which experience has proven tend best to promote the mission of the academy. For this reason the course is a technical one, very closely paralleling, we are informed, the scientific course at Princeton University. As in all other technical institutions, there are certain cultural studies which in a very important manner supplement the technical subjects essential to a scientific course. The result is that between 35 and 40 percent of the studies at the Military Academy may be termed "cultural", a larger percentage than will be found in many technical courses.

THE INDIVIDUAL CADET

No matter how often one visits the academy, each time one is struck anew by the simplicity and democracy that mark the lives of the cadets, as well as by the fact that neither the former status of the cadet in civil life nor that of his parents has any bearing upon his position as a cadet. The position he attains in the corps depends entirely upon himself and his personal characteristics.

The generous appropriations of Congress which have gone into the educational plant and service buildings, with certain exceptions to be mentioned later, are very adequate and complete for the number of cadets heretofore authorized by law. It is always a source of surprise to a visitor making his first inspection of West Point to realize how exceedingly simple and plain are the living conditions furnished to the cadets within this grand exterior. Two and sometimes three cadets live in a single room about 14 by 23 feet in size. These rooms are entirely without ornamentation and are characterized by neatness, cleanliness, and austere simplicity that is very striking. The cadets sweep out their own rooms, make up their own beds, dust the woodwork, and arrange their belongings for the daily inspections. The rooms are painfully bare and scrupulously clean and, when arranged for their daily inspection, are models of orderliness.

The Board was particularly interested in the living conditions of the cadets in view of the bill increasing the strength of the corps, which has now become law. This bill increases the maximum authorized number of cadets from 1,374 to 1,955. The maximum number that will probably ever be in the academy at one time will be about 1,825. The superintendent explained to us how he planned to care for the increment, and there is no doubt that the maximum number that will probably ever be in the academy can physically be cared for with the existing plant, without detriment to the health or welfare of the cadets. However, while your Board of Visitors is convinced that any young man is very fortunate indeed to secure the education and training which the Government furnishes him at the United States Military Academy at the price of some personal discomfort in living conditions, and believes that such conditions would not be detrimental to his health or welfare, the Board feels that the success of the Military Academy has been based upon certain practices and methods which have been tried out through many years and found good, and believes that all things considered, the Government's interests will be best served by increasing the capacity of the present plant so as to carry on the instruction and administration of the enlarged corps along lines practically identical with those found successful in the past and which have remained in force so many years only because experience has proved their wisdom. In our opinion, the Federal Government will be well repaid by the expenditure of such a sum as may be necessary to house the cadets in a less crowded way and provide certain other facilities now lacking which are commonly considered essential in a modern educational institution. These improvements are, briefly, the provision of barrack space so that no cadets shall have to live more than two in a room, a sufficient increase in classrooms and laboratories to meet modern requirements; and a sufficient increase in living quarters for the instructional staff, so that living conditions and instructional methods adopted as the result of more than a century of experience, and heretofore followed in the Military Academy, may be continued without deterioration.

In addition to these increases in facilities, there are certain other improvements which we shall enumerate later, the need for which has long been recognized by the academic board, but for which appropriations have never been made.

CADET MESS

On March 27 we inspected the cadet mess and on March 28 we had dinner with the cadets in their mess and the cadets were entirely unhampered in their comments. We found no complaint about the food, which we considered excellent considering its cost, quite satisfactory in quality, and ample in quantity for growing young men. The dining hall is sufficiently large to accommodate the proposed increase in the corps without undue crowding. The table service was simple in the extreme, but dishes and equipment were all marked by cleanliness and neatness. The food, while plain, was manifestly palatable and wholesome. There is one condition which the Board wishes to point out. The ration allowance is 75 cents, and if all amount were available, as at the United States Naval Academy, there could be no complaint in regard to the mess unless the price of living continues to increase. The value of the cadet ration is fixed by that of the midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy. Certain civilian mess employees are necessarily fed at the cadet mess and the cost of their food comes out of the cadet allowance, reducing that allowance by about 6 cents per cadet per day, making only approximately 69 cents available for feeding the cadet instead of the 75 cents which is available at the Naval Academy where the food of the mess attendants is elsewhere provided for. The additional amount necessary to pay for the food of these mess attendants ought to be provided in future appropriations for the support of the academy. The former allowance of 80 cents per day will be necessary in the near future if food prices continue to advance.

DRILL AND PHYSICAL TRAINING

All cadets receive the same training, which is progressive from the time that the fourth classman reports as a new cadet until he graduates. The plan is that he shall perform practically every kind of duty from that of a private up to that of company officer, including a certain amount of company administration.

The physical training of a cadet consists of two parts; drill being classed as one and athletics the other. One-half of the corps goes to military drill or instruction of some kind and at the same time the other half attends intramural athletics. The halves alternate from day to day between drill and athletics and rotate in the various games that they play.

This system of compulsory athletics was inaugurated about 1920 and has been in effect ever since. The theory upon which this practice is based is that the athletics not only furnish better physical training than do the ordinary military drills, but also that practically every young lieutenant must be a leader in the sports of his company and be able to act as an instructor in several sports and as an official in company contests.

The superintendent reports that the effect upon the physique of the cadets has been very favorable.

The authorities of West Point are watching with interest the experiment now being made at the United States Naval Academy, wherein practically all members of the first class are made company officers for short periods during their first class year, the permanent company officers not being chosen until the last part of the year. This experiment has been in effect less than 1 year, and the results achieved therefrom are being awaited with interest.

THE CADET STORE

The cadet store is a cooperative concern, operated by the authorities in the interest of the cadets. All articles are sold to the cadets at cost plus 5 percent, and whatever profit may accrue at the end of the year is repaid to the cadets in proportion to the amount that each has expended in the store during that period.

Our attention was drawn to the fact that there is no law requiring any deposit to be made by a new cadet entering the Military Academy, and that some new cadets make practically no deposit to cover the cost of their original equipment, nor does Congress make any provision for this original expense, which amounts to about $300. If a cadet who has made no deposit decides to resign or is found deficient during his first year, he will be in debt from a few dollars to nearly $300, depending on how long he has been at the academy. Such indebtedness is practically never liquidated. Congress now makes no provision for paying the cost of such initial equipment. The loss, therefore, falls upon those cadets who remain in the service and particularly upon those who have deposited a sufficient amount to pay for their original equipment upon their entrance to the academy. This is a hardship which the Board does not believe ought to be imposed upon the small pay of the cadets. The maximum loss that has fallen upon the corps due to such losses was about $2,500 in 1 year, a small amount for the Government but considerably larger proportionately to a young man receiving only $65 a month. We believe that future annual appropriations for the pay of cadets should carry a proviso approximately as follows: "Provided, That not to exceed $3,750 of this amount shall be available to liquidate the indebtedness of any cadets, separated from the service for any reason, who at the time of their separation are in debt to the cadet store."

ACADEMIC WORK

The academic work of the United States Military Academy is carried on in 13 departments, each headed by a professor. Nine of the professors are permanent and four are detailed for periods of 4 or 5 years. Ten of the professors are graduates of the Military Academy and three are graduates of civilian institutions. Each professor is assisted by an associate professor or an assistant professor, or both, and a number of instructors, all of whom are detailed from the officers of the Army, with the exception of 3 civilians in the department of modern languages—2 Frenchmen and 1 Spaniard.

Occasionally the teaching staff at the Military Academy has been criticized as to its origin and as to its qualifications as instructors. A study of the personnel now on duty at the academy does not bear out these criticisms. Of the three nongraduate professors, all of them hold one or more degrees from other universities and one of them holds degrees from four different institutions. Of the 10 other professors, all are graduates of West Point and three of them hold degrees from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and five of them are graduates of the Army War College. There are 155 instructors on duty at the academy, of whom 13 are nongraduates. Of these 13, 8 hold two degrees from civil institutions and 5 hold one degree. Of the 142 instructors who are graduates of the Military Academy, 109 of them have attended other colleges or universities, and 47 of them hold degrees from other colleges or universities. Of the 21 instructors in modern languages, 18 have studied the languages that they teach, either in France or Spain; and of the remaining 3, 1 has a master's degree in language from Harvard University and 1 a master's degree in language from Princeton University. An analysis of the foregoing qualifications will disprove any statement alleging that the instructors are not well equipped.

The time of the Board's visit to the academy coincided with that assigned to written tests in review of the academic work of the preceding 5 months, and, except in modern languages, there were no actual recitations in progress which the Board could attend. Our visits to classrooms were, therefore, limited to those in French and Spanish. The thoroughness of instruction was very gratifying, and we are confident that the methods in use will teach the students to speak the language as well as to read it, an end not always attained in teaching foreign languages. If the spirit which we observed in the recitations in modern languages obtains equally in other classes, and if the methods used in other classes are comparable to those that we observed, we feel assured that the Federal Government is fortunate in the teaching staff at its National Military Academy and that the cadets are being well and thoroughly instructed.

We met the head of each department of the academic board and were very favorably impressed by the enthusiasm and interest displayed by these professors in the subjects assigned to their departments. The Superintendent states that these characteristics are quite fully equaled by the ability of each in the specialty of his own department, and that he is quite satisfied with their work.

METHODS OF INSTRUCTION

There have been no recent changes in the methods of instruction which were described in detail in our report of last year. We are convinced that the instruction is thorough and that within the limits of the curriculum prescribed by the War Department the cadets are being well educated. The Superintendent and the heads of all departments apparently are alive to the fact that improvements are constantly being made in texts and in methods of instruction and that periodical changes will be required to keep abreast of the times. We are satisfied that such changes will be made whenever necessary. Most of the instructors at the academy are between the ages of 26 and 36. Given the required aptitude in the subject that they are to teach, their youth is a very considerable asset in that they bring to the teaching staff an enthusiasm and a knowledge of the youthful mind which does not always exist in an old instructor worn out with years of teaching. They also bring with them a knowledge of the service requirements of a young officer and are able to teach their subjects in the light of the requirements in the service of the young subaltern. Notwithstanding their youth, their carriage in their classrooms was marked by a dignity and seriousness of purpose which, added to their enthusiasm and earnestness, appealed to the Board very favorably. The War Department has continued its policy of giving a very high choice to the selection of officers for duty as instructors at the Military Academy, realizing that these instructors are highly instrumental in producing the class of young men desired as officers in the Army. Few officers do more than one tour of duty, and only a very occasional one does more than two tours of duty at the Military Academy. For this reason the problem of dealing with aged instructors which is admitted to be a serious one in civil institutions, is not one that exists at the Military Academy. Furthermore, if an officer is not satisfactory as an instructor, he need not be kept for a full 4 years, but can be gotten rid of as an instructor without prejudice to his career as a soldier.

During the past year the Military Academy was inspected by the committee on classification of universities and colleges of the Association of American Universities. This inspection apparently was quite satisfactory to the committee, and resulted in the following letter from its chairman to the Superintendent, which speaks for itself:

"MY DEAR GENERAL CONNOR: This is to inform you that the committee on classification of universities and colleges of the Association of American Universities, at its recent meeting in Chicago, found things at your institution in every way satisfactory.

"President Walters, who made the inspection for our committee, gave a very favorable report indeed. He found, perhaps somewhat to our surprise, a very liberal spirit, and that you were alive to the need of change from time to time. It is indeed gratifying to our committee to find everything so satisfactory.

"Very truly yours,

"(Signed) FERNANDUS PAYNE,
"Chairman."

APPEARANCE OF THE CORPS

The Board observed the cadets out of ranks, in the mess hall, in the classrooms, and at drills. The young men bore themselves in the same soldierly way that has always marked their bearing. The excellent physique of the cadets was most noticeable. This condition is largely due, in all probability, to the compulsory sports known as "intramural athletics." We noticed several cadets wearing glasses, and were pleased to learn that recently the standards for eyesight had been raised so as hereafter to require normal eyesight for admission. At the time of our inspection certain companies were going through a competitive drill, and their movements were marked by the accuracy and precision to be expected under the circumstances. A review of the entire corps was tendered to the Board and the ceremony was in keeping with the high reputation of the Corps of Cadets for such ceremonies.

HOSPITAL FACILITIES

The station hospital was visited by the chairman of the Board and apparently the same high standards that we noted at our visit last year are still maintained. Provision is made for hospital and out-patient medical, surgical, and dental treatment for all persons at the post, including cadets, officers, soldiers, and their families. The Superintendent reports that the hospital and allied medical activities have been very satisfactorily maintained and that they have been administered during the past year to his satisfaction. An additional wing, which was under construction when the Board visited West Point in 1934, has now been completed, and the present normal capacity of the hospital is 158, while it is susceptible of emergency enlargement to 200 beds. The hospital is splendidly equipped, and the staff, composed of selected officers of the Medical Department, is well organized and the members are devoted to their work. The character of service rendered conforms to the highest standards of civilian institutions. By far the great majority of persons entitled to hospitalization are healthy young men, either as cadets, officers, or enlisted men, and therefore the percentage of sick at any one time is usually very low, practically never running over 3 percent, and this number occurring only when there is an epidemic of colds.

BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

The buildings of the academy are well adapted for the purposes for which they were constructed and both buildings and grounds are maintained at a high standard at a reasonable cost of maintenance. The funds appropriated for maintenance at the Military Academy apparently are being expended with judgment and care. At the time of our inspection in 1934, a very considerable program of construction was under way. Nearly all of that construction has now been finished and that which still remains unfinished is within a small percentage of completion. The following table shows the items under construction last year and their present state as regards completion:

Barracks for military police, 100 percent completed.
Barracks for auxiliary detachments, 100 percent completed.
Grammar school, 100 percent completed.
Nurses' quarters, 100 percent completed.
Veterinary hospital, 100 percent completed.
Incinerator, 100 percent completed.
Sea-wall ramp in front of hangars, 100 percent completed.
Insulating and fireproofing hangars, 100 percent completed.
Junior officers' quarters, 92 percent completed.
Quartermaster storerooms, shops, etc., 83 percent completed.
Gymnasium, 63 percent completed.

All buildings at the academy can be divided into two classes, those for service purposes, and those for instructional purposes. The Board feels that the service facilities for West Point are now fairly well provided for. Last year the deficiency in suitable barracks for enlisted men was apparent. We are pleased to note this year that the enlisted men garrisoned at West Point and vital to the instruction of cadets are now well housed and cared for, and that rapid strides are being made in providing suitable warehousing and shop facilities. In all these respects conditions are materially improved over a year ago, and only a few improvements to be mentioned later, do we consider necessary.

As long ago as 1921 certain buildings for the proper instruction of cadets were pointed out by the then superintendent, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, as of urgent necessity. The Board confirms the necessity of certain facilities and urges that no more time be lost in supplying these deficiencies. They are needed today even more than they were 15 years ago, and with the contemplated increase in the strength of the Corps of Cadets their necessity will be materially increased.

The present gymnasium was built for a corps half the size of the present corps. An extension is now under construction but this extension will not fully provide all the space needed today. Physical instruction justly holds a prominent place in the course at West Point, since physical fitness is more essential in military life than it is in civil life. Therefore, facilities for physical instruction superior to those ordinarily found in civil colleges, might reasonably be expected at West Point. Today, however, instead of being superior to the gymnasiums of our leading colleges and universities, the gymnasium at the Military Academy suffers by comparison.

Academic building facilities are not adequate. We visited the various laboratories and while we were very favorably impressed at the ingenuity and resourcefulness that have been displayed in improvising mechanical and electrical laboratory space out of basements never intended for that purpose, and laboratory equipment out of material purchased and designed for an entirely different object, we feel that the existing facilities are not worthy of the institution. Certainly those in charge are to be commended for their energy in overcoming obstacles, but they have been badly handicapped by lack of space and modern equipment. The Board feels that with modern trends and advances, these laboratory facilities at West Point should be greatly improved.

What has been said above concerning mechanical and electrical laboratories applies with even more force to the ordnance and engineering laboratories and shops. The present building used for these purposes is over 100 years old and altogether inadequate. The need for this specific shop and mechanical instruction is greater today than ever before. The future Army officer is going to have more and more contact with mechanical equipment and must be trained to that end. It is worthy of note that instruction at West Point is being continually adjusted to meet the transition from animal traction to mechanical traction.

The Military Academy never has had an armory. The Board was perturbed to see dark basements, without natural light or ventilation, used for technical and tactical instruction purposes for the simple reason that winter instruction must be given and no other or better space has ever been provided. We were told that space for this purpose is being provided in the gymnasium extension now under construction. This is all well and good, but takes from the gymnasium space that cannot afford to be lost since even with the completion of the gymnasium annex now being built, full requirements for physical training will not be available. The construction of a suitable armory is of vital urgency.

The construction across the reservation of the New York State road called the "Storm King Highway", together with the increased power of rifle ammunition, have made the old target range unsafe and have caused its abandonment. This leaves the Military Academy of a Nation that has always prided itself upon its skill in shooting, in the anomalous position of being without a rifle range. Means should be provided without delay for the construction of a safe and suitable range.

It was stated above that with a few exceptions the service facilities at West Point have been reasonably well provided. It was explained to us, and the Board concurs, that certain extensions and replacements in the water-distribution system should be provided. The same applies to the heating and power plant. This done, and a suitable truck garage and freight yard provided, the service facilities at West Point should be in excellent condition to handle the needs of the academy for many years to come.

A few of the oldest officers quarters are rapidly reaching a point when their maintenance costs will be greater than carrying charges on new houses. Steps should be taken, therefore, to replace these old quarters and to supply the additional sets required to house all the personnel of the post which we consider desirable for the contemplated increase in the size of the corps of cadets. This will result in an ultimate saving of public funds and is in the interest of economy. It is estimated that about 60 sets of junior officers quarters will meet the above needs.

Mention was made in an earlier paragraph of the problem of housing the enlarged Corps of Cadets. The Board holds such strong sentiments in this matter that it feels the point should be emphasized by reiteration in this section covering buildings and grounds. As stated before, the Superintendent assured the Board that the recent increase in the strength of the corps of cadets voted by Congress can be handled without further construction for that specific purpose. This will result in a certain amount of crowding, and while such crowding can be justified as an emergency measure, the Board feels strongly that present standards should be maintained. Certainly no one can say that cadets at the Military Academy live in anything but the most spartan simplicity and we do not feel that the Nation should require a lowering of standards through permanent cramping and crowding. The Board wishes to place itself on record as urging the construction of additional cadet barracks so that the traditional standard of two cadets to a room can be maintained.

The adverse comments which the Board made last year on the substitution of unsightly brick work in the gymnasium and in the south barracks for the native granite in general use elsewhere at the academy are felt to be of special interest at this time when the Board is recommending certain additional construction at the Military Academy. The Board urges that all buildings which may be erected in the future be of granite, in keeping with the general tone of the predominating buildings and recommends further that no building program be undertaken that is not checked and passed upon by highly competent consultants from civil life.

THE THAYER-WEST POINT INN

A hotel of that name, owned by a private corporation, is operated under a revocable license on the grounds of the Military Academy. Unfortunately for the hotel, the families of cadets and officers who constitute most of the patrons of this hotel are not heavy spenders, and the quiet atmosphere of a military post does not encourage the patronage of individuals or organizations that do spend heavily. In addition to the foregoing, the cold winter climate of West Point does not encourage people to come to a country hotel in the winter time, and consequently the hotel is practically empty the first 3 months of the year, and is reported as barely paying its operating expenses. The hotel fills a great need for relatives of cadets and it is difficult to conceive how they would be accommodated if the present hotel were closed. However, it is a private corporation and the Board is not prepared to make any recommendation in regard to it under existing circumstances.

REVISION OF COPYRIGHT ACT

Mr. BORAH. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a telegram with reference to a pending bill.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 15, 1935.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Every author, composer, playwright, dramatist, and writer in Nation is opposed to United States Senate bill S. 3047. This bill revises entire Copyright Act, to detriment of American creative workers, and for benefit of users, such as broadcasters and other allied industries. It gives to foreign composers and playwrights rights denied American creative workers. Authors' League of America, American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers, Dramatists' Guild, Song Writers' Protective Association, and all other societies and organizations of creative workers of America are unanimously opposed to this legislation.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN TEXTILES IN PHILIPPINE MARKETS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present letters and other papers received from the Secretary of War, the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, and the Chief of Insular Affairs of the War Department with reference to Senate Resolution 163, submitted by me, which requests the Philippine Legislature to take action for the protection of American textiles in the Philippine markets. I request that the letters and papers be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the letters and papers were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 8, 1935.

Hon. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Chairman Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: In response to your letter of July 1, 1935, addressed to the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs of this Department, requesting a departmental report on Senate Resolution No. 163, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, I am enclosing herewith a memorandum submitted to me by the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs on this subject.

In view of the continuing responsibilities of this Government for the welfare of the Filipino people and of the fact that the Commonwealth government under the independence act is expected to be inaugurated in the very near future, I am of the opinion that the enactment of Senate Resolution No. 163 would be inappropriate at this time. It is recommended that the views set forth in the enclosed memorandum be given careful consideration by your committee.

Sincerely yours,

GEO. H. DERN,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS,
Washington, July 8, 1935.

Memorandum for the Secretary of War:

Subject: Senate Resolution 163, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session.

I am in receipt of a letter from the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, dated July 1, 1935, requesting a departmental report on Senate Resolution No. 163. The resolution provides:

"That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to advise the Governor General of the Philippine Islands to convey to the president of the Philippine Senate and the speaker of the Philippine House of Representatives a request that the legislature, before adjourning its present session, take such action as will protect effectively American textiles in the Philippine market."

It is regrettable that the important cotton textile trade of the United States is losing ground in competition with foreign textiles in the Philippine Islands, and it is hoped that remedies may be found in the near future that will alleviate this situation. However, it is believed the proposed legislation would be undesirable for the reason that, if enacted, it would be an invitation to the Philippine Legislature to modify in the most important particular their tariff without weighing its effect on their own people. Of all imports into the islands, cotton textiles is the most important to the Filipino people.

During the calendar year 1934 United States products entering the Philippine Islands comprised about 65 percent of Philippine imports, a level previously attained only once, namely, in 1932. This in spite of the fact that the United States' share in the cotton textiles entering the islands during 1934 was greatly reduced.

There were several causes contributory to this shrinkage in the United States cotton textile trade:

(a) The boycott of Japanese goods by Chinese merchants in the Philippine Islands in 1932 which resulted in a greatly increased development of the Japanese retail merchants organization in the islands.

(b) Shrinkage in the exchange value of the yen which favored Japanese exports in foreign markets.

(c) The rise in cost of production in the United States.

In spite of these factors, however, United States cotton cloth was about the only United States commodity which occupied a weak and unhealthy position in the Philippine market. It is believed this is true of United States cotton textiles in all other external markets.

It is noted that the volume of Japanese cotton textiles entering the continental United States in 1934 was nearly seven times as great as the volume entering in 1933, and represented an increase in value of more than 362 percent. Another example that may be cited is the Republic of Santo Domingo, where, according to the report of the general receiver of Dominican customs for the calendar year 1934, the volume of Japanese cotton textiles imported into that Republic increased 1,297 percent in 1934 over 1933. United States exports of cotton textiles to Santo Domingo decreased 38 percent, although the total amount of American goods entering that Republic during 1934 was about the same as in 1933, due to increase in other lines. These facts indicate what appears to be the general unhealthy condition of the United States cotton textile export trade. This condition is in striking contrast to the generally satisfactory increases in the exports of nearly all other United States commodities to the Philippine Islands, as well as to foreign markets, during 1934.

Although cotton cloth is the most important item of import to the Filipino people, I am informed that the amount of United States cotton textiles entering the world export market, including the Philippine Islands, represents an average of not over 5 percent of the United States annual production of cotton textiles.

The situation in the Philippine Islands with reference to cotton cloth is analogous to coffee in the continental United States. The continental United States produces no coffee. The Philippines produce practically no cotton cloth. Coffee is imported into the continental United States free of duty. Cotton cloth, an article used by every Filipino, bears a duty averaging from 25 to 30 percent ad valorem if imported from foreign countries. On some articles, for example, cotton blankets and unbleached cloths, the duty averages from 40 to 50 percent ad valorem. This differential represents the advantage that American cotton textiles now enjoy in the Philippine trade over similar goods from foreign countries.

The Philippine Legislature has indicated its willingness to meet the general situation as regards American goods by two relatively recent acts of the legislature. The first, an act approved December 17, 1932, which was an attempt to reestablish parity conditions, due to depreciated currencies, in the liquidation of customs duties; and, the second, an amendment to the Tariff Act of 1909, approved February 24, 1933, which consisted of an extensive revision of duties upward on a number of items.

The tariff laws of the Philippine Islands are contained in the Tariff Act of 1909, enacted by the Congress of the United States, as amended by subsequent acts of Congress and by acts of the Philippine Legislature.

Acts of the Philippine Legislature amending the tariff laws of the islands have been enacted pursuant to the grant of legislative powers in the Organic Act of the Philippine Islands approved August 29, 1916, the pertinent part of which reads as follows:

"SEC. 10. That while this act provides that the Philippine government shall have the authority to enact a tariff law the trade relations between the islands and the United States shall continue to be governed exclusively by laws of the Congress of the United States: Provided, That tariff acts or acts amendatory to the tariff of the Philippine Islands shall not become law until they shall receive the approval of the President of the United States, * * *."

Similar legislative powers under the Commonwealth government are continued in the Independence Act approved March 24, 1934. However, Congress has reserved the ultimate power to change or nullify any laws enacted by the Philippine Legislature, and it is obvious that legislative suggestions by Congress of the nature noted above would necessarily have a very powerful influence in connection with the enactment of legislation by the Philippine Legislature.

The provisions of the proposed resolution that Congress exercise its influence to secure local insular legislation the effect of which would probably be detrimental to the interests of the great mass of the Filipino people, would not be in line with the traditional altruistic policy of this Government toward dependent peoples under our flag.

CREED F. COX,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Chairman Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: With reference to my letter of July 8, 1935, enclosing a memorandum of the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs relative to Senate Resolution No. 163, Seventy-fourth Congress, I am enclosing herewith for your information a copy of a radiogram received in this Department from the Governor General of the Philippine Islands.

It will be noted that the Governor General has initiated steps with a view to improving the situation as regards the United States cotton-textile trade in the islands.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) GEO. H. DERN,
Secretary of War.

SECWAR, WASH.,
COX, 9th. 308.

For the information of the President: Apropos House Resolution No. 280 of June 28 following message is today being transmitted to each House of Philippine Legislature:

"The adjustment of trade relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands on a basis satisfactory to both countries is a problem of major importance. While in its larger phases this problem will be a subject of future joint study and negotiation, in pursuance of plans recently formulated, the present situation and trend in some segments of this trade are desiring of the immediate attention of the legislature.

"It is a matter of common knowledge and of serious import to the interest affected, that in certain categories the growing competition of foreign goods entering the Philippines under existing tariff duties is causing a progressive loss of trade to the United States. In the field of textiles alone there has been a decline on a quantity basis from 72 percent of the total imports in 1932, to 67 percent in 1933, and 40 percent in 1934. During the first 6 months of the current year the United States' share was 38 percent of the total. This decline has been so marked as to attract wide attention in the United States, where the condition of the textile trade has assumed a position of exceptional prominence in public discussion and popular interest.

"It is believed that a satisfactory adjustment of our trade relations with the United States would be materially aided and facilitated by an effective adjustment of import duties on textiles and other products that would afford prompt relief to American and Philippine interests, without subjecting other countries to unfair treatment or imposing unreasonable and excessive burdens on the consuming public.

"It has been suggested that it would be a fair solution of the textile problem, considering all interests concerned, if the products of the United States textile industry were restored approximately to the average position held by them in the Philippine market in the years immediately prior to 1934.

"While the condition of the textile trade appears to merit special attention, increases in other schedules may be found justified and warranted as a means of increasing Government revenue, providing protection and security for the development of local industries, and bringing about the desired degree of reciprocity in trade with the United States.

"The subject is brought to your attention for such action as you may deem expedient, and in the belief that early and favorable action in the manner indicated would be in the interest of the Philippine public."

MURPHY.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3049) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1086) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A bill (S. 3262) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 3263) for the relief of Max Schwartz; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 3264) for the relief of A. E. Bostrom (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 3265) granting a pension to Alice Shelton (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 3266) granting an increase of pension to Blaine E. Davis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 3267) for the relief of the Fidelity Trust Co. of Baltimore, Md., and others; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 3268) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to make a lease for the Agua Caliente or Palm Springs Band of Mission Indians of California; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

(Mr. WAGNER introduced Senate bill 3269, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3270) to permit construction, maintenance, and use of certain pipe lines for petroleum and petroleum products in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 161) validating certain conveyances by Kickapoo Indians of Oklahoma made prior to February 17, 1933; providing for actions in partition in certain cases; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

RELIEF OF NEW YORK FLOOD VICTIMS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the recent and unexpected flood disaster in upper New York State, with its destruction of life and property, evokes a call for sober and sympathetic assistance, which must not be denied.

The great Commonwealth of New York, always in the forefront of those springing to the relief of other afflicted areas, is not neglecting its own people in their hour of need; but the Federal Government, in keeping with the growing recognition of national responsibility, must also do its part.

The worthy tradition of Federal aid was confirmed by the act of April 1934, authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to extend loans up to $5,000,000 to nonprofit corporations for the repair of damages caused by floods and other catastrophes. Responsive to the tragedies of 1933 and early 1934, that act was designed to remedy only the evils occurring before March of last year.

I now propose an amendment in the form of a bill to that law extending its protective coverage over the years 1934, 1935, and 1936. The consequent release of $3,200,000 in loans which have been authorized, but as yet unused, will be of tremendous material assistance to victims in the flood section of New York, as well as to others in all sections of the country, who have been or who may be similarly stricken. Furthermore, this action by Congress should have great intangible value as an additional token of Nation-wide good will.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, is the bill in general terms? Does it apply to any other section than New York?

Mr. WAGNER. It is in general terms.

Mr. NORRIS. Similar conditions in other sections would come under the same bill?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. I do not mean that the proposed legislation shall be confined to any particular stricken area. It is universal in its application.

I ask consent to introduce the bill and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received, printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3269) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to nonprofit corporations for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes", approved April 13, 1934, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to nonprofit corporations for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes", approved April 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 589), is hereby amended by striking out the words "year 1933, and in the months of January and February 1934" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "years 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936."

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. BYRNES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

A NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL LABOR PROGRAM

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, at the Institute of Public Affairs of the University of Virginia on July 10, 1935, President John L. Lewis, of the United Mine Workers of America, delivered an address on the significance to labor of American membership in the international labor organization. The address is of unusual interest as the carefully considered expression of a noted leader and spokesman of organized workers of America. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SIGNIFICANCE TO LABOR OF AMERICAN MEMBERSHIP IN THE INTERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION

The entrance of the United States last year into the International Labor Organization is of the most far-reaching import to the labor movement in America and throughout the world. The real significance of this action can be understood only in the light of the extraordinary conditions which prevailed in the world in 1934 when the United States accepted membership. These conditions after the lapse of a year have assumed an even more critical and portentous aspect.

It is a truism to state to this meeting that a social and economic revolution, in the best sense of the word, is now under way in the United States. Fundamentally it consists of a fight to overthrow the financial and industrial autocracy, or dictatorship, which is responsible for the present deplorable condition of wage earners, farmers, and all other groups of the people who work by hand or brain. It is recognized that unless this economic autocracy is subordinated to the public interest the future of our country will hold forth no real hope for labor or humanity.

The revolution which is now in progress in America is also the hope of labor movements in other countries. They do not want fascism or communism. Neither will the organized-labor movement in this country longer accept domination and exploitation by a financial dictatorship.

The time is here when we must again provide, as we did in 1776, for a Declaration of Independence for the whole world. In other words, it has fallen to us that, in our day and generation, America must give to the world a declaration of economic freedom—a declaration that Jefferson's immortal declaration for political democracy must be now supplemented by sound measures of industrial democracy. If Jefferson—the greatest Democrat and humanitarian the world has ever had—could be here today at this university, which he conceived as an aid to political democracy, and could envisage the complex economic mechanism which has supplanted the simple, agricultural, pioneer life of his own day, he would be at the forefront of the present day movement for economic freedom and democracy.

This is the significance to organized labor of America's entrance into the International Labor Organization. The workers of other nations need us. We also need their cooperation.

This conviction has been borne in upon us by post-war developments in America and abroad. To explain the significance to labor of the entrance of our country into the International Labor Organization, it is, therefore, necessary briefly to review the fundamental tendencies in industry and finance with which organized labor has had to contend since the World War at home and abroad.

THE WORLD WAR AND DEMOCRACY

It will be recalled that President Wilson's "14 points" or objectives for winning the war brought a new vision and enthusiasm to America and the Allies. Their underlying purpose was epitomized in the slogan that we were fighting "to make the world safe for democracy." This was interpreted by the labor movement, the churches, and the intellectuals as meaning that not only political autocracy but also economic autocracy in all its forms were to be eliminated by victory.

It was in the light of these understandings that the International Labor Organization was created in 1919 by a special commission of the peace conference, presided over by the late Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. It was for these reasons that they laid down in its constitution the "guiding principle" already enunciated in the Clayton Act of 1915 in the United States "that labor should not be regarded merely as a commodity or article of commerce", and to this fundamental added the further guarantee of industrial freedom and citizenship, that labor should have the right to organize and bargain collectively with employers through chosen representatives.

THE POST-WAR DECADE IN AMERICA

The American labor movement was not destined, however, as much as it desired to do so, because of the adverse public decision in 1919 as to the League of Nations, to assist in the development of this movement for world peace and betterment which it had thus taken the leading part in inspiring and organizing.

Post-war conditions in America also turned out to be the opposite of what had been anticipated. Organized labor immediately after the war sought to increase its strength. But instead of meeting with a spirit of cooperation in accordance with war-time promises of a better economic world after the cessation of hostilities, a most bitter and relentless opposition was encountered, resulting in local and national strikes. Moreover not only did reactionary groups in industry attempt "to deflate unionism and democracy" after the war but they also sought to substitute for legitimate unionism a system of company-dominated employee organizations which they deceitfully described as "the American plan" for industrial democracy.

Such deplorable conditions prevailed until after the industrial break-down of 1920–22. With the upturn of business conditions in 1923 the so-called "new era" was inaugurated by the then Secretary of Commerce, Herbert Hoover, representatives of the United States Chamber of Commerce, and outstanding industrialists. The leaders of this new order advocated the increased use of labor-saving machines and processes to expand mass-production methods and to reduce unit costs of production. As a result of this new program, it was claimed that wages and salary rates might be indeterminately increased, greater purchasing power and higher standards of living developed, and, simultaneously, prices to consumers reduced and generous margins of profits maintained.

Unfortunately, however, the policies and practices of American industry could not be made to conform to these new and widely proclaimed principles. The short-sighted demands for immediate profits constantly made upon industrial management by investment bankers, financiers, and speculators during the period 1923–29 destroyed the hopes and plans for a better economic order. The entire system of industrial policy and management which our so-called "investment" and "private" bankers developed during the period 1923–29, by acting as fiscal agents of industrial and financial corporations, and by their concentrated control of the Nation's money and credit facilities, including even the New York Reserve Bank and the credit policies of the Federal Reserve Board itself, culminated in the worst debacle in the history of our country, and brought our traditional capitalistic system into permanent disrepute.

Its fundamental evils were also visited upon all the leading industrial and commercial nations of the world. This was due to the fact that when our so-called "new era" or "new industrial revolution" in America had gotten under full swing the leading nations of Europe, marveling at our unprecedented mass-production methods and performance, sent delegations to America to learn the secret of our success. Our bankers extended generous loans to enable them to mechanize their industries. American plants were also established abroad. Both foreign and American establishments followed the same American methods, were influenced in their policies by the same sources of credit and finance, and came to the same fate as our own establishments.

To epitomize briefly, therefore, the experience of the organized-labor movement in the United States during the post-war period, 1919–29 led to the following inescapable conclusions:

First. Those in financial control of American industry constantly sought to maintain an industrial autocracy, and to deny by every means possible liberty and democracy to American workers. They repudiated all war-time promises for post-war measures of industrial democracy and economic reform. Unceasingly they fought unionization, or the right of labor to organize and to bargain collectively or to cooperate with management to industrial accomplishment.

Second. Those in financial control of industry also demonstrated their complete unfitness to direct industrial operations in the public interest. They sacrificed the fundamental interests of workers, whether by hand or brain, as well as those of credulous purchasers of securities, for immediate speculative profits. Instead of giving to workers a reasonable participation in the form of adequate wages and more leisure, or making possible the freeing of children from mills and factories, they capitalized and appropriated to their own use, the extraordinary productive gains of industry arising from increased mechanization and improvements in technological methods.

Third. That there is no ground for hope for the democratic aspirations of America, unless the methods of industrial control and procedure which existed during this period are eradicated.

THE DEPRESSION AND THE NEW DEAL, 1930–35

This fundamental attitude of organized labor in the United States has also been further strengthened by the events of the 6 years which have elapsed since the break-down of our economic system in 1929.

Our financial autocracy, after the slowing up of production and the collapse in the security markets in the autumn of 1929, which they brought about by their misguided, antisocial policies, added another tragic error to their already unpardonable record. At this time inflated security and real-estate values should undoubtedly have been deflated. On the other hand, for two vital reasons, wages and prices should not have been deflated: (1) Because they had not inflated, and (2) because the maintenance of stability in wages and prices was the essential condition to continued production and to liquidation of speculative losses.

But those in control of our industrial, financial, and credit resources in 1930 misguidedly decreed, as a condition to revival, reductions in wages, salaries, and prices with the result that the demand for goods was further decreased, unemployment and property losses grew by leaps and bounds, and the most critical situation in the history of our country was precipitated.

Three tragic years of human suffering elapsed before light first appeared in the seemingly impenetrable darkness which enshrouded the country. Within 3 months after March 4, 1933, the new deal, however, by means of the National Recovery Administration, placed a minimum or bottom wage under the destructive, deflationary movement which was then rampant. Price and production schedules in manufacturing and mining were stabilized. Simultaneously the Agricultural Adjustment Administration performed the same service for agriculture. As a consequence, economic tendencies were reversed and an upward movement established. Reflation supplanted deflation.

Whatever the new deal may or may not have done in the past, and however great its services may be in the future, it will have the imperishable achievement to its credit of having arrested permanently the devastating avalanche of deflation, which, during the 3 years prior to March 1933 had engulfed and threatened to destroy all values—human, social, and economic—in its path.

Furthermore, for the first time in the history of our country, Congress, under the recommendation of President Roosevelt, also conferred upon labor the guaranty of industrial citizenship, or the right to organize and bargain collectively with employers through representatives of labor's own choosing.

INDUSTRY THWARTED RECOVERY UNDER THE N. R. A.

But the blighting influence of our financial dictatorship soon reasserted itself. After the initial accomplishment of the N. R. A. in stopping deflation, industry under its direction was rapidly codified, and production and employment expanded enormously. By March 1934 very encouraging results had been registered. Pay rolls had advanced more rapidly than employment. Rates of pay and earning of employees had increased, and hours of labor had declined. Basic and secondary industries also passed for the first time in several years from deficits to more or less satisfactory profits. So encouraging were the results that President Roosevelt decided to inaugurate a more forward-looking program designed to accelerate further the growth of reemployment and mass purchasing power. At a meeting of code authorities which was convened in Washington for conference on future policies on March 5, 1934, he urged that profits should be kept at a minimum, hours of work further shortened to stimulate reemployment and wages and salaries advanced so as to make possible the consumption of an increased output of mines, mills, and factories.

The opposition of those in control of industry to this appeal left no doubt in men's minds as to the inability of industry to govern itself in an enlightened way or in the public interest. It was disclosed that industry and finance were a unit in the decisions to hold to what profits had already accrued and desired only the opportunity to carry on the further pursuit of profits without regard to economic recovery or reform. Because of this reactionary position of our financial dictatorship no attempt was made by the N. R. A. to enforce the President's ideas as to an acceleration of the recovery program. From this time forward its influence as a positive or guiding force in industrial expansion, or toward gains in economic accomplishment, was negligible.

During the extensive hearings prior to the adverse Supreme Court decision, held by the Senate Finance Committee on proposals for reviving the N. R. A., this attitude of the supreme command of industry in "freezing production" and practically holding up reemployment and the recovery program for temporary profits were disclosed by witnesses from labor and consumer organizations and officials of the Government itself. It was clearly shown that no progress over the old capitalistic conditions could be hoped for unless price, production, and profit controls over industry were directly established through Government agencies.

SO-CALLED "INDUSTRIAL SELF-GOVERNMENT" IMPOSSIBLE

This is also the position today of organized labor. It holds that industrial self-government has been discredited for all time. It believes that if we are to have economic recovery, and industrial conditions hereafter, which will be characterized by steady operation and employment, and a fair distribution of industrial output among all groups of industrial workers, industrial planning, and the regulation of production, prices, and profits must inevitably be placed under Government control.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL IMPENDING

To this conclusion it may also be added that it is the further conviction of organized labor that unless our financial and industrial interests find themselves able to adjust their programs and policies speedily to the public interest, Government control over their operations must be quickly exercised. At least 10,000,000 are still unemployed in America and double that number are still subsisting on public relief or improvised public employment. They cannot be kept in this situation permanently. If industry is unable voluntarily because of a sinister financial control to expand its operations to take on these men, it will have to be done through a direct exercise of public power. It will become obligatory on the Government, in other words, to develop an economic plan for industrial expansion, which on the basis of industry and plant quotas, and of shorter hours and higher rates of pay, will absorb the unemployed. Reemployment can be quickly attained on this basis should the Government place its own credit and supervision back of the plan to insure its fulfillment.

THE FIGHT AGAINST FINANCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL AUTOCRACY

In concluding the analysis, therefore, of the post-war experience of organized labor in America, it may be fundamentally stated that organized labor has discovered during the post-war period, whether in times of activity or depression, that an industrial and financial autocracy in America has constantly exercised control and thwarted all progress toward social and economic progress and reform.

Unlike the movement in Europe, however, this American economic dictatorship has been socially and politically unsanctioned, working out its objectives without open official recognition. Its control has rested in the hands of a small inner group of New York bankers and financiers symbolized and dominated by the New York banking house of J. P. Morgan & Co. Its power, which overshadows that of our National Government, is derived from its concentrated national control of money, credit, and wealth.

In its earlier manifestations, prior to the World War, it was named by those who vainly shattered their strongest lances against it—Congressman Lindbergh, the elder Senator La Follette, Justice Brandeis, Woodrow Wilson, and a score of other crusaders for democracy and humanity—as the "Money Trust."

War-time profiteering tremendously augmented its resources and power. Its corporate and political control was also greatly extended by the speculative excesses of the so-called "new era." The Banking and Currency Committee of the United States Senate, after several years of careful investigation, reported during the summer of 1934 that during the post-war decade this financial oligarchy usurped "the wealth stream of the Nation to its very capillaries."

Control of wealth and credit has thus become more highly concentrated. Our self-governing institutions, together with the destinies of all classes of our people, have now come to be dominated by an immeasurably strengthened and more highly developed banking and financial oligarchy. Ruthless individualism and profits have been its gods. Unionism has been constantly opposed. Workers, and all groups of our people, have been denied a fair participation in the output of industry. Inordinate industrial profits have been capitalized and made the basis of speculation. Industry was permitted to collapse in 1929 because this small inner group, which dictated industrial policies, would not concede to wage earners, salaried workers, and farmers a sufficiently large participation in national output to enable them to purchase the goods produced by mines, mills, farmers, and factories.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF A SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC REVOLUTION IN AMERICA

Thus, since the World War, organized labor has been confronted with the fact that a social and economic revolution has been developing in the United States as a logical and inevitable outgrowth of conditions and policies imposed by a dictatorship in control of industry and finance. This revolution has not been of labor's own conceiving, but it has not been one which labor has hesitated to support, and which it still proposes to support in a constructive way through further organization, especially by industrial unionism.

No revolution in the history of the world has been successful unless it was supported from above. Today we usually think of revolution in terms of labor unrest and strikes, and of agricultural discontent and violent protests. These are, indeed, outward and ominous factors. But it should be borne in mind that behind these activities today in America is to be found the constant support of liberal groups of the churches, colleges, and universities.

Constructively speaking, academic revolutionaries warn us of impending changes in our economic and social institutions. Liberty hereafter, they hold, must, as a rule, be conditioned by what is socially desirable and not by what is individually profitable. Statisticians and engineers from the universities prove that modern industry can afford, if its output is equitably distributed, an abundant life for all.

The churches, on the other hand, urge their enlightened ethics as a substitute for the pagan ethics of the old capitalistic system. They concede that capitalism can produce enough for all, but they assert, because of the profit system, it cannot distribute its output equitably among the masses of the people; also that capitalism has always carried the seeds of its own destruction by the claim that the capitalist is entitled to the excess of what labor produces over what is paid to labor. They hope for the development in America of a democratic, cooperative industrial regime as a world substitute for a materialistic, irreligious communism. Catholics and Protestants, Jew and Gentile—all denominations and races—are as one in their efforts to revolutionize our old economic order and bring about the democratization of industry.

In the practical arena of social and political agitation and controversy the active reform movements, as thus sanctioned and supported by the academic and the church groups, center in this country, as is well known, around the farms, mines, mills, and factories.

SIGNIFICANT IMPLICATIONS OF THE MOVEMENT TODAY

The practical implications of this movement today are most significant.

The United Mine Workers of America, by way of illustration, and a majority of the operators in the bituminous mining industry have united in support of the Guffey bill for placing the industry upon a public-utility basis under Federal control. All the other natural-resource industries—anthracite coal, oil, gas, lumber, copper, and electric power—must soon follow this precedent. If experience under a public-utility status should be ineffective, or should the Supreme Court declare the Guffey bill unconstitutional, recourse must at once be had to a constitutional amendment or to Government ownership and operation.

The railroad labor executives, whose policies have always been based on sound, conservative judgment, as a unit have recently declared for Government ownership and operation of the railroads. They state that they have been forced to this decision by a bitter experience of many years, which has conclusively shown that the same financial autocracy which dominates other basic industries cannot longer be endured by railway employees. They have concluded that the only effective method for its eradication is through Government ownership and control.

Present-day tendencies in labor organization also places main emphasis upon industrial unionism. This has been found necessary in order to develop sufficient economic and political power to bargain collectively on a basis of equality with those in financial control of industry and to secure the proper degree of political control over this financial dictatorship.

It is also particularly significant that all groups interested in real, constructive reform in America no longer limit the labor movement to a narrow, technical scope and definition. Labor no longer signifies the man with the hoe but is the voice of the peoples of the world. The range of its influence extends from the unskilled industrial and agricultural workers throughout the so-called "white collar" groups, including industrial technicians, school teachers, newspaper employees, and even those special writers and commentators who stand out as preeminent in the newspaper field. The liberal and constructive groups in the churches, colleges, and universities, as has already been stated, have also practically made themselves a part of the labor movement.

THE SITUATION ABROAD

As to the situation abroad, the stage has already been set for the effective cooperation of the labor movements in other leading industrial nations with American labor. In the year 1931, due to world-wide depression, the international labor organization departed from its established procedure of considering only protective labor standards by making an appeal for an international economic congress to consider uniform methods and policies for meeting prevailing conditions and for promoting economic recovery in all nations. Because of the favorable reaction of its members it also authorized constructive research and investigation along these lines. Conditions are, therefore, most favorable for cooperative action between organized labor in Europe and America.

In this connection it should also be recalled that during the post-war period the old forms of political and industrial democracy have to a great extent been modified or temporarily obliterated in Europe. In the year 1917, before the close of the World War, due to the peculiar conditions prevailing in Russia, an attempted constitutional form of government was violently overturned by a so-called "dictatorship of the proletariat." Early in the post-war period unsettled economic conditions and the threat of radicalism in Italy also finally led to the establishment of a Fascist dictatorship. Like tendencies later resulted in similar dictatorships in Austria, Hungary, Poland, Spain, Germany, and in southern and eastern European countries.

This condition of affairs constitutes a challenge to action to the American labor movement if political and industrial democracy are to be preserved.

When we look backward it will be recalled that the reasons for, and the principles of, our Revolution against Great Britain of the years 1775–83—as embodied in our Declaration of Independence of 1776 and our Constitution of 1787—set the world on fire for political democracy. During the ensuing century and a half the principles of political democracy, as proclaimed by the founders of self-governing Republic, were gradually accepted and practically applied by all the peoples of the civilized world. Self-government superseded the absolute rule or limited powers of princes, kings, emperors, kaisers, and czars.

The American organized-labor movement will never accept fascism or communism. There is no reason, however, why European dictatorships of the present day should not fall before the ideals of industrial democracy which the American labor movement represents. It is the belief of organized labor that America will again give to the world a system of industrial democracy which will supersede existing dictatorships and constitute an acceptable supplement to our proclamation of political democracy in 1776. The forces in our country today which are behind such a movement, are fundamental and inexorable.

CONCLUSION

The real significance of our entrance into the International Labor Organization may, therefore, be said to be, that the American labor movement has taken up again the torch of international labor leadership which was temporarily wrenched from the hands of Samuel Gompers by extraordinary and unexpected political developments in America in 1920; that a political and social revolution is now in progress in America, sponsored by the churches, colleges, and universities, which finds its practical leadership in the organized-labor movement; that its ultimate success depends upon world cooperation and that in the International Labor Organization the organized-labor movement of America finds its opportunity for establishing world cooperation.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee, on page 18, beginning in line 21, to insert paragraph (G).

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to withdraw the notice which I gave yesterday for reconsideration of the vote by which the word "soybeans" was inserted in the bill. I have no objection to the inclusion of soybeans.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from John H. Swisher & Son, Inc., cigar manufacturers of Jacksonville, Fla., relative to the effect of the pending bill on the cigar-manufacturing industry.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., July 10, 1935.

The Honorable DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have your favor of July 6 relative to H. R. 8492, and note your comments in that the committee has taken the position that as representatives of no other industry had been heard it would not be fair to hear representatives of the cigar industry.

When it comes to any legislation as regards tobacco, we believe the industry as a whole should have an opportunity to be heard and especially on as vital a legislation as H. R. 8492 which is apparently the most drastic legislation that has been proposed. If this bill is passed in its original form there is no doubt whatsoever but what it would prove ruinous to the cigar-manufacturing industry.

Without referring to any statistics, we feel that you know that this industry has been decreasing from year to year, and just at the present time farmers are all receiving parity prices, and all surpluses have been absorbed and a definite shortage is ahead and now with this legislation whereby benefits are going to be continued to be paid long after parity prices have been reached, then absolutely the industry cannot exist and the farmers will again be faced with a surplus of tobacco which they will not be able to dispose of.

Furthermore, as part of this A. A. A. amendment, it provides that the Government should not reimburse any taxpayer for the reason that this tax, or as we may term it, so-called "tax", has been passed on to the consumer.

This reason as given we challenge, for absolutely this processing tax has not been passed on to the consumer in one single instance, and may we suggest that an amendment be offered to this portion of the bill whereby this provision shall not apply to any single corporation, firm, or individual who has not passed this processing tax on to the consumer.

We still remain of the firm opinion that this bill should be referred back to the Senate subcommittee for a fair discussion at public hearing, and we know of no legitimate excuse that can be offered for denying this request.

Yours very truly,

JNO. H. SWISHER & SON., INC.,
H. B. COULTER, Secretary.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD a speech made by Editor Stephen Bolles, at Janesville, Wis., at a pioneer gathering, and an editorial from a Dallas, Tex., newspaper. I also ask permission to use the eyes of the clerk to make some observations on the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator permit the Chair to submit the first request, so that the two may be taken separately?

The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech made by someone in Wisconsin and an editorial from a Dallas newspaper. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I object for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is to insert in the RECORD a speech made by someone else and an editorial. The Senator has made a further request to have read a speech of his own.

Mr. ROBINSON. For the present, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas objects.

Mr. MCNARY. I inquire if the objection goes to the printing of proper matter in the RECORD or to the speech of the Senator from Minnesota which he asks the clerk to read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request was made that a speech delivered by someone in Wisconsin be printed in the RECORD. Will the Senator from Minnesota state again just who it was from Wisconsin who made the speech?

Mr. SCHALL. Stephen Bolles, who is the editor of a Janesville, Wis., newspaper, and his speech was delivered at a pioneer celebration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota also requested that there be printed in the RECORD an editorial from a Dallas, Tex., newspaper.

Mr. SCHALL. I also make the request that I be permitted to use the sight of the clerk to make some observations on the pending bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. For the present I object.

I should like to state that from time to time the Senator from Minnesota has had the unanimous consent of the Senate to insert articles in the RECORD and also to have articles read from the desk, and on numerous occasions, under such unanimous consent, he has inserted matter in the RECORD which I think should not be properly admitted to the RECORD by the Senate. I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to this fact. I should like to see the editorial and the article before they shall be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, just a moment. The inquiry I made has been answered by the objection going to the editorial which the Senator from Minnesota seeks to put in the RECORD. He coupled that request with the further request that the clerk be permitted to read a speech or statement on the pending motion to strike out paragraph (G). Is there objection to that request?

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall not object to a speech by the Senator being read, provided I may reserve the right to object if it shall appear that in the speech there is matter which should not, in my opinion, go into the RECORD.

Mr. SCHALL. The Senator has that right at any time, as I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech made by an editor and an editorial from a Dallas newspaper, and further that remarks of his may be read by the clerk.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this is a wholesale request for putting matter into the RECORD. I shall object to putting into the RECORD the editorial and the article until an opportunity shall have been afforded to ascertain that they do not contain matter which, in my opinion, is obnoxious to the rule. I do not object to the reading of the speech of the Senator from Minnesota, but reserve the right to object.

Mr. MCNARY. That is the understanding I have of the matter. The Senator from Minnesota informed me, in view of the discussion a few days ago, that he desired, of course, to conform to the strict rule of the Senate with respect to making references to Members of the Senate and House. Under the understanding, the request is that the clerk may read and if anything should appear in the speech that is obnoxious to the rule of the Senate, of course, objection could then be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the speech? The Chair hears none. The clerk will read.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] had the article from the Janesville newspaper inserted in the RECORD, so I withdraw the request for the insertion of that article.

Before the clerk reads I desire to state that if I had my sight I no doubt could stand here and read the speech, and I should not be subject to the censorship of the Senator from Arkansas unless I said something to which he might object. It seems to me the rule of the Senate ought to be changed so that no one person could ride censorship on what another Senator has to say, even though it may of necessity have to come through the eyes of the clerk.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SCHALL. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have explained many times, and I think the Senator from Minnesota must understand, that there is no objection from anyone to his incorporation in the RECORD of any matter which does not infringe the rule of the Senate. But on numerous occasions the Senator from Minnesota has taken advantage of the fact that he cannot read his own articles and his own speeches, speeches which he was proposing to make, to incorporate in the RECORD matter which was objectionable under the rule. Therefore, while I do not object to the reading of his speech, I reserve the right to object. With that understanding, which I think the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] fully apprehends, and which I think the Senator from Minnesota should apprehend, I make no objection to the reading of his speech, but I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I have made no statement that I have not a right to make under the rules. If I did so, it was unintentional. I have only done what I thought the position of a Senator representing a State entitled him to do, that which he had the privilege and the right to do in the Senate, of stating his thoughts and putting his construction upon the present administration and its policies. I know it hurts, but it still is my right to say what I have to say, even if it must be through the eyes of the clerk.

I resent the fact that the Senator from Arkansas rises on the floor of the Senate and constantly says I am breaking the rules of the Senate. If he will point out wherein I have broken the rules, I certainly shall not do it again. As my speeches are read, they are subject to objection. If they are wrong, let the Senator move to strike them out.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SCHALL. I yield gladly.

Mr. ROBINSON. On the last occasion when the Senator from Minnesota addressed the Senate, under unanimous consent, he obtained an order to incorporate in the RECORD a statement declaring a very high officer of this Government a maniac.

Mr. SCHALL. No; a megalomaniac, which means a million times an egotist. "Mega" is Greek for a million.

Mr. ROBINSON. A megalomaniac.

Mr. SCHALL. Yes; a million times an egotist.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Minnesota has the audacity to rise on the floor of the Senate and assert that he conforms to the rule of the Senate. In the case of one whose moral obliquities are such as the Senator has repeatedly demonstrated here, it becomes the duty of someone to see that the rules are observed in connection with the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. If the Senator from Minnesota insists upon the right to have his speeches read without regard to the rules of the Senate, he cannot shield himself behind an unfortunate affliction to make statements here which are offensive to the President of the United States and which are offensive to Members of the Senate. If he were rightly constituted he would not insist upon such procedure. He has done it repeatedly.

He has violated the rules of the Senate repeatedly, and every Senator who has listened to his remarks knows my statement to be true. Now he states that he resents the action of the Senator from Arkansas in insisting upon his right to object to the speech of the Senator from Minnesota if he feels it violates the rule. I do not care how much he resents. I myself have some resentment. The Senate ought to be a body of decency. It ought to conduct its debate in conformity with parliamentary rules, and no Senator has a right to insist upon any other course.

Mr. President, I object to the reading of the editorial referred to and I object to the reading of the articles referred to. I reserve the right to object to the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota if, in my opinion, they transgress the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

ARE WE A "COHEN-IZED" CONGRESS?

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, the United States district court of three judges assembled in Minneapolis, my home city, July 11, for the hearings of 16 milling companies which had asked injunctions against collection of processing taxes by the A. A. A. Administration for the months of May and June.

The court denied the Government's motion for dismissal of the injunction suit, and granted a temporary injunction to hold until the decision upon a permanent injunction in September term.

Without passing upon the constitutionality of the A. A. A., the court declared:

> We do not determine at this time that any provisions of the act in question are unconstitutional. A reading of the cases offered by counsel, however, amply supports the view that the constitutionality of the act is subject to serious doubt. It is sufficient to justify relief by temporary injunction.

These 16 cases before the United States district court at Minneapolis are samples of hundreds of like appeals from industry against the constitutionality of the A. A. A. processing taxes in substantially all the district courts of the United States. Many hundreds of these cases are now headed for the final decision of the United States Supreme Court. Many cases have resulted in permanent restraining orders.

Even were this amended A. A. A. bill—the "Cohen-ized" and aggravated extension of autocratic powers—to pass Congress at this session, there is every fair indication that it will never become the law of the land.

All that we here vote to do is, in effect, this: To register our individual votes for or against this proposition—"Yes" or "No" on the question, "Is this a Cohen-ized Congress?"

The substantial question on the constitutionality of the processing taxes of the A. A. A. was decided in the recent N. R. A. case of May 27. That case was decided on two points: (1) the unconstitutional delegation of the legislative power of Congress to the President and his bureaus; (2) an invasion by the Federal Government upon the intrastate powers of the respective States.

The processing taxes of the A. A. A. violate article I, which grants all powers of taxation to Congress. The levy and collection of these taxes by the A. A. A. Administration is an unconstitutional delegation or usurpation of the legislative power to tax, as decided by the Supreme Court in the N. R. A. case, as in hundreds of cases from the time of John Marshall.

These processing taxes and the dictatorship of the A. A. A., second, invade the intrastate business of the State, and violate the rights of the States and the guaranties of articles 5 and 10 of the Bill of Rights, also set forth by the Supreme Court in the N. R. A. case of May 27.

So the final decision of the Court when these hundreds of A. A. A. cases finally reach the court of last resort is already forecast in the decision on N. R. A. We are voting for another "sick chicken" if we vote for this expansion of the A. A. A. We are voting, moreover, for a diseased hen afflicted by new malignant ills. We are voting for an extension of the temporary acute attack into a chronic and permanent disease, an epidemic of legislative ills affecting the major bills now before this session; namely, the seven must bills drafted by Cohen, who assumes the legislative function usurped by the Executive.

This bill in itself is an admission of unconstitutionality when it seeks to invade the judicial power of government by denying the rights of citizens to appeal to the courts against the unconstitutional tax levies of the A. A. A. We are, therefore, voting on one question: "Is Congress Cohen-ized? Shall we vote to change the spelling of the word 'C-o-n-g-r-e-s-s' and make it read 'C-o-h-e-n-g-r-e-s-s?'"

The Constitution, beginning with the preamble, "We, the people of the United States", starts with the provision of article I:

> All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

That provision has been effective in this country for 146 years up to March 4, 1933.

Under the new-deal version, beginning its Fabian progress under the emergency powers of 1933 and now consummated by this White House order of must bills in July 1935, article I of the Constitution is, in effect, amended to read thus:

> All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in the Executive by the medium of Cohengress of the new deal, and the Senate and House of Representatives are permitted to affix their rubber stamps to the acts of our Cohengress.

Shall we abdicate and be a "go-and-get-it" group for this new-deal Cohengress?

Mr. President, in my remarks of July 11 I quoted section 21 of this bill as originally printed and obtained from the Senate document room.

I note that section 21 of the bill now before us has a new wording of the provision quoted, and now reads as follows (see p. 58), which I here desire to have read into my amended remarks:

> SEC. 21. (a) No Federal or State court shall have jurisdiction to entertain a suit or proceeding against the United States or any collector of internal revenue or other internal-revenue officer or any person who has been such a collector or officer or the personal representative of any such collector, officer, or person (nor shall any such suit or proceeding be brought or maintained in, nor shall any judgment or decree be entered by, any such court) (1) for the recoupment, set-off, recovery, refund, or credit of, or on any counterclaim for, any amount of any tax, interest, or penalty, assessed, paid, collected, or accrued under this title prior to the date of the adoption of this amendment or (2) for damages for the collection thereof. Except pursuant to a final judgment or decree entered prior to the date of the adoption of this amendment, no recovery, recoupment, set-off, refund, or credit of, or counterclaim for, any amount of any tax, interest, or penalty assessed, paid, collected, or accrued under this title prior to the date of the adoption of this amendment shall be made or allowed—

And so forth. This revised version brings out even more specifically the purpose of the executive branch of government to invade the judicial powers of government, both Federal and State.

Note this sinister language:

> No Federal or State court shall have jurisdiction to entertain a suit or proceeding against the United States or any collector of internal revenue * * * (nor shall any * * * judgment or decree be entered by any such court) (1) for the recoupment, set-off, recovery, refund * * * of any tax * * * (2) for damages—

And so forth. In other words, the king can do no wrong when he is engaged in collecting unconstitutional processing taxes under the usurped legislative powers of the A. A. A.

Neither Hitler nor Mussolini has assumed greater autocratic powers than this in submerging both the legislative and judicial branches of government. Both Mussolini and Hitler frankly and brutally abolished the constitutions and bills of rights of their countries before they took over all the powers of government. What they did by force of arms their imitator here is attempting to do by force of subsidy and a $5,000,000,000 war club. That is a mere detail of method. The deal is the same in the final catastrophe to government by and for the people.

NEW DEAL GAME OF POKER

Mr. President, I have just had read to me an editorial leader of the Saturday Evening Post of the current issue of July 13, entitled "Poker Politics", and it has stimulated me to make some remarks upon the new-deal version of that subject.

It appears that the editor of the Saturday Evening Post, Mr. George Horace Lorimer, is likewise deeply versed in that game made famous by the Vice President of the United States on the plains of Texas. Lorimer may not be the equal of our distinguished Presiding Officer (known to fame as "Texas Jack") in the gentle game of riding steers and branding mavericks, but he knows his poker, as witness this editorial observation relative to the American game of the days when the Government paid its bills and balanced its Budget, and the dollar was worth a dollar in gold and not 59 cents in hullabaloo.

Lorimer says of "that sterling old American game, draw poker":

> It was played under hard and fast rules according to Hoyle.

That was before Rexford Guy Tugwell succeeded Hoyle. That is to say, that was the way the game was played in the days when the Constitution was in force, before Congress became Cohenized, and before Cohen sat in this Chamber to direct the majority what to say and how to vote, and before Comrade Tugwell had come back from Moscow.

In those days, "experience and skill usually determined whether a man finally won or lost." That was when the deal was a square deal, not a new "three-card-monte affair—heads I win, tails you lose", with Cohen as dealer and Corcoran croupier for the White House syndicate.

"In time," quoth Lorimer, "impatient souls wanted more action and quicker results." That was when the new-deal game came in with a bold experiment or planned emergency on every odd-numbered weekday, and two emergencies following a fishing trip on Astor's yacht Nourmahal.

Under the new deal, or misdeal innovations, there were introduced "deuces wild", whereby a two-spot was the equal of any card in the deck, from ace to trey. Though Lorimer did not say so, he doubtless had in mind as "deuces wild" such gazaboes as Hugh Johnson, Rexford Guy Tugwell, Corn Wallace, and Harold Ickes. He also may have had up his mental sleeve those Cabinet members—Ickes, Wallace, and Morgenthau—and those bureau chiefs—Hopkins, Morgan, and Kohn—who went "deuces wild" 2 years ago, and crossed the Delaware with royal charters from the President to extend indefinitely their 2-year emergency powers under articles of incorporation, reading:

> This Corporation shall have perpetual existence.

As Lorimer says:

> Naturally, this caused great confusion, leading to wild and blind betting on the part of the players. Experience and skill no longer counted. Orderly procedure at the card table went into the discard with them.

That is to say, with the "brainstorm trust" camped around the White House.

Another new-deal innovation in the American game of poker, so Editor George Horace Lorimer finds, is the "one-eyed jack wild." That might apply to Wallace, of the A. A. A., plowing up growing crops and converting pigs into fertilizer for the comic or tragic promotion of agriculture. It might apply to Morgenthau proposing to balance a Federal Budget with a four-billion deficit by issuing a doubtful tax levy amounting to 10 percent of the deficit. It would apply to Tugwell, who proposes "government by men", as in Moscow, as a substitute for "government by laws" under a Constitution. It might apply to Roper, who signed a contract to scuttle the Leviathan in the interest of Vincent Astor and his British shipping companies. It might apply to Hugh Johnson, who rode the Blue Eagle from egg to earth till it died the death of a sick chicken, and it might apply to the wild-eyed Richberg, who had "ants in his pants." It might apply to Farley, who uses 57 bureaus for propaganda and 30 emergency funds for campaign "sinews."

Still another new-deal innovation of the American game of poker is described by Lorimer as the "seven-card peek." This might apply to the star-chamber tariff acts of the State Department, where only foreign emissaries are allowed to "peek." It certainly applies to the Cohen-Corcoran bills sent over to Congress from the White House, in which, for every five sections of the bill laid before the Senate committee there are two "peek" sections stuck into the bill en route to the Senate Chamber, making in all a "seven-card peek" through the Cohen-Corcoran speak-easy. And nobody not in the confidence of the White House has a "peek" as to what kind of a bill we are going to be permitted to pass under gag rule and in violation of the Constitution.

All bills submitted by Senate and House to a packed, White House controlled conference committee are "seven-card peek" bills which neither Senate nor House ever saw, drafted by Cohen or dropped from the sleeve of Corcoran, and dealt by some White House croupier as "an act of Congress."

"Dealer's option" is the name of another new-deal innovation listed by Lorimer in the game of poker politics. He did not need to tell us, for we already know, that the "dealer's option" is possessed by the President for listing the must bills. The President deals the cards and Congress is not allowed even to cut the pack. These must bills of the "dealer's option" must be passed before the President will permit us to adjourn, and any recalcitrant Senator who ducks can have none of that $5,000,000,000 "allocation" pie in the next election, or patronage pork at any time.

Seven must bills of the "dealer's option" are now spread before us as our end-of-the-session stunt. There is a tax bill aimed to steal the share-the-wealth ace from the hand of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] and put him in the political hole, but better calculated to put the whole country in the hole. There is the unconstitutional coal bill, which is designed to catch the coal-mine vote of Pennsylvania and West Virginia before the Supreme Court knocks it out. There is the electrocution utility bill, which gives the distinguished orator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] a chance to stump speech for Mr. Farley's postmaster vote several months before the Court gets a chance to knock it out to save 12,000,000 small investors. There is the pending A. A. A. extension and expansion, brought over by Comrade Tugwell from Moscow, to afford the courts plenty of knockout practice. There is the expanded T. V. A. made according to the Lenin formula, that "socialism plus electrification spells communism." There is the waterway bill, which places waterways under railroad domination. There is the bill to create the central United States Government bank, which Andrew Jackson thought he had put out of Washington 100 years ago.

Of course, Editor Lorimer, of the Post, does not go into the concrete detail of the poker games as I have here liberally interpreted it. He sets the type and pattern for us to fit the goods. He might not care to say, for example, that the "dealer's option" means the option of Franklin Roosevelt. Moreover, the editor might not care to say in so many words that the "dealer's option", or the White House must bills, are governed by the following outstanding specifications, with which we as Senators are now familiar, to wit:

First. These seven must bills are not drafted pursuant to the mandate of the Chicago Democratic platform or any 100-percent preelection pledge of the President.

Second. They are drafted pursuant to the mandates of the Socialist platform of 1932 and/or the Communist platform.

Third. They do not accord with the principles of Washington and Jefferson or Jackson and Lincoln or Grover Cleveland and Theodore Roosevelt. But they do accord with the ideas of Hitler and Mussolini, of Karl Marx, and Joseph Stalin in major intents and purposes.

Fourth. So far as possible, they are drafted to violate the principles of the United States Constitution and the American Bill of Rights, and are aimed to put the United States Supreme Court on the "spot" for following the time-honored highways of the "horse and buggy" days.

Finally, the editor of the Saturday Evening Post informs us of that most famous new-deal innovation of all, namely, where the players agree upon the privilege known as "spit in the ocean."

One of the most outstanding plays under this innovation was made by the President in his last annual message, where he called for a "spit in the ocean" amounting to $5,000,000,000 in "one sum subject to the allocation of the Executive" for his 1936 emergency—a sum nearly one billion greater than the total annual revenues of the Government, a sum equal to $125 per voter for each of the 40,000,000 registered voters of the United States.

Whereupon, after that January message, nearly everybody in the majority wings of the Senate and House joined in the "spit", because obviously they feared not to "spit." They threw votes into the jackpot in the apparent hope that some of the expectoration might come their way in the shuffle of November 1936.

In 2½ new-deal years an obedient Congress has spit in the ocean so often and with such expectoral abundance for one planned emergency after another, that the Treasury daily statement today reveals a tidal wave of combined emergency funds amounting to a "spit in the ocean" total of $18,000,000,000, or the equivalent of 5 years of Government revenue collections.

There have been already expended from this new-deal expectoration approximately $10,000,000,000, with $8,000,000,000 to be expended for emergencies due to arrive in 1936.

The $10,000,000,000 of "spit in the ocean" already expended have produced thus far or aided the production of a Federal patronage army of 7,000,000, an unemployed army of over 11,500,000, and 22,000,000 public charges subsisting on public doles instead of upon productive industry.

If the $8,000,000,000 authorized to be "spit in the ocean" in 1936 accomplishes an achievement parallel to the $10,000,000,000 already spit to the four points of the compass, our dealer and his croupier, James Aloysius Farley, may be able to point with pride at the next national convention to the fact that they have created from their total "spit in the ocean" of $18,000,000,000 of combined emergency the following world-championship feats:

First. More new bureaus and useless jobs than all previous administrations in American history and more than all the governments of Europe during the past 2 years.

Second. An army of unemployed that exceeds the European total for 22 principal industrial countries.

Third. That they have destroyed more crops and pigs and cows than all the drouths and floods, weevils, and grasshoppers in the Northern Hemisphere.

Fourth. That they have closed more mills and mines and produced more strikes than all other countries combined.

Fifth. That their present production of 22,000,000 public charges is greater than the total for the rest of the civilized world.

And their final summation might read: "Thirteen planned emergencies; 23 cases of economic chaos; 57 new bureaus; an ocean of $10,000,000,000 of new public debt and $12,000,000,000 of accrued deficits; and $9,000,000,000 of demonetized and useless gold, bought at 50 percent more than its value and returned to the hills of Kentucky to keep it away from the new-deal thieves and reserved for the coming empire."

All of the Presidents of the United States combined up to the time of the Wilson administration and the World War, the Treasury reports reveal, expended for Government, including five wars, a grand total of less than $25,000,000,000. This administration, in two and a half years, has expended or authorized, for political emergency alone, $18,000,000,000, and for the regular expenses of Government approximately $10,000,000,000 more, making a new-deal total thus far authorized of $28,000,000,000.

During the coming 1936 session we are already notified there will be a further "spit in the ocean" of $5,000,000,000 for scientific emergency, besides $4,000,000,000 for cost of Government to January 1, 1937. This $9,000,000,000 forthcoming for 1936 will make the grand-total 4-year cost of the new deal $37,000,000,000, or a billion dollars over one-half more than the cost of the 35 administrations from Washington down to Wilson's second administration.

In 1936 there will take place in the respective voting booths of the country, if we are allowed a "dealer's option" in election of President, the general free-for-all contest to decide United States championship honors in a final "spit in the ocean."

The main hope of America in saving the republican form of government guaranteed to the States in article 4, section 4, of the Constitution is this: That the new deal, like Mark Twain's famous jumping frog, will be so loaded down with bureaus and barnacles, "sick chickens", and 59-cent hullabaloo dollars, Frankfurters, and Cohens, and Corcorans that it will not be able to jump off the ground, and will just sit there and strain and grunt and have to do its own spitting without the help of Congress.

Mr. President, I ask leave to print the editorial entitled "Poker Politics" and also another editorial, "The Overworked Emergency", which speaks for itself, appearing in the Saturday Evening Post for July 13. I am sure they will make instructive and entertaining reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIETERICH in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall object until I can see the editorial.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, on July 8 the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] had one of his usual speeches read to the Senate by the clerk. A great many people have been a little interested to know why, if it is possible for one to dictate a speech to a stenographer, it would be impossible for the same man to make the same speech in the Senate. Some have even expressed a question as to who wrote the speeches, which have been distributed over the country by the hundreds of thousands.

It is my understanding that in a period of a little over a year more than 500,000 of these so-called "speeches", which have been placed in the RECORD, have been distributed throughout the Nation. That, of course, is expensive, both to the Government and to someone else.

In the speech of July 8 an editorial was included in the RECORD.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. Would the Senator mind my stating that my speeches have not been distributed, because Postmaster General Farley throws them into the furnace, where evidently the Senator from Alabama would like to see them placed?

Mr. BLACK. I would say that some of them might burn well. I would not insist that they be burned, even though, in my judgment, each one of them violated the rule of the Senate, not only in one regard, but in many.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Minnesota said that the Postmaster General threw the speeches into the furnace. It is barely possible, from the character of some of them, that there might have been spontaneous combustion.

Mr. BLACK. Each one of these speeches contained a title, which was not read into the RECORD, according to my information, at the time the speeches were read by unanimous consent. I have here some of those title. Here they are:

Just a dog.
The joker in the new deal.
Evils of dictatorship.
The slipping deal.
Censorship.
Just a dog, again—

It seems there was a greater demand for these—

Moscow liberals.
The Federal corporate conspiracy.

The point to which I now desire to call attention is that in the speech of July 8, or in that which was read as a speech——

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. Did the Senator examine that "Federal Conspiracy" to find out anything about the six corporations which were organized in Delaware and marked "Secret; do not publish", explaining a good deal of the censorship which now seems to have reached the Senate?

I tried here on the floor for days to find out what was behind these corporations, which evidently were organized to take over the manufacture of everything in this country from the button on your cap to the sole of your shoes, and I have yet been unable to find out.

There is something mighty rotten in Denmark, and I have done what little I could to find out what it was, as a blind man, though I have had to have assistance, but I have nowhere near the assistance the Senator from Alabama has in writing his remarks. I do accept whatever assistance I can get, and am glad to get it, and glad to get the news before the country.

If the people of the United States could know what is behind this administration, they would not stand for it a minute, and every effort is made from the top to the bottom, from the President down to the Senator now standing upon his feet, to censorize everything that does tend to get the information to the people.

Nobody wrote that for me.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I am delighted that the Senator from Minnesota has demonstrated the fact that if he wants to make a speech he can make a speech. It is an illustration, to my mind, that the speeches which have heretofore been read into the RECORD have been written by somebody else.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. The statement just made by the Senator from Minnesota is another illustration of the strange, unaccountable mentality of the man. He has just said that everybody in this administration, from the President down, has done everything possible to censorize the press. He has made that statement heretofore. In my judgment, there is no foundation in fact for the statement. The President has not attempted to censorize the press. He has been regarded, I believe, by representatives of the press as the most approachable man who has sat in the White House. But for some reason this misrepresentative from Minnesota [laughter in the galleries] insists upon assaulting the President in some way every time he takes the floor, and his last assault is a very questionable procedure. The President has no opportunity of replying to him. People naturally think when they read a statement by a United States Senator that there must be some truth in it. People who do not know the Senator from Minnesota sometimes accept his statements as accurate. But the Senator from Minnesota, every time he gets somebody to write a speech for him, and every time he takes the floor here comes dangerously near transgressing the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. ROBINSON. No, Mr. President; I do not yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I do not want to let stand that statement, "every time the Senator gets somebody to write his speech for him."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas declines to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I doubt if the Senator from Minnesota has dictated a single one of the speeches which he has had read here almost daily. I express my personal opinion that he has someone employed for that express purpose, and always the effort is to reflect upon some Member of Congress or upon some officer of the Government. It is small business, and only indulged in by individuals of small mentality.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BLACK. I will yield to the Senator again. Does the Senator wish to say what he desires to say, or have it read?

Mr. SCHALL. No; I think I can say what I want to say.

Mr. BLACK. I yield for a moment. I have an engagement at 1:30, and I am going to place into the RECORD—and I think it will be very interesting—another part of the newspaper of which the Senator from Minnesota placed a part in the RECORD on July 8. I should like to do that, and then the Senator from Minnesota will have ample time to take the floor.

Mr. SCHALL. Does the Senator from Alabama expect me to object?

Mr. BLACK. That is immaterial to me.

Mr. SCHALL. Will the Senator give me an opportunity to read it first before he places it in the RECORD, as the Senator from Alabama demands of me?

Mr. BLACK. It is immaterial to me. I expect to read it so the Senator can hear it.

Mr. SCHALL. If I proposed to have something placed in the RECORD and the Senator from Alabama objected, then I could not have it read. I just want to get that point of fairness over to the Senator from Alabama. If I had my eyes, I could read probably as well as the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to yield after I have placed in the RECORD that which I wish to read myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At this time the Senator from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. SCHALL. The Senator ought to offer the matter to be printed in the RECORD and let me object.

Mr. BLACK. I am going to read it so the Senator can object, as the rules provide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. BLACK. On July 8 the Senator from Minnesota placed in the RECORD an editorial from a paper called the Tonganoxie (Kans.) Mirror of June 27, 1935. This was placed in the RECORD on July 8. It was a very bitter editorial attacking the administration in the usual style indulged in by the Senator from Minnesota, or those who prepare his addresses.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I resent this "prepared" stuff. I resent it vehemently.

Mr. BLACK. So do we resent this prepared stuff.

Mr. SCHALL. And I want to say to the Senator from Alabama that I put no more stuff in the RECORD, which is attributed to me, than he does, or than the Senator from Arkansas does.

Mr. BLACK. So do we resent it, Mr. President.

Mr. SCHALL. The Senator from Alabama will not stand here before the Senate and say that he has not put stuff in the RECORD sent to him from the President of the United States.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I say that.

Mr. SCHALL. Well, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] will not say it, and the Senator from Alabama will not say that he has not put anything in the RECORD which he has not written himself, either.

Mr. BLACK. I will say that I have never put anything in the RECORD as a speech, claiming it was my own.

Mr. SCHALL. I never have, either.

Mr. BLACK. Well, perhaps the Senator has not.

Mr. SCHALL. The Senator has not, and the Senator from Minnesota is in a better position to know than the accusing Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has declined to yield.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I have before me the speech of the Senator from Minnesota made on July 8. That is the speech which was read. The editorial which was read in connection with the Senator's speech is a very bitter attack. Some of us were talking here, including the Senator from Washington and myself, after we saw this editorial from a weekly newspaper, the name of which we had never heard before, and we said it might be interesting to send out and get a copy of that weekly newspaper. We decided to do that, because we knew that sometimes the editorial views might be a part of the general publicity of an institution. In that connection 2 or 3 days ago there came out before the Special Committee Investigating Lobbying a pamphlet which was obtained at the lobby of the executives of the power companies in the Mayflower Hotel. The parentage of this pamphlet has not as yet been admitted by anyone, but its presence in their papers is undisputed, because it was brought up to the committee, and it contained a series of editorials against the holding-company bill. At the beginning it said:

There have been a great many editorials heretofore, and—

I am giving the Senate the substance of it.

There has been a great deal of advertising, but if there would be more advertising there would be more editorials.

Of course, that may have been altogether a mistake. However, we sent for the Tonganoxie (Kans.) Mirror, and I have before me the copy of the Tonganoxie (Kans.) Mirror from which was taken the editorial which was inserted in the RECORD. I also have a large number of other copies of the Tonganoxie Mirror, of Tonganoxie, Kans. Perhaps the Senator from Minnesota is a subscriber to the Tonganoxie Mirror, and that is the reason why he happened to have that particular editorial as early as it was written.

Mr. SCHALL. No, Mr. President; I am not a subscriber. I subscribe only to my own home newspapers in Minnesota.

Mr. BLACK. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. SCHALL. No; I say I subscribe only to my own home newspapers in Minnesota, if that will help the Senator any.

Mr. BLACK. This was a Kansas newspaper, and evidently someone had given the Senator this editorial which he placed in the RECORD.

Mr. SCHALL. Yes; I get many editorials, as the Senator from Alabama does constantly.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. It was probably sent to the Senator by the very close friend of Mr. Daugherty, Mr. Blair Coan, that notorious character of whom we heard so much a few years ago in connection with Mr. Daugherty and Mr. Burns.

Mr. SCHALL. No; the Senator is mistaken in his unfounded suspicions. The only Cohen I know who has had anything to do with legislation is the Cohen who sat at the Senator's elbow during the discussion of the holding companies' electrocution bill, which I mentioned in the speech which has been referred to.

Mr. BLACK. In this issue of June 27 appears on the editorial page the editorial which was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Here is another page on which appears an advertisement which probably all Senators will recognize. These advertisements have been sent all over the United States. We are going to try to find out how much it cost. The advertisement is headed:

Utility bill un-American. Will injure millions of citizens. Protest now. No good whatever will come—from the passage of this bill.

They say—

And then this language has appeared in hundreds of other papers:

Who will the bill injure? What will it do? Who appears for the bill? Who opposes it?

That advertisement is signed by the Union Public Service Co., a Cities Service Co.

I have numerous other copies of that newspaper here. I will just pick out any of them. There is no difficulty about it at all. Here is one for another week. This is an advertisement by the Kansas Electric Power Co.

There are a few others from the—I may mispronounce the name, and if so I beg pardon of the Senator from Minnesota—the Tonganoxie, Kansas, Mirror. Here is another one [exhibiting]. This one is under date of June 13. This advertisement is by the Union Public Service Co. Both advertisements are the same. Here is another one by the Union Public Service Co. back in April. If the Senator from Minnesota should desire to place these advertisements in the RECORD I would be glad to make them available to him to use in the next address or essay which appears in the RECORD over his name.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SCHALL. I ask right now that they be inserted in the RECORD, if the Senator will not object, so as to let everybody know what the Senator is talking about. I have not seen them. I do not know about them. I remember the name, and I remember some article that I asked to have inserted in the RECORD which I thought fitted the foot. I have no objection to their being placed in the RECORD. In fact, I ask that they be now placed in the RECORD.

Mr. BLACK. That was on a par with many of the others which the Senator asked to have placed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the matter referred to be placed in the RECORD.

Mr. SCHALL. Yes; I ask that it be placed in the RECORD.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I object.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield further to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. They seemed to be of such importance to the Senator from Alabama and his stated desire to put them in the RECORD that I asked to have them placed in the RECORD where the public could have the privilege of seeing them, and I suggest that they be placed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made. The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I have referred to these matters in order to show something about the background of the editorials. The Senator was driven to go all the way to the Tonganoxie Mirror in order to find anything that he thought was down near the level of the addresses which he has placed in the RECORD, and it did somewhat closely approach the slime of the same kind of charges which have been made from day to day and week to week at the expense of thousands and thousands of dollars to the people of this Nation. In addition to the RECORD itself, over 500,000 copies were paid for by somebody and sent all over this Nation; paid for in part but not as a whole, because, even at that, it cost the United States Government thousands and thousands of dollars to distribute these so-called "speeches" to 500,000 people.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SCHALL. The Senator refers to the item of cost. Does he think the cost he has just mentioned compares with the cost of the employment of the 300 newspapermen at Government expense and against the law today, hired to prepare and send out over this country expensive false propaganda, under Government frank in many instances, not more than 1 percent of which is truth and 99 percent not truth?

Mr. BLACK. I am glad to find that the Senator concedes there is 1 percent truth in that which is put out by the administration, because I have read practically all the other matter, and, frankly, I have not been able to find one-tenth of 1 percent of truth in any one of the statements which have been distributed by the hundreds of thousands.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield further to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. If the Senator refers to my speeches being sent out by the hundreds of thousands, he is entirely mistaken. I have to pay for the printing of my speeches, but the printing of this propaganda that is sent out is paid for by the Government. Would the Senator permit me to give one illustration of how propaganda was sent out to the farmers by the Agriculture Department at Government expense, containing not even 1 percent of truth?

Mr. BLACK. Perhaps it might be better for the Senator to go out and have it written up and have it read.

Mr. SCHALL. Oh, no. That is not necessary. I think I can remember the figures closely enough to give the Senator the illustration if he so desires, though they may not be minutely exact.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator has heretofore found great difficulty, seemingly, and complains about anybody who objects to anything that is put in the RECORD on the ground that he is blind. While he is blind, of course, he has a tongue and a voice; he is able to speak; he is able to stand; and if he is able to dictate to a stenographer, he should be able to speak on the floor.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I do not object because I am blind. I object because I want the information to go to the country, and I think they are entitled to have it.

The Senator knows that his remarks are entirely unfair. Figures and statistics I cannot carry in my head. The Senator can see and read them. I know the Senator does not want to be unfair.

Mr. BLACK. No; but I have seen very few figures in any of the speeches made by the Senator. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] speaks upon this floor, and speaks well.

Mr. SCHALL. Yes; he does. And while I do not want to speak for the Senator from Oklahoma, I am sure he would be glad to have the privilege of using the sight of the clerk to read for him. I do not have any doubt that he would. It would only place him on an equality with the Senator from Alabama, who has his sight.

Mr. BLACK. I have not even objected, except once, when I wanted to see what it was which was sought to be placed in the RECORD, because I had seen some statements which I thought were wholly unfair and unbecoming any Senator to express on the floor. I have not been raising objection. I think, however, that there comes a time when it is necessary to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that its privilege is being abused; and it has been repeatedly abused. I think that it is of importance to the people of this Nation at the present time, when an editorial such as the one inserted in the RECORD by the Senator from Minnesota is placed in the RECORD, to know something of what has been published in those newspapers from week to week in order to ascertain who it is that is supplying the money and the venom and the malice behind these editorials. I think that is clearly demonstrated by the list of newspapers which I have before me at the present time, which shows clearly and conclusively whence comes most of the money of the Tonganoxie Mirror, which appears from week to week.

So, Mr. President, I thought it proper at this time to make these few remarks to call attention to the facts in order that in some way—it seems impossible to do it by ordinary methods—it may be impressed upon the Senator from Minnesota that there are certain rules, certain customs, which it is proper for Senators to observe in connection with their remarks upon this floor.

For instance, this morning, during the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] a remark was made in the essay which was read before the Senate with reference to the Senator from West Virginia. While it was not a direct insult, it was plainly an insinuation, such as always appear in the speeches of the Senator from Minnesota, and an intimation in some way intended to reflect not only upon the Senator from West Virginia but with reference to numerous others. It appears to me that at sometime an occasion arises when it becomes necessary and proper to endeavor to bring to a halt any such unfair, unjust, and repeated insinuations as appear in these remarks.

I do not desire to be placed in the attitude of objecting, if the Senator insists he must do it, to his having his remarks read. If they are written by him and not written by any propaganda artist; if they are written by him with the bona fide purpose of having them read; if they are in harmony with the canons of decency and the rules of the Senate, and are not intended constantly to irritate other Senators and to hurl violent insinuations and to charge individuals with insanity, but come within the rules which all gentlemen are accustomed to observe, then I have no objection.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. The Senator intimated that I charged somebody with insanity. I did not mean to do that. My charge was of egotism—a million times an egotist. Many people are egotists; we see them and hear them every day, whether they are a million times so or not.

Mr. BLACK. I judge from the fact that the Senator, when it was called to his attention by the Senator from Arkansas, did not know what the word was.

Mr. SCHALL. Oh, yes; I looked it up very carefully.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator did not state what the word was, but stated a different word, showing evidently that if the Senator had written the speech it had slipped his memory in a very short time.

Mr. SCHALL. No, indeed; that is not true.

Mr. BLACK. Anyway, the word was there, and, whatever it was, I can see no reason why the Senate should be used as a sounding board for vile insinuations, which, in my judgment, are not in keeping with the regular code of ethics which all gentlemen should observe, both in the Senate and elsewhere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia to strike from the bill paragraph (G), on page 18.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I had not intended to participate in this discussion.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, a remark was made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] which insinuated that I had made some slighting remarks about the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT]. I do not think the transcript will bear out such a statement. I had no intention of doing anything of the sort. I voted to seat the Senator from West Virginia. I campaigned against him in his State, but he was elected by the people and came here, and I voted to seat him. I thought it was due to the oath I took under the Constitution so to vote. But when I find people in charge of the Government who are not, as it seems to me, though I may be mistaken——

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I did not yield the floor so that the Senator might make a speech. If he wants to make a speech, however, I will sit down and give him the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington decline to yield further?

Mr. BONE. I shall be glad to yield the floor to the Senator if he wants to make a speech. Otherwise, I wish to proceed.

Mr. SCHALL. I merely wish to have my position clearly before the Senate. I have said what I have, not because I liked to do it, but because I have felt away down deep in my heart that somebody somewhere should call these things to the attention of the country. If I stepped on anybody's toes in doing it, all I have to say is that I have felt that it is my duty to do as much as I could to call the attention of the country to what was going on behind the scenes, behind censorship and false propaganda. I have not gotten very far in calling the attention of the country to the situation. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD does not reach very far. But, Mr. President, so long as I remain here, I intend to do what I can to call attention to what seems to me to be the breaking of the oath of the President. I think, from the outset, right from the beginning, that there has been a conniving to get around the Constitution. The bill which is before us today is an effort to get around the Constitution, to blot it out, and to mislead the people. The entire tenor of this administration from the beginning has been to circumvent the Constitution and betray the oath that he took to uphold and defend the Constitution. I thank the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] has referred to a little weekly newspaper called the "Tonganoxie Mirror", which has been quoted, I believe, in some remarks made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL]. When it was quoted the other day I suggested to the Senator from Alabama that he obtain a copy of this weekly newspaper, because I would be willing to enter into a bet, despite the fact that I am not a sporting person, that along with this newspaper's flailing attack on the administration, and particularly on the power bill which is pending, we would find either a half- or a quarter-page advertisement of the Power Trust in the sheet. So, at my suggestion, a number of these newspapers were procured. Running true to form, numerous weekly newspapers in the United States pursue, as I find, the same course which many weekly newspapers in my State have pursued in times past. So at this point I am going to tell a little story which will illustrate the methods of certain newspapers in this power fight, and which, in my judgment, will generally explain why certain newspapers take the editorial position they do.

In 1924, in the State of Washington, we had a big power fight. It arose around a very simple thing. Things of the character I describe explain why power companies are building more and more public enmity against themselves. In my State of Washington two cities own great municipal power plants—magnificent, finely equipped hydraulic plants. For a great many years the people around and outside those cities have wanted to enjoy the privilege of using electric energy from these municipal plants. Under the laws of the State of Washington these cities were not permitted to sell any of their electrical energy, surplus or otherwise, outside their corporate limits, and therefore the people living in the surrounding territory had to pay the prices exacted by the Power Trust, which at that time was the Puget Sound Power & Light Co., a Stone & Webster affiliate.

To get around that condition it was suggested that we pass a very simple law permitting cities owning power plants to sell power outside of their corporate limits. There were only two cities capable of doing any great amount of harm to the Power Trust—Tacoma and Seattle—but when that suggestion was made one would have imagined, from the howl and uproar that went up from certain flabby little Power Trust newspapers of the State, whose columns were generously filled with Power Trust advertisements, that we were proposing to make common property of all the women and that the country was going soviet or bolshevistic, as has been delicately suggested and intimated here from time to time in the discussion of public-ownership proposals.

The campaign was fought in that State around that issue of the right of Tacoma and Seattle to sell a little of their output of electric power to farmers outside of the corporate limits, who were spending their good money with the merchants of those two big cities. Power-company spokesmen even resorted to the dirty and filthy charge that this effort on the part of those cities to sell a little cheap power outside to the farmers was in itself an effort to overthrow the Government of the United States, and that that sort of proposal was backed by Russian money.

One can understand why men whose sires stood on the flame-crested hills of Gettysburg, men whose forebears were with "Old Rough and Ready" at Buena Vista, and who believed those cities had a right to sell power, deeply and bitterly resented that suggestion coming from spokesmen for an outfit like Stone & Webster, whose infamous lobbyists fooling around with our Legislature in the State of Washington had become a stench in the nostrils of decency. These manipulations were highly suggestive of the lobbying which went on around the Capitol here in Washington when the holding-company bill was pending. The Power Trust of Washington in that 1924 fight made a fight in the newspapers, and one phase of that fight is the story I want to tell my colleagues here, because I think, perhaps, I have had a better close-range opportunity to study these propaganda activities than most of the Members of this body.

The propaganda editorial mill of the power crowd would send out to a weekly newspaper an editorial written in the Seattle offices of the Puget Sound Power & Light Co., the western wing of Stone & Webster, of Boston.

A clever propaganda writer would write one of these nasty editorials for the editor of a weekly paper. From an advertising agency's office in Seattle, and accompanying this "canned editorial", would go a full-page "ad", damning the municipal power people, calling down upon them the mildew of God Almighty's wrath, and asking that it descend on everybody who believed in public ownership in that State.

There would be a vicious cartoon accompanying the ad and editorial, attacking the municipal power proposal as being bolshevistic and red radicalism. Some of the arguments in these canned editorials for tired editors were on a par with some of the loose arguments against the pending utility bill. I wonder how men can formulate arguments that proclaim it a form of disloyalty to urge people to retain ownership of their own rivers and lakes. The Power Trust would say to these little editors: "If you will bunk the people of your community by running this editorial as your own, then you can run this full-page Power Trust "ad" at fat rates, but you must also run the cartoon." As a result, week after week in 1924 in the State of Washington we saw this rather ridiculous spectacle, a spectacle that casts no credit on the great independent American press which was once proclaimed as the "Archimedian lever that moves the world; the sentinel on the watch tower of liberty; the dynamics of progress."

These editors of certain weekly newspapers repeatedly ran these Power Trust "editorials" in their editorial columns, knowing at the time who prepared them. Mr. President, upon one occasion I clipped 27 of these editorials from 27 weekly newspapers in my State. Each editorial read exactly like the other one. I went around the State frequently showing those editorials to the people living in the community where the paper was published. I said, "When this little editor of your local paper published that editorial and you read it, you thought he had written it, that it had sprung full panoplied from his brain, like Minerva sprang from the brow of Olympian Jove. You thought this brilliant editorial attack came from the brain of your local editor, but he carries the humiliating thought that he had rented his editorial column to the Power Trust."

Mr. President, when a man sells his conscience down the river, he is in a bad way. No man can sell his soul and conscience, and perhaps his honest convictions, to the Power Trust and retain his self-respect. Such a shameless barter and sale of editorial opinion as we have frequently witnessed is a reproach to a noble profession. The people of my State were confronted with hundreds of such editorials written by the Power Trust which had the brazen gall to come down here and talk about lobbying—lobbying on the part of the administration! One outfit down in Oregon, Hofer by name, regularly supplied these Power Trust "canned editorials" to editors with brainfag and a great yearning for full-page Power Trust "ads."

The power concerns to which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] referred are not going to even try to be decent. They intend to stage a political battle the like of which this country has never witnessed. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] in his very able address on the floor of the Senate in discussing the utility bill, read a 1933 editorial from the Electrical World, one of the official organs of the Power Trust of the country. It was called "Light Up With Politics", in which editorial the organized power companies of the country and the utility holding companies brazenly boast that they are going into politics, to destroy men who dare oppose them. They frankly say that they are not going to merely finance men but they are going to put their own selected candidates in the field and send them down to the United States Senate and to the House of Representatives.

I wonder what sort of government we are going to have when that insolent outfit succeeds in its bold plan to take over the Government of the United States. In this holding-company fight we have seen a stark, horrible fear planted in the hearts of Members of Congress; fear of political death at the hands of the Power Trust, with its unlimited political slush funds. I have seen men here actually cringe, and I have had some colleagues tell me—my own colleagues in this body, if you please!—that they feared for their political welfare in the future by reason of their votes for this utility holding-company bill. The future for the average citizen is gloomy, indeed, if this power gang can come down here and lay the lash about the shoulders of United States Senators and Representatives and make any man in this body feel a real fear.

How can we go on, how can we hope to go ahead with decent legislation, how can we continue to expect legislation free from taint and bias, when a dreadful fear is planted in the hearts of men here by an outfit that we shall surely have to meet head-on sooner or later. In God's own Providence may it come soon.

We are facing exactly what Roscoe Pound pointed out in a brilliant speech he made a few years ago before the Kentucky Bar Association. The title of that speech was "The New Feudalism." In that speech Pound pointed out that so rapid had been the increase in economic control and power through vast companies, like the holding companies, that there is nothing left for the ordinary citizen but to own a little stock in one of those companies. He can in no wise find a place for himself in our economic life; but to him, a citizen, with what amount of money he may have, all that is left is to buy some stock and thus find his place in the scheme of things.

Dean Pound said:

Today the typical man (for the city dweller, not the farmer, is the type for his time) finds his greatness not in himself and in what he does, but in the corporation he serves. If he is great, he is published to the world not as having done this or that, but as director in this company and that. If he is small, yet he shines in the reflected glory of the corporation from which he draws a salary.

In other words, there has been and there is being deliberately created in this country a new economic feudalism, if you please, Mr. President, in which the individual is being ruthlessly submerged; and I cannot for the life of me understand why men stand on the floor of this body and find even in their hearts a defense of that sinister thing.

There is one other matter to which I wish to call attention. This is a typical illustration of what power companies do in moulding public sentiment, and no wonder they can get a lot of people to write in here and demand the death of this bill.

There was a power company operating in my State, owning a distribution system in the city of Aberdeen, Wash. An investigation of that company was had with respect to expenditures of the company for political purposes and otherwise. It was known as the Grays Harbor Railway & Light Co., and what I am reading is from the report of the public service commission of my State, now the department of public works:

The report showed that the company had contributed generally to practically every community enterprise in the form of cash donations and memberships, which it charged against operation expenses and, by so doing, against the ratepayers.

Here was a company in this community boasting of its generosity, and saying, "Why, if you have public ownership of power in this city, that is not only bolshevism and communism"—such as has been indicated by some of our Members here—"and against the American form of government, but you are going to take out of this community a very generous patron of the arts, a generous contributor to charities and the like", but when the records were finally disclosed to the public it became evident that the company was merely charging these contributions against the ratepayers.

These contributions, made to some 40 community organizations, were not permissible expense items, according to the State board.

The contributions, donations, subscriptions, and gifts were made to chambers of commerce—

Now we can begin to understand why the chambers of commerce are so much interested in power bills. In my own city the power companies had several memberships in the chamber of commerce, and in every city in this country the chamber of commerce is partly underwritten in its activities by the money of the Power Trust.

Federated Industries—

That is the association of employers fighting organized labor.

Swimming pools—

They could not clean the people thoroughly enough in light rates, so they had to give them swimming pools.

Boy Scouts, American Legion—

And if there had been any old-maid scouts, they would have greased them, too. [Laughter.]

Salvation Army, Volunteers of America—

They were trying to get as close to the Deity as possible by taking care of the Salvation Army—

Several sorts of homes, school track teams—

How generous they were! "School track teams!"—

Good-will industries, fraternal organizations, and lodges—

They had to grease the Masons and the Elks and the Moose and the Knights of Columbus; and if there had been a Mohammedan lodge down there, they would have greased it, too.

While I was in that city making a speech, I noticed a man and woman sitting down in front of me, and they invited me to their home. I went into that home, and it was a very poorly furnished home. No carpets were on the floor; just little bits of linoleum with holes worn in them. When I had known that man years before, he had been a man of some means—at least, he had been able to live well. When I came into that home they turned on one light, perhaps a little 25- or 40-watt lamp, and the woman said, "You know, we do not have much light now. My husband has been out of work a long time, and we cannot turn on many lights, because the lights cost a lot of money here in Aberdeen." I looked around that home—a home smitten with poverty—and I thought of that home as I read this report, Mr. President; this report which indicates that the Power Trust, this power combine that was skinning the people of Aberdeen, was contributing to—

Practically every church of all denominations in the community, hospitals, conventions, sportsmen organizations—

They did not miss a thing—

Grays Harbor Golf Club, and the like.

Now, it was perfectly ducky and darling for them to give a contribution to the Grays Harbor Golf Club. Power Trust ethics made it perfectly right for this outfit to exact an ungodly rate for light from that little poverty-stricken home so that it could turn over a part of the loot to the Grays Harbor Golf Club, so that the bankers and the swanky boys down there might go out on the beautiful putting greens and knock their little white pills around, all at the expense of the poverty-stricken homes of Aberdeen. That is a sample of the kind of brazen gall and effrontery of a business that presumed to come down here and tell Congress—may I use the bald vernacular?—where to "head in"!

If my associates have not reached the point now where they are going to cleanse this "Augean stable", there is not much hope for the boys and girls of this country. I have a little fellow coming on. What chance is there in life for my little fellow when a gang can come down here and tell the Congress of the United States what laws it may or may not pass? The feudal system is coming back with a vengeance.

I say this in all candor and honesty to the Members who sit about me. I have talked to men in Congress, who told me that they were literally frightened to death by these power companies. Imagine men whose fathers were at Gettysburg and Antietam and Spotsylvania Court House being frightened by a business organization!

Mr. President, we boast of our traditions; we make speeches about Bunker Hill and Gettysburg and Valley Forge, but the fine fire of manly independence that surged in the breasts of our iron-blooded sires has burned out, if we cringe like whipped spaniels when the Power Trust wields its political lash and threatens independent Americans as though they were Chinese coolies.

The man who, perhaps, a few days before had spoken in grandiloquent terms of what our rugged sires have done, sits in this chair with the fear of God in his heart, afraid to vote his own honest convictions. That is being done to the Congress of the United States by the Power Trust of this country, which has the gall and the effrontery to suggest that we are Communists if we do not like their fantastic financial nightmares.

For one, I desire to say that I deeply resent that kind of business. Back of me are four generations of soldiers, and I do not want the Electric Bond & Share Co. and the Stone & Webster holding company, or any other outfit to suggest or intimate to me that because I want the people of my State to own their own rivers and lakes I am a Bolshevist.

I would build a fire of resentment in the heart of every Member of the Senate against that sort of truculent infamy. It is that kind of business that will ultimately pull the house down around the ears of the Power Trust if it persist in its efforts to control every man in public life. Men who believe in public ownership of power are quite as loyal to this Republic as a crowd that has not hesitated to corrupt public thinking, emasculate school textbooks, and aspire to complete political control of the United States.

Members of the Senate heard me read the other day the story of how the power companies had fixed the geographies in my State to twist the thinking of little children. They actually went in there and messed up the geographies of my State. Dirty? They have plumbed the depths of dubious activities in their efforts to propagandize the public.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] talks about propaganda. Great God! If this administration went on a thousand years, and employed every artifice and every strategem that it could devise, it could not come within a million miles of the Power Trust of this country in political trickery and in sheer ability to misrepresent facts.

I have seen Power Trust inspired editorials and news stories accusing men of things that never were done, and the poor devils had to take it, because they had no way to answer. The paper that was low enough to run that kind of stuff closed its columns to an answer; but, thank God, there are a lot of men in America who cannot be made to desist in answering that sort of thing.

I am sorry the Senator from Minnesota has seen fit to say some of the things he has said, but I did not rise to answer him. I say, however, that he has picked out a mighty frail reed to lean on when he picks out one of these little strumpet Power Trust sheets, full of Power Trust ads, to quote here in defense of the principle that he espouses.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills of the Senate:

S. 156. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the city of Perth Amboy, N. J.;

S. 2904. An act to prohibit the interstate transportation of prison-made products in certain cases; and

S. 3038. An act to authorize the transfer of certain lands in Rapides Parish, La., to the State of Louisiana for the purpose of a State highway across a portion of the Federal property occupied by the Veterans' Administration Facility, Alexandria, La.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 298. An act for the relief of Jack Page; and

H. R. 617. An act for the relief of Lake B. Morrison.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2532) to amend an act entitled "An act setting aside Rice Lake and contiguous lands in Minnesota for the exclusive use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota", approved June 23, 1926, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 5368. An act to provide for the addition of certain lands to the Chalmette National Monument in the State of Louisiana, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6228. An act authorizing a capital fund for the Chippewa Indian Cooperative Marketing Association;

H. R. 6361. An act to amend the Filled Milk Act;

H. R. 6512. An act to authorize the crediting of service rendered by personnel (active or retired) subsequent to June 30, 1932, in the computation of their active or retired pay after June 30, 1935;

H. R. 7575. An act to legalize a bridge across Black River on United States Highway No. 60 in the town of Poplar Bluff, Butler County, Mo.;

H. R. 7591. An act granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Donora and Monessen, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River between the two cities;

H. R. 7620. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill.;

H. R. 7659. An act to provide that tolls on certain bridges over navigable waters of the United States shall be just and reasonable, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7809. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of certain free highway bridges across the Red River from Moorhead, Minn., to Fargo, N. Dak.;

H. R. 7936. An act to adjust the salaries of rural letter carriers, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8002. An act to increase the compensation of letter carriers in the village delivery service;

H. R. 8209. An act temporarily to exempt refunding bonds of the government of Puerto Rico from the limitation of public indebtedness under the Organic Act; and

H. J. Res. 257. Joint resolution to amend a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Porto Rico", approved December 21, 1928, as amended by the Second Deficiency Act, fiscal year 1929, approved March 4, 1929.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 5368. An act to provide for the addition of certain lands to the Chalmette National Monument in the State of Louisiana, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

H. R. 6228. An act authorizing a capital fund for the Chippewa Indian Cooperative Marketing Association; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 6361. An act to amend the Filled Milk Act; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

H. R. 7575. An act to legalize a bridge across Black River on United States Highway No. 60, in the town of Poplar Bluff, Butler County, Mo.;

H. R. 7591. An act granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Donora and Monessen, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River between the two cities;

H. R. 7620. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill.;

H. R. 7659. An act to provide that tolls on certain bridges over navigable waters of the United States shall be just and reasonable, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7809. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of certain free highway bridges across the Red River, from Moorhead, Minn., to Fargo, N. Dak.; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 7936. An act to adjust the salaries of rural letter carriers, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 8002. An act to increase the compensation of letter carriers in the village delivery service; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

H. R. 8209. An act temporarily to exempt refunding bonds of the Government of Puerto Rico from the limitation of public indebtedness under the Organic Act; and

H. J. Res. 257. Joint resolution to amend a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Porto Rico", approved December 21, 1928, as amended by the Second Deficiency Act, fiscal year 1929, approved March 4, 1929; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Keyes	Pittman
Ashurst	Coolidge	King	Pope
Austin	Copeland	La Follette	Radcliffe
Bachman	Costigan	Lewis	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, yesterday a colloquy took place between the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and me in which some of the phases of the A. A. A. bill were discussed. To that purpose I wish to address myself this afternoon.

Before doing so, may I take the time to say that I have no general quarrel with those who are favoring these amendments—particularly Mr. Chester Davis, with whom I have a very slight acquaintance—for the reason that confronted, on the one hand, as they are, by high tariffs in our own country and high tariffs in other countries, which to some extent do not take care of the entire agricultural situation, the protagonists of this bill have been hard put to it in order, perhaps, to raise agriculture to a higher standard than that which it enjoys under the present economic set-up.

I do not wish to criticize their general objectives. In my judgment, however, tariff reform would be a better way to accomplish what appears to be the end they desire to accomplish, though that would not be an easy matter because recently all the nations of the world have passed high tariff acts. Furthermore, while the establishment of any kind of a market for agricultural products is very easy from a theoretical standpoint, it is very difficult from a practical one. So these gentlemen, being confronted with those facts, have probably attempted to do the best they could for agriculture.

Let us come to the measure now before the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator believe that the policy of high tariffs, and then the attempt to meet the evils resulting from high tariffs by stimulating prices of commodities, regimentation by limiting production, imposing all sorts of impediments to free transportation, free sale, and exchange of commodities, will ultimately result in greater disadvantage to the farmers and to everybody else than if we attempted to rationalize things in conformity with the rules which prevailed when conditions were more normal?

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with the observations of the Senator from Utah; but I did not want to be intolerant in my comment about those who represent the other side. I can see the reason for their support of this measure and other measures; I made the brief observation at the beginning of my remarks so that in what I have to say it would not be thought there was anything of a personal attack upon the measure.

Yesterday the Senator from Alabama, in arguing the "constitutionality", so called, of the price-fixing and other provisions of the bill, stated that the States had the authority to regulate intrastate commerce and that the Federal Government had the authority to regulate interstate commerce. When we came to the price-fixing provision, and I asked the Senator from Alabama under what decisions of the courts or provisions of the Constitution the price-fixing provision was upheld or permitted, he was frank in stating that there was no decision of the courts and no provision of the Constitution, unless it be the provision empowering Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, under which the power to fix prices could be exercised by the Congress. In developing that argument, he said that since the States do not have the power to fix prices, obviously, the power must rest somewhere, and therefore it must rest with the Federal Government.

At the conclusion of the Senator's argument I read from the Constitution, and today I shall read several other provisions of the Constitution. The first is amendment number 9 to the Federal Constitution, which reads as follows:

> The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained—

By whom? By the States? No; "retained by the people." Amendment no. 10 reads as follows:

> The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

There is a great body of power which the people have never surrendered, either to the National, the State, the municipal, or the county governments. The people would be foolish to surrender all the power to one governing agency or another governing agency. The people have granted only limited powers to each, the States and the National Government. Therefore it is not sound, in my judgment, to say, from the standpoint of law, first, that because a power does not reside in the States it must, forsooth, reside in the National Government, or because it does not reside in the National Government it must, forsooth, reside in the State government, because there are many powers, which I will not take the time now to detail, but with which all are familiar, which have never been surrendered either to the National or the State Governments.

State governments and the National Government are governments of limited authority. They can exercise no authority except that expressly granted in the covenant or the constitution of the respective political unit, except the inherent police powers, which give to these agencies the authority to carry out the express powers set forth in the constitution of the State or the Constitution of the National Government. So much for that.

Mr. President, there is no provision in the Federal Constitution which allows Congress to fix prices. On the contrary, there are a number of provisions, such as that a man shall not be deprived of his property without due process of law, and many others I might mention, designed to protect the individual in the possession of what is rightfully his.

In the pending bill the particular amendment on page 18, line 21, paragraph (G) the first lines, into which I will interpolate a few words, read:

> The Federal Government, or an agency of the Federal Government, shall have the power of fixing, or providing methods for fixing, minimum prices at which any such commodity or product thereof shall be sold.

I should like to ask those who maintain that the Federal Government can fix minimum prices if, by the exercise of the same power, it can fix maximum prices? I am going to assume that the answer is "yes"; that the power to fix prices gives the Federal Government, according to their philosophy and interpretation, the right to fix maximum prices as well as minimum prices. For the moment I want to digress and show those who represent agricultural communities, or communities in which raw materials are produced, what would be the effect if Congress should ever exercise such power.

Let us suppose that the large cities of the Nation obtained control of the House of Representatives; in other words, that the majority of the Members of the House of Representatives came from urban communities. According to the philosophy of those who say that Congress can fix minimum prices, and assuming that they likewise maintain that Congress can fix maximum prices, Congress could fix the price paid to every farmer in this country for his eggs, his milk, his meat, and his grain.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I will yield to the Senator in a moment. In other words, if Congress had the authority to fix maximum prices, as it is claimed it has the authority to fix minimum prices, Congress would become the arbiter of the maximum price for which every farmer in America could sell his products. Congress could say that the farmer should get only 40 cents a bushel for wheat, 10 cents a dozen for eggs, or 3 cents a pound for hog meat.

If Senators write this law they may think they are writing it only for a year or 2 years or for their own generation. Let me call to their attention the fact that the acts of Congress form an unbroken line of precedents. That is what they really are. Senators are carrying out a philosophy which, carried to its ultimate conclusion, may do us infinite harm and defeat the very purpose which they have in mind.

I now yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to the fact that during the war we fixed the price of wheat. We fixed a maximum price of wheat for the wheat farmers, and we fixed a maximum price for many other products. I am not at all sure that it is sound philosophy to do such a thing, but I think if we should do it we would have to do it with the limitation placed upon the Congress to fix a reasonable price, and it would have to be determined whether or not it was confiscatory. The Congress of the United States has delegated to the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to fix rates in certain industries engaged in interstate commerce, but those rates must not be confiscatory. I am sure that under the Constitution we could not fix arbitrary prices which might destroy the value of any class of property, whether that of farmers, or anyone else. There is, however, some question in my mind as to whether Congress does not have power to delegate to somebody the authority to fix reasonable prices upon various commodities which are being transported in interstate commerce.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am coming to that Mr. President.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield in a minute.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wanted to give some information which would confirm the viewpoint expressed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I read a headnote from the Nebbia case, which I quoted yesterday, on the point the Senator has just stated:

> If the law-making body within its sphere of government concludes that the conditions or practices in an industry make unrestricted competition an inadequate safeguard of the consumer's interests, produce waste harmful to the public, threaten ultimately to cut off the supply of a commodity needed by the public, or portend the destruction of the industry itself, appropriate statutes passed in an honest effort to correct the threatened consequences may not be set aside because the regulation adopted fixes prices—reasonably deemed by the legislature to be fair to those engaged in the industry and to the consuming public.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. GORE. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] made reference to the fixing of the price of wheat during the World War, and inadvertently said that Congress fixed the maximum price. Congress thought it was fixing the minimum price. It turned out, however, in effect to be the price.

I should like to say a word further in confirmation of what the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has said. The Food Control Act passed Congress, I believe, on the 10th of August 1917. As I recall, wheat on that day was selling in Minneapolis at $3.08. A committee was appointed to fix the price of wheat, and when it made its announcement the first of September 1917, it fixed the price at $2.20, and the farmers in Oklahoma and Kansas were obliged to take from $1.75 to $1.95 for their wheat on the farm. By that action the price fixed was nearly $1 less than the market price, and thus the wheat farmers of this country were robbed of more than a billion dollars.

Mr. President, it is a sword with two edges, and it may cut both ways.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma, and he has illustrated my general observation by exact example.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I desire to conclude what I was saying, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Arizona. I have been here in Congress now for nearly 13 years, and I have heard many men stand on the floor of this body and also on the floor of the body at the other end of the Capitol, and describe the effect of price-fixing on the wheat farmer. I have heard my friend from the Northwest time and time again point out how the munition makers made millions upon millions of dollars while the farmer was not permitted to get more than a certain amount for the things he produced. Are Senators complaining against that policy, and then, in times of peace, putting it to their bosom in fond caress and giving it the sanction of their best judgment, after they have held forth all these years upon the inequities and the injustices which have been heaped upon their agricultural constituents by the very policy contained in this bill—the policy of price fixing?

I now yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the able Senator, but I do not now wish to interrupt him.

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot conceive of a governmental policy, even though it may be a boon and a benefit temporarily to agriculture, which, carried down the corridor of time, will heap more suffering upon the backs of those who toil than will the opening wedge of price fixing by legislative fiat as it is contained in this bill.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. I doubt that the Senator understands the farmer's viewpoint. The farmer's viewpoint is that his prices are not now necessarily fixed by competition. There is much control of commodity prices by selfish interests. I should rather trust Uncle Sam than the Steel Trust; I should rather trust Uncle Sam than the Chicago Grain Exchange. The farmer is helpless. He is looking to the Government to do something in his behalf in order that he may obtain a decent return for his labor. He regards the conditions now as oppressive to him, and wishes we could go back 50 or 60 years when we had competition and everybody could in some measure get his fair share. But the farmer has been bound by the economic conditions of the present time, and he is thinking that the Government can do something for him; and, Mr. President, I think the Government has done something for him in the last 2 years. The Government has not done as much as it started out to do, but it has done something for him. The work of the A. A. A. has been measurably offset by manipulation, and by the N. R. A. decision to some extent, but nevertheless there has been some improvement of conditions for the farmer. The law is defective. Many mistakes have been made. The measure now before us is simply an effort to improve the present law, which has improved conditions for the farmers to some extent, and by means of the measure now proposed more can be done for the farmer.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from North Dakota has contradicted himself. Let me show him in a few words where he has done it. The Senator has risen time and again to show how the Government, which he said he is willing to trust, during the days of the war, compelled the farmer to take less than the competitive price for his product, and has proposed legislation here to cure that condition. Now he rises and says, "Notwithstanding the fact that we tried that experiment and it cost the farmers hundreds of millions of dollars, I want to put my head into that noose again so the Government can pull it the second time." He complains, on the one hand, that the Government did not treat him right, and now he rises to say that the farmers do not mind trusting the very Government against whose actions they have so lately complained.

Mr. NORBECK. Let the Senator be fair in this matter. I have never said that anybody treated the farmers exactly right; but I said the farmers are more willing to trust the Government than they are to trust the grain exchange, the Steel Trust, or other organizations to fix their prices. That is all I said.

I know that the Democratic Party proclaims its great desire "to take profit out of war." They did not, however, take the profits out of the munitions industry; they did not take the profits out of manufactured goods; but they took the products out of the wheat farmer, the poorest-paid man in the United States. We are wont to forget that now, but I think it is time to right conditions. Let us go along; let us not stop.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, by the enactment of this bill, assuming that the courts will hold it to be constitutional, which I do not believe they will, we will be committing the Government to a policy of price fixing for agricultural commodities. I put this question to those who represent large agricultural States: Are you willing to abide by the prices fixed by the Government if we should be engaged in another war? What agriculturist on this floor is ready to rise now and say, "Yes; I am willing to have this policy as to agricultural products put into operation if we become embroiled in another war?"

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a moment. Before yielding for a question, I wish to know if there is any Senator in this body who will rise and answer that question in the affirmative?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Did the Senator rise for that purpose?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well; I will yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator that the farmers of the Northwest are perfectly willing, in the event of another war, to let the Government of the United States fix the price of farm commodities, providing likewise——

Mr. TYDINGS. Ah!

Mr. WHEELER. Providing likewise that the Government fixes the price that is going to be paid to the munition makers and the profits that are going to be made by them and by others. The difficulty and the complaint previously were that the Government only fixed the price of farm commodities and that it let the other industries make unlimited profits.

Mr. TYDINGS. Before answering the Senator from Montana, I should like to ask are there any other Senators from agricultural States who take the position that during the next war they are ready, representing agricultural States and speaking for their people, to have the Government fix the price of agricultural commodities? Are there any other such Senators?

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MURPHY. I join in the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. The farmers are perfectly willing to have the Government, in which they trust, fix the price of their commodities, conditioned upon the Government fixing the prices charged ordinarily by the industries supplying the things related to the progress of the war.

Mr. TYDINGS. Now, out of all the Senators who make up the body, we have two who accept the proposition, and then only on condition and qualification. I am very glad to have the two Senators make their contributions, and I should be happy to have others do likewise, for I want to know what Senators in this body are going to undertake to fix the price of the following articles in the next war: Thimbles, thread, cloth of various kinds, and textures; all kinds of leather, neckties, underwear, tin cans, solders, railroad cars, trucks, rails, crossties, coal, oil, locomotives? Where is the agency that is going to fix prices for such commodities? Does the Congress think it will be able to write a bill of such magnitude on the floor of this body?

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield in just a moment. If we should assume to fix the price of all commodities used in the next war by legislative fiat, we would be here until judgment day, and then we would only be half way through the list.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield first to the Senator from California, and then I will yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I should like to correct what appears to be an erroneous impression on the part of some Senators as to price fixing during the World War. As will be recalled, the minimum price of wheat was fixed at $2.20 a bushel; and I may say that through the War Industries Board an attempt was made—and successfully, too—to limit the prices of many of the war munitions, not only those which were furnished to our Government but to the governments associated with us in the war. These were, however, strictly war measures.

I venture to say, Mr. President, that never in the history of this Nation, or of any other nation, was such a determined effort made to distribute equitably the burdens of carrying on war as was made during the World War, when those who were making most of the money out of the war were made to bear the highest taxes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me interject at that point to say to the Senator from California that I am satisfied that no Senator in discussing this proposition meant to reflect particularly on the general conduct of the war; least of all was that in our thoughts. We were simply trying to show by precedent what had been the effect on a particular commodity that stood out in any way, and we were not reflecting upon the general conduct of the war as a whole.

Mr. McADOO. I did not draw any such inference from the Senator's remarks.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think other Senators meant such an inference to be drawn.

Mr. McADOO. Nor do I think so. I only meant to say that I think they were in error in assuming that no effort of the kind I have described was made. We not only imposed excess-profits taxes, but taxation in almost every form and to the limit on those who could pay. I wish merely to make the matter clear, in order that discussion may be based upon the facts.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. Will not my good friend from Iowa let me push on for a little while? I want to yield, and I certainly intend to yield to the Senator from Iowa, but unless I can make a little headway I will not be saying anything, because all my time will be taken up by observations by other Senators.

Mr. MURPHY. Will not the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MURPHY. I should like to say that there is, perhaps, a collateral circumstance in connection with the collapse of the price fixed by the Government on wheat which has not been developed. What suggests that to my mind is that in 1920, when food prices were still high, the Federal Reserve Board deliberately set about to deflate those high prices, and accomplished it by calling loans. There was no fixing of prices, but there was a collapse of values as the result of the adoption of that policy by the Federal Reserve Board. There may have been that collateral effect also on the wheat situation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not care to engage at this time in a colloquy with the Senator; in fact, I hope he will conclude as quickly as he can. However, I think his statement a few minutes ago leaves an improper impression in the RECORD. He wanted to know what Senators here were willing, as I recall it, that the Government should fix farm prices during a war period. That led to some discussion. Then the Senator from Maryland assumed that only those who engaged in the colloquy were responsive to his proposition. I think that is entirely an unfair inference, because there may be many others here who do not care to get into this colloquy and did not respond to his invitation. In fact, the conclusion the Senator draws reminds me of the preacher who asked everybody present who wanted to go to heaven to stand up, and then he assumed that those who did not participate in the performance did not want to go to heaven.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, one of the reasons why this bill comes before the Senate is that the agriculturists feel that under the policy of tariffs which this country has adopted prices have been fixed for industrial products but have not been fixed for agricultural products. Yet, as is the case in most instances, when men complain about a condition or policy, if they find they can get some benefit from that against which they are complaining, it suddenly takes on an atmosphere of righteousness, no matter how bad it might be when they are excluded from the fruits of the particular policy.

If this bill shall give the Agricultural Administration the right to fix minimum prices, it must, forsooth, give them the right to fix maximum prices; and I venture to say that there is not one farmer on the floor who will rise and say that he is in favor of the Government of the United States fixing maximum prices for the products of the soil. There is no agricultural representative here who will advocate that agricultural products should have a maximum price. Ah, no; he is embracing this particular sophism upon the theory that always the price is going to be the minimum price; and if it shall be carried out, and the courts shall hold it to be constitutional, which I have no doubt they will not, he will live to see the day when the price fixing will not be the kind of price fixing which he thinks is going to apply in this time of depression.

Senators, you are not adopting this policy for a depression; you are not passing this law for a year; you are committing this Government to a policy which has got to affect agriculture through all the years to come.

That is one of our troubles in the national legislative body. We all look at legislation from the immediate angle rather than the ultimate angle; and thereby often we find ourselves in great difficulty. We assume that if a thing is good for 6 months or a year it will be good for a thousand years, and we justify this, that, and the other as emergency measures. There are very few measures which are good in emergencies which are not good as permanent legislation, and very few measures which are not good as permanent legislation will prove to be good if tried in an emergency. We are passing upon this bill as if it were emergency legislation. If we enter upon the field of price fixing, and the courts shall hold the action to be constitutional, aside from any legal arguments that may now be made against it, its very philosophy will come home to damn us a thousand times over in the course of 5, 10, or 15 years. Once the Government enters upon fixing the prices of everything its people produce, we shall have all the labor troubles and all the trade troubles and all the class troubles laid right here on the doorstep of the Congress.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. There is something which is now damning this country. The producers are being damned and have been for a number of years.

In 1929 the national income was $82,000,000,000. Of that income, the farmers, constituting one-fourth of the population, received only 10 percent. Thirty million of our people received only 10 percent of the national wealth produced!

There is something damning the country, and this bill is an effort to correct that condition. Where shall we begin the correction? I am in entire sympathy with the views expressed by the Senator as to the necessity of opening markets abroad. If we had such markets, we would not now be concerning ourselves with this proposed legislation, which was brought into existence because of the loss of our foreign markets.

But shall we now abandon all effort to correct this condition which is resolving the farmer into a condition of perpetual want, a condition of poverty, if you please? Every attempt that has previously been made to relieve the producers affected has resulted in disaster. We can here and now carry out a pledge we made to the people when we went before them seeking their votes. We can carry out the pledge to seek to raise prices of agricultural commodities not as yet affected by our policies.

How can we correct the disparity in the distribution of national wealth? Somebody else is getting the wealth as a result of the farmer's labor, as a result of what he produces. How can we stop that? How can we begin the real distribution of wealth, which should begin at the grass roots, at the very point of production? When shall we begin it?

I shall not commit myself at this time to the principle of price fixing. I confess there is a great deal in what the Senator has said in viewing with apprehension the consequences of such a policy. But where shall we start to correct this condition which gives 30,000,000 of our people only 10 percent of the national wealth?

My philosophy is much like that of the Senator from Maryland, but I can accept the philosophy of the A. A. A. as an expedient. Yet the Senator rejects it, and I ask the Senator what he would substitute as a means of bringing a measure of prosperity back to the 30,000,000 farmers to be served by this measure in view of the conditions which exist with reference to our exports.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that about 2 months ago I brought a program to the floor of the Senate and discussed that program for about two and a half hours. In my judgment, that program would have been conducive to starting the country on the road to better prices and more work. I do not want to be diverted now to review the fundamentals of that program. I am very definite about the point, however, that if I had lost one arm in a sawmill I should not want to stick the other arm in another sawmill. I would much rather give all my attention to the arm I had left and try to save what remained and make of it the greatest possible use.

Mr. MURPHY. If I have lost my farm I am willing to try something else in an effort to get it back.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, the Senator is, and so am I; but I do not want to try anything anyone says I ought to try without examination to see whether it is a good thing to try. That has been the trouble. We have had any number of measures come before the Senate, as to which someone has said, "Put this through, and the depression will be ended in no time." However, I have not seen the depression disappearing at a mile-a-minute speed.

I am going to return to what I have said a dozen times, that the depression is fundamental, and any superstructure we build on top of it is not going to cure it. We have got to go back to fundamentals and straighten them out, and make the old foundation solid. It will be a slow and long process, and it is the longest way round, but we will get through much more quickly than walking illusory mirage roads which invite us with so much gusto.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I have yielded to a dozen or more interruptions. I have done hardly anything but yield, and I should like to proceed. However, I am glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. This is not a facetious question. We are always being told that we should get back to fundamentals.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator want me to illustrate what I mean by "fundamentals"?

Mr. BARKLEY. No one has yet explained what is the fundamental to which he wants to get back. If the Senator would do that it would enlighten me a great deal. What are the fundamentals about which we talk so much?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall give the Senator a few now by way of illustration.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator let me give one?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. TYDINGS. Gladly.

Mr. ASHURST. A bill before us provides that no citizen shall have the right to inquire in court as to whether money heretofore taken from him was taken lawfully. It is proposed seriously to tax the citizen and not permit him to go into court to test the validity of the tax.

When the wild Indians captured a prisoner, tied him to the stake and tortured him, they allowed the poor prisoner privilege to cry out and writhe. We propose to torture the American taxpayer and not give him even the privilege to cry out and writhe.

One fundamental is to allow the taxpayer at least the right to writhe and cry out in his torture.

Mr. BARKLEY. Even where we would place the tax on an innumerable multitude of people?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly the courts should determine such questions. In other words, we ought not to write a book, close it, and say, "This you shall not read. Our actions must not be reviewed by the courts. We are the people. We are the law. We are the knowledge. No court must presume to inquire into our activities."

That is one of the fundamentals to which I should like to come back.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Arizona for his very worth-while contribution to the discussion. That is a fundamental which I have not surrendered and I do not intend to surrender it. That is one fundamental we still have and to which I am going to hold so far as I am personally concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I want to answer the Senator's question before yielding further. He asked for some fundamentals. I would not run the Government on borrowed money. I would tax and pay as I went. If I had to levy high-income taxes I would do it.

I would not waste money, I would view the depression as it is, feed the people who are unemployed and spend as little unnecessarily as I could so that the debt would be the least burdensome on the people when the time comes to pay it back. That is one good fundamental. It is as old as time itself that we cannot spend ourselves out of debt. That is another fundamental.

Another fundamental to which I hold is that we cannot increase the price of an article and increase its consumption at one and the same time. Fix the price of automobiles at $5,000 apiece and how many of the people who now are riding in automobiles would have new ones?

We seem to have a philosophy that we can increase the prices of meat and foods of all kind and at the same time increase the consumption of such commodities. It cannot be done. Today the people have stopped buying beefsteak and pork in the stores because the price has gone so high that they cannot afford to eat them. I would rather create wealth and feed the people on plenty than to create scarcity and feed the people on some substitute.

Do those instances answer the Senator's question? They are some of the fundamentals about which I feel pretty strongly.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; they do not. The Senator is evidently complaining because the price of agricultural products has increased. Does the Senator mean that we ought to have pursued a policy of doing nothing so that wheat would now be selling at 40 cents a bushel instead of 80, and pork at 3 cents a pound instead of 7 or 8 cents a pound, and that tobacco would be selling at 5 cents a pound instead of 15 or 20 cents a pound? In other words, does the Senator take the position that the Government of the United States ought not to have done anything, artificial or otherwise, temporarily to stimulate the prices of agricultural products during the depression, pending the arrival of the time when normal conditions may return and the law of supply and demand have some effect upon them?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator's argument is equivalent to this: Four men go in and rob a bank. They get $400 and divide it among them. Each one has $100. One man speaks up and says, "I am sorry we robbed that bank." Another man speaks up and says, "Are you not $100 better off for the moment?"

The other argument is that the farmer gets 15 cents more for any commodity he raises. That 15 cents does not come from the rich, because the rich eat very little of what the farmer produces. It comes from the masses of the people, of whom 12,000,000 are unemployed and 22,000,000 more of the total population are on the relief rolls. We paid the farmer, who had some income, at the expense of the men who was on the Government relief roll for the very necessities of life with which to keep himself and his wife and his little children alive until an opportunity to work should come.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Kentucky does not mean to say that the money which the farmer has received has not come out of the pockets of the people, does he?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no; I do not mean to say that——

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us be frank about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. But I do mean to say that the Senator's illustration of four men robbing a bank is certainly not an analogous situation to the efforts of the Government of the United States to increase the price of agricultural products.

We have not held up anybody. We have not robbed anybody, unless all taxation is a matter of robbery. The Senator may interpret the processing tax as a robbery. Of course, it is yet to be decided whether or not the Court will hold that tax unconstitutional; but even if the Court should hold it unconstitutional, we all know that in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of a thousand the man who paid the tax has already passed it on to the public and it has been paid; and if he is allowed to recover from the Government and nobody can recover from him, it will constitute what the Supreme Court in the gold case described as an unjust enrichment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield to the Senator from Idaho in just a moment.

I wish to say in all calmness that any Member of this body can go to any city or town or hamlet in his State, and can walk into the grocery store where the people who are poor buy their food; and if he finds what I have found—and I believe he will find it—he will find, in many of the stores of this Nation, that people have stopped eating meat because it is too expensive for them to eat. In the little town of Havre de Grace, of 4,500 people, the A. & P. store manager says they do not provide a stock of beef any more because so much of it goes to waste for lack of sale. I found that condition to be true generally in the stores of my town, because with the pyramiding of all these taxes—quite often unjustly—the people cannot afford to consume the quantities of food which they once consumed; and I think any Member of this body can verify that story by contacting the people in his own State, who will subscribe to what I have said.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do.

Mr. GORE. I call the Senator's attention to the fact—he is doubtless familiar with it—that this morning the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Boston, in the Hoosac Mills case, held the processing tax to be void.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I am familiar with it.

I have been diverted from what I intended to say. I asked for the authority to fix prices under the Constitution. I have already spoken at some length on that point. I say that if we have the authority to fix minimum prices, we have the authority to fix maximum prices; and if we have the authority to fix maximum prices, we have the authority to take property without due process of law. I say that the Federal Government no more has the power to fix prices in either interstate or intrastate commerce than it has the power to go into any one State and regulate those functions which are reserved to the States or to the people thereof. This is a government of limited authority, and even its police powers permit it to go no further than the necessary force to be exerted to carry out its express powers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. TYDINGS. Not just now. I wish to finish this statement. Then I shall come back to the general argument.

It is conceded that during the war, under the exercise of the price-fixing power, the farmer was defrauded of the full competitive price of his wheat. If it be true—and I have no reason to doubt it—that in certain cases it worked to the injury of the wheat producers, are Senators willing to project this Government on a policy of price fixing which some day may see the representatives of the urban centers outnumber the rural representatives in the Federal House of Representatives? There the city people will tell our farmers the highest price they may get for the products they raise.

We are not making history for a year, Senators. We are not making history for a decade. We are starting this Government on a line of legislative philosophy which it has never before embraced in all its history. We may live to see the day when the very shield we now hold up for our protection will be beaten into a spear which will pierce the heart of agriculture all over this country.

Even as I speak, the A. A. A. has been held to be unconstitutional. I may be wrong. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I have the greatest respect and sympathy for Mr. Chester Davis. Confronted as he was with a policy of tariffs which did not apply to agriculture except in part, with the world locked up in watertight compartments, with the farmer able to sell less and less of his products in restricted markets, Mr. Davis said, "Away with theory! I want something practical which I think, during this depression, will lift the farmers up to where they can get something like parity with those who are not employed in agriculture." I sympathize with his objective; but I believe the old, orthodox way of trying to lower the parity to agriculture in a situation where 22,000,000 people exist upon the dole of the Government—a fifth of them all—is more conducive to laying the foundation for recovery than by artificial taxation to drive up prices, which makes those who must consume less able to consume the volume necessary to take up the slack in employment.

I am not at odds with Mr. Davis' philosophy; neither am I arguing against the justice with which he comes here to plead his case. I take issue only with the method by which he seeks to accomplish the purpose he has in mind. The Federal Government is at best one of limited authority, express authority, supplemented and implemented by the police power necessary to carry out the express or implied grants of power in the Constitution. All the power it has is that, and it has no more power than that. The States, on the other hand, are likewise limited in the scope of their powers; and over in a great reservoir remains the power of the people, never given to any governmental agency, State or National, because the entire history of government shows that all governments at times are bad, and they cannot have unrestrained power without damage to the large masses who make up the population.

Therefore, as the power to fix prices never has been given to the Federal Government, either directly or indirectly, I feel that those who are embracing this measure will live to see it declared to be unconstitutional by the courts, that confusion will again come, and we shall have wasted our time on this as we have on other measures without any real, lasting, constructive good being gained for anybody.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. In the first place, let me preface my question with the statement that in no way do I desire to controvert the Senator in the assertions he is making; and I concede freely that he has a perfect right to the ideas he has expressed. I concede also that he may be right in them.

Mr. TYDINGS. And I may be wrong, I likewise concede.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator to take what I believe to be the honest picture of those who are behind this bill.

First, as the Senator has said, the present Agricultural Adjustment Act has been held by the Circuit Court of Appeals to be unconstitutional. Of course, that decision is persuasive, although it is not final.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. But, assuming that it is likely to be final, let me call the attention of the Senator to what I believe to be true, that the principal object of the pending measure is to meet that very question. If the original act shall be ultimately held unconstitutional, and if this bill circumvents the constitutional objection, the fact that the original act may be held to be unconstitutional would not be any argument against the present attempt to secure the enactment of a bill that is constitutional. I think that is a fair statement.

Mr. TYDINGS. With a qualification, I can agree with much that the Senator has said. However, I am afraid the very thing we are attempting to escape—namely, the declaration of the unconstitutionality of this measure—we are going to lose through the amendments, because we have included in the measure not regulation of milk, not regulation of interstate commerce, but price fixing.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will have to agree with me, I think, that the object to be attained is to increase the price of farm products.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has made some assertions about that which on their face, without any modification, I should not contradict. The Senator has said that we cannot reduce the cost to the consumer by increasing the cost to the producer, but while this may seem wrong, and may be entirely wrong, my theory is, and I think it is the theory of this bill and other bills like it, that we can do that very thing. The Senator, although he may say we are wrong in it, must, I think, concede—I believe he will—that in what we believe to be a method of relieving depression we ought to start with the foundation of our superstructure, and get for the producer—who, after all, is the foundation stone of our civilization——

Mr. TYDINGS. And is the farmer.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir; the farmer. I wanted to make my statement a little broader than the farmer when I said "producer", but perhaps "farmer" will include it all. We ought to get for the producer a sufficient amount so that he will not be producing, at a financial loss to himself, the commodities we must have.

Is it not true that if the producer is producing at a financial loss, eventually the civilization based on such a condition must fail? Should we not start with the proposition that the foundation stone, the producer, should get a recompense for his toil?

As I understand, the theory is that when the producer gets a proper compensation for the products he raises, it makes him a consumer; he commences to buy of the factory; the factory, now idle, commences to employ men and pay them higher wages, and they will buy the products of the farm, although they will pay increased prices. If we put the price away down and have no consumers, and no employment for the consumers, it does not make any difference if the commodities are produced for nothing; the producers will eventually fail.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska on that fundamental. He says the farmer has not been getting his parity price, and I do not think he has; but I would much rather, with the least injury possible, bring the artificial prices down to a point where the farmer could trade with those who produce the commodities.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not mean to say that that is an easy thing to do, but I am willing to work on it, although it is slow, in my judgment. In the end we will build on a real foundation, rather than have the whole country on stilts.

Mr. NORRIS. The matter is open. It seems to me that, admitting the premises, namely, that the producer is not getting enough, if this measure is not right, if this kind of legislation is wrong, then it is up to those who claim it is wrong to suggest some other remedy than the one now proposed. I am not denying that they can do so. I realize that men have different opinions about it.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator's position is that in the circumstances which confront him he is doing the best he can.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and if anyone can do any better, let us give him carte blanche and send him out to do it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that on this general philosophy the Senator and I could agree on what we should do in preference to what is proposed, if we could do it; but my fear is that we will never get down to a sound foundation so long as we adopt the policy of placing stilts under this, that, and the other thing. I should like to saw about 2 feet off of some of the stilts rather than put another set of stilts under the farmer.

Mr. NORRIS. I frankly concede to the Senator that I think he has pointed out a danger.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not care to take up the time of the Senate any longer, except to summarize what I have said. I believe—and it is admitted freely by those who favor the bill—that there is no decision of the courts, there is no precedent, except the war-time wheat proposition, in all the history of legislation wherein Congress has ever embarked heretofore on such a far-sweeping price-fixing proposal, without restraint or control, as is set forth in the bill before us, and that, too, without any limitation, it being left absolutely within the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture and its agents to say what the minimum price shall be, with no yardstick, minimum or maximum, by which they must find that price. Therefore, we have not only violated our authority as to delegating power but we have an absence of authority even to hold the power and do the things ourselves.

I take the position that this is a Government of limited powers and that the people themselves hold the power to fix prices, and until the Constitution is amended, or that power is conferred on Congress, we have no right or ability at all to deal with it.

Further than that, in conclusion, even if it is legal, even if it may be temporarily good, it will be the entering wedge, and price fixing will grow on the scale on which tariffs have grown, and we will have Nation-wide campaigns of price fixing, utter confusion, class prejudice and class greed and group greed, until this body will not be able to stand up under the desire to fix this price and that price and the other price in accordance with the wishes of the group affected.

We are not passing this measure for a day or a year or a decade. If price fixing is held to be within the jurisdiction of the Congress, then we will find the need in the future to have the prices of more and more commodities fixed each and every year, and, in my opinion, it will be a Pandora's Box, the lid of which we will never be able to replace once it has been opened.

PAYMENT OF DEBT DUE BY ENGLAND THROUGH TRANSFER OF ENGLISH ISLANDS, AND NICARAGUAN CANAL TREATY

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am led to depart from the complete phase of this discussion to inject a suggestion for action which I feel is valuable to consider and important not to postpone.

I know when I touch the subject to be mentioned my honorable colleagues will have summoned to their reflection the observation of Polonius upon Hamlet—

Still harping on my daughter.

I call attention to the fact that the public press informs us that England has, in some spirit of generosity, offered to cede to Italy territory of her possession as a consideration of Italy not pressing further her territorial demands or military advance upon Ethiopia. The object of such, if it be for peace, is, of course, commendable. If it be for the service of England in her own defense or profit, it is natural and, therefore, justified.

So, sir, if England finds it agreeable to transfer her territory lying off the zone of her immediate possessions to Italy as the payment of an obligation that shall satisfy an Italian debt due and avoid conflict, I place the query before this honorable body, why should not England, in view of the debt of billions she now owes to the United States of America, not find it agreeable, upon the same theory in which she offers the territory to Italy possessed by her, to turn her attention to the fact that here in the islands of the Caribbean, adjacent to the United States, lies property, islands known as Bermuda, Barbadoes, and Jamaica, that belongs to England, for which she has no necessity as a defense to Britain, nor for the security of England. Yet, sirs, this domain is necessary to the defense of the United States.

Mr. President, I do lay down the doctrine that a free and liberal government should not allow any foreign government to have territory within a gateway from which the Nation could be assailed. Therefore, England would see the justice of a transfer to the United States, for the protection of this Government, of such land as lies adjacent to our Nation, practically in our own waters. Particularly true should this be where England, by transferring it to the United States could pay off her debt which she owes in billions to the United States. It is this debt which England declines to pay. Apparently this is for want of funds. Because of lack of funds, England not only makes no effort to pay, but in her last budget she even refuses to announce the acknowledged debt of interest. Finally, an eminent spokesman of that gracious Nation, speaking from the floor of Parliament, said there was now no further reason to mention the subject.

Mr. President, I rise to call attention to the fact that there are two situations which we now may well bring to our attention. England has these islands which can be transferred as land to the United States for the payment of the debt, where they are so segregated and, if you please, sir, so separated that they involve no central point of her government, and do not strike the main sphere of her existence. These islands, belonging to us by their very nature, and from their possession under nature, could be transferred completely to us for all the uses we could make of them, which can in no wise be inimical to England.

In addition to this, we are now on the eve of beholding the necessity of enlarging the Panama Canal. It has been discovered that it is not sufficient for the uses of our enlarging commerce. England professes to hold some form of a previous agreement with Nicaragua by which she contends her privilege to cut a canal through Nicaragua to precede any right on the part of our own Government. In this precedent England assumes the perogative to obstruct and to defeat the object of the United States to build this second canal, to cooperate as aid to the Panama Canal. England recalls that in taking the Suez Canal for her uses she forced France to yield up a conflicting claim of a parallel privilege held under grant from Egypt.

I therefore suggest that, as a further consideration in the payment of the debts which England owes us, she promptly transfer this claim of canal from Nicaragua to the United States. We have heretofore disputed the claim. For a while it stood in such a menacing attitude that we yielded our contention for the time, and adopted as a substitute the Panama Canal route. England, for and as payment of a part of the debt which is now due us, may transfer the concession, whatever the nature may be, to the United States. From this we could at once perfect a complete title in our own behalf. From this we may construct the second and necessary canal in aid of the Panama Canal. By this we should project our commerce without obstruction, and assure something of a natural defense at the south of our Nation as well as that to the east.

I take the liberty of inviting the attention of this honorable body to the fact that the hour surrounding us is a serious one; and if it is possible that other nations shall be at war, though not at war with us, they could, nevertheless, punish us for services we may, as a neutral, give in commerce to some country at war, all in the discharge of our privilege of merchandising. The assailing nation could seize one of these islands lying at the very door of our country, and in the seizure use it as the base from which to assail America. Behold how defenseless we should be! On the other hand, in the possession of this property we could so conduct ourselves as to enable us to defend and protect this country against the very advance which all eyes now may behold as possible.

Mr. President, I rise to make this suggestion at this time because it seems that there is no effort being made on the part of these great debtors to pay the United States. I deplore to have to say, in the presence of these honorable colleagues of mine, that there seems to be a silence on the part of the eminent men of our Government looking to the enforcement of this payment. We seem inclined, for some reason, to let it lag, drawl, and linger. It is hoped by the debtor it may be something forgotten, or looked upon as a matter of an intrusion if it should be offered for further discussion.

I deplore that status. I am opposed to it. I want action. I want that action which shall enforce this payment; and if it be true that these honorable governments are unable to pay for lack of money, here I describe the property which they possess, which can be transferred to pay the debt with no injury to any and with some profit to ourselves.

Mr. President, the time has come when this country must look about her. This is the Western Hemisphere. We seem to forget it. Here, in this country, there should be an American continent of the continent of America. For that reason I tender the suggestion that it may receive in the proper quarter its due regard, that something be done looking toward an arrangement with these countries which have these islands in our waters for transferring such share of them as shall not injure other lands; but, sir, to contribute a payment upon the obligation due us, and something to the preservation and protection of the United States, the friend nation of all.

Having expressed the view, sir, and stated the policy, I trust my honorable colleagues will see from it that there is the second feature of protection of the Nicaragua Canal, and the construction of that great inlet and that avenue, so necessary to our future, and which should be now considered in such a way as will insure to us the title and opportunity which we must behold now, in a very short while, may become essential.

I am anxious for the protection of America. I am anxious for this continent to be preserved. I want the friendship of all other nations; but I ask that honor in the payment of debts due the United States which, if it cannot be done with money, may be done by such transfer of such powers at our own doors as become our rights as a Nation.

I thank the Senators for letting me indulge these views at this moment. Later I shall elaborate them to the completion of the expression defining our new policy—the continent of America as an American continent.

Mr. LEWIS subsequently said: Mr. President, with the consent of the chairman of the committee, I beg at this moment to give a notice.

A short while ago I addressed the Senate upon a certain subject, and refused further to elaborate, after having suggested my position, because of the anxiety of the chairman of the committee to conclude consideration of the pending bill. I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the consideration of the bill I purpose to elaborate the discussion which I opened this morning, and I shall also present a resolution at what I think will be the appropriate time for its consideration.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am very anxious that the Senate should make what disposition it chooses of this bill; but in view of the statement made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] I desire the Senate again to understand the purpose of the so-called "price-fixing section."

Anyone studying the bill will see that this price fixing is predicated upon the fact that the producers and the handlers handling at least 50 percent shall get together under a trade agreement and determine the minimum price. That is not arbitrary action on the part of the Government, but is based upon the action of the producers.

All this bill purports to do is that when agreements are reached as to a minimum price, the Federal Government, insofar as it can do so in the exercise of its delegated powers under the commerce clause, will help the farmers in good faith to carry out the contract and receive the minimum price. Of course, as was reiterated to the committee, the producers can at any time ask for a cessation of the agreement, and it will be ended at once. That was repeated and reiterated before the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, when the producers determined upon fixing a minimum price, they would have to have some sort of vote to fix the minimum price in the whole industry.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; a minimum price for that commodity.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; but let us take the case of citrus fruits or anything else. When the producers once fixed that minimum price they could not unfix it unless they had another vote, could they?

Mr. SMITH. I think not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say they could sign another trade agreement.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes; they could at any time, by a majority vote, rescind their previous action.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what I am talking about. They would have to have another majority vote, of course, to do that.

Can the Senator from South Carolina give us any idea how long it would take in some instances? The Senator from Alabama on yesterday indicated that the minimum price could be fixed, and, if they changed their minds, in 2 days' time it could be called off. I am wondering how that can be done if it is necessary to consult everybody in an industry; and my interest in the question is as to the wisdom of fixing a minimum price for perishable commodities. While a vote was being taken, the oranges or other perishables might all rot, or the fruit might all go to the bowwows while those administering the measure were waiting on the sovereign votes of the producers.

Mr. SMITH. They can get together and fix their formula, just as is done by other trade organizations. They can, through their organization, carry out the will of the majority of the producers and fix the price as conditions may develop, just as is done by any other organization.

This is an attempt on the part of the Government to make it possible for an organization of producers to receive at least a price which they may think is a reasonable price at that time. Neither the Senator nor anyone else thinks an arbitrary price should be fixed, but it is subject to the will of the majority of the producers.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator what would be an arbitrary price? They could fix any price they wanted to; so in this particular case it might be arbitrary, might it not?

Mr. SMITH. No; not if it were done by a vote of the majority. Suppose they all agree that they will have a minimum price. Perhaps it may be a minimum price today, but it may be changed tomorrow.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what I am getting at. In other words, it is the Senator's idea that they will enter into some sort of an arrangement and empower some organization, or one man or a group of men, to fix the price when, if, and how they desire?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; certainly, as other trade organizations do.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was trying to get at that, because the debate has indicated that the producers themselves are going to do it.

Mr. SMITH. The producers do it; but they set up the organization which has been referred to.

What I wish to have the Senator from Texas understand is that this is an attempt to create an organization which will protect the price paid the farmer just as trade organizations protect their trades; and I do not think there would be any more common sense used in this than would be used in the trade agreements. Do the Members of the Senate desire to defeat this provision and leave the farmer where he now is? There is not a farmer in America raising the ordinary agricultural commodities which are generally marketed who has ever had one word to say in regard to the price of the thing he produces, nor have we ever fabricated or fashioned any kind of an organization which stood between the unorganized and defenseless producers of the raw material, on the one hand, and the organized purveyors of the things he needs, on the other hand.

The Senator from Texas knows, and I know——

Mr. CONNALLY. I would not be sure that I do.

Mr. SMITH. That there is not a farmer in his State who has ever fixed the price of a pound of cotton in Texas, a State which makes one-third of all the cotton grown in America. All in the world that the farmer does is to grow the crop and deliver it at the other fellow's price. I desire to ask the Senator this practical question, and also ask it of the whole Senate——

Mr. CONNALLY. I was going to try to answer the former question before the Senator asked another.

Mr. SMITH. I will give the Senator ample time to answer; but, since this occurs to me, I want to ask this body of intelligent men, if I do not insult them by using that adjective [laughter], how many merchants and manufacturers in and around the city of Washington would exist for 1 month if they had to sell their goods at the price which the purchaser put on them? That is a practical question that faces us as practical men.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BYRD. Why does not the Senator from South Carolina propose to fix the price of cotton? This bill does not propose to fix the price of cotton or the price of wheat. Why does not the Senator make an effort to fix the price of every food product if he believes in the principle of price fixing?

Mr. SMITH. That is exactly what I want done, and what I tried to do by the cooperatives; but we could not get enough farmers to come together, because there was no promise of aid. However, if the Federal Government will now say to the farmers, "So far as the Constitution will allow, if you will get together and pool your commodities, so far as we can do so constitutionally, we will aid you until you learn to walk."

Mr. BYRD. But does not the Senator realize that it is easier to fix the price of cotton than it is to fix the price of beans? He proposes to fix the price of beans which are grown in every State of the Union.

Mr. SMITH. No; I do not.

Mr. BYRD. And beans are a perishable food product; but the Senator declines to make an effort to fix the price of cotton.

Mr. SMITH. I do not know that this applies to vegetables alone. If the principle is good for one, it is good for the other.

Mr. BYRD. The bill does apply to vegetables alone, for it so says in the title. If the Senator favors price fixing, why does he not go down the line and fix the price of cotton and fix the price of wheat and fix the price of meats and of everything else which the farmer produces?

Mr. SMITH. I am not trying to get the Government to fix the price of anything.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is advocating the bill.

Mr. SMITH. I am advocating the farmer fixing the price, as the Senator knows.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator well knows that there is nothing in this bill that gives the farmer the right to fix his prices, because the marketing agreements are made by 50 percent of the handlers, and all the farmers can do is to terminate an agreement after it has been made.

Mr. SMITH. I will read to the Senator the section. I know that there was a mistake made.

Mr. BYRD. That mistake has not been rectified as yet, either.

Mr. SMITH. It will be rectified. If the Senator wants constructively to help the farmer, he will not try to destroy a method that might help him.

Mr. BYRD. I object, Mr. President, to the Senator from South Carolina making about this bill a statement which is not correct. The bill does not give the producers the right to fix their own prices; it gives that power to 50 percent of the handlers, as the Senator well knows.

Mr. SMITH. Very well. I will read the provision to the Senator as found on page 22. It occurs under the heading "Orders With or Without Marketing Agreement."

The Senator will find under paragraph (B)—

That the issuance of such order is the only practical means of advancing the interests of the producers of such commodity pursuant to the declared policy, and is approved or favored:

(i) By at least two-thirds of the producers who, during a representative period determined by the Secretary, have been engaged, within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, in the production for market of the commodity specified therein.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this is a matter which I am anxious to have accurately presented to the Senate. Will the Senator read section 8, which is the first step in the establishment of marketing agreements, whereby 50 percent of the handlers can establish a marketing agreement? The second step is if the handlers decline to do that, then 75 percent of the producers may do it. That is in the bill.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. I think the Senator from South Carolina as well as myself have already conceded to the Senator from Virginia the acceptance of an amendment to the section to which reference has just been made providing also for the consent of two-thirds of the producers. When and if the Senator shall offer such an amendment, to that extent, as I indicated to him yesterday, there is a disposition on the part of the Senator from South Carolina, and certainly there is a disposition on my part, to accept it.

Mr. SMITH. Certainly. I asked those who were charged with the drafting of the bill why they had separated the two provisions to which the Senator from Virginia has called attention. I asked them why they had provided that if 50 percent of the handlers agreed the order as to the marketing arrangement might be made but did not include in the same section the consent of the producers. Their idea was that if they could get the consent of the handlers to handle a given product on certain terms, then it would be agreeable to the producers, for the handler was the obstruction in the way.

Let me call attention to the fact that there was a misunderstanding. When the suggestion was made by the Senator from Virginia, that there should be included the consent of the producer as well, all of them agreed and said that it would have been very much better to have included such a provision in both paragraphs. However, the chairman of the committee honestly thought that the preceding language predicated all marketing agreements upon the action of a majority of the farmers signing the agreement.

I will say to the Senator from Virginia that wherever there is any language in this bill which throws any doubt whatever as to whether or not agreement is predicated on the consent of the farmers, I want it made clear that it must be so predicated and will offer no objection. I would not even stand on the floor as chairman of the committee to pretend to advocate the passage of this bill if I did not believe it had in it at least an effort to create a line of resistance by which the farmer could obtain at least some return for what he produces.

Mr. President, every Senator knows that the degrading influence in agriculture, that which has impoverished the farmers is their inability ever to name any price for any staple article they produce and sell.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator just one more question? Then I will not interrupt him further.

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator favors the principle of price fixing——

Mr. SMITH. By the farmer.

Mr. BYRD. Well, by the farmer or by anybody.

Mr. SMITH. I mean by the farmer.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator favors the principle of price fixing, why not amend this bill so as to include every food product of every character and description.

Mr. SMITH. I am taking the bill as it stands, and God knows that the Senator from Virginia and every other Senator ought to help the man who produces the food we eat and the clothing we wear at least to have some say so.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator approves price fixing, is it not his duty, holding the views he does, to move to amend this bill so as to include cotton and every other farm commodity?

Mr. SMITH. I do not want to use a term that has become universally obnoxious—price fixing. But why should not the man who is the producer of the food we eat and the raw material out of which we are clothed not be helped to name at least a reasonable return for that with which he sustains organized society?

Mr. BYRD. I agree with the Senator fully that the producer should be helped, but if the Senator thinks price fixing is the way to help him, let him move to amend the bill so as to include all other articles of food.

Mr. SMITH. Because one-sixtieth of a grain of strychnine might be a tonic is no reason why I should take a fistful. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRD. What the Senator desires to do is to have foods and vegetables take so much strychnine that nobody will be able to eat them.

Mr. SMITH. No; but I suspect the Senator is more engaged in the production of—no, I will not make that reference.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. In effect, have we not established a minimum price already by our loans on cotton and on corn, much money having been loaned by the Government on each of those commodities?

Mr. SMITH. But it must be understood that it is treason, it is absolutely against the law of organized society and decency to stand here and make a plea for the poor degraded wretch who feeds and clothes the world. We may talk eloquently about railroads and insurance companies and factories and organized labor, but the poor devil who today is out yonder making the wheat and the corn and raising the hogs is "Mr. Hayseed", and what right has he even to be considered by the Members of this great legislative body who fill their stomachs with the products of the farm every day and come here clothed by the products of his labor? For the shirt I now wear I paid $2.50. It is composed of 5 ounces of the simplest weave of cotton known to the manufacturer, but that cotton in the form of a shirt is sold at the rate of eight or nine dollars a pound.

Contrast that with the 8 cents a pound paid the farmer for 12 months' toil, gambling with the seasons. Anywhere from eight to twelve dollars is paid for a pound and a half of cow hide to go on your hoofs. [Laughter.] Under modern chemical processes of tanning, in 48 hours the hide is ready to be used in the manufacture of shoes; and yet it takes the rancher on the plains of the West 3 mortal years to raise a pound of hide.

We sit here and strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. Just consider the time we are losing here when we dare bring in a measure designed to help "Reuben." Oh, no, that will not do. But when it comes to a banking bill——

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. Not right now. I am in a reasoning way and I do not wish to have my logic interrupted. [Laughter.]

A bill is going to be brought before us affecting banking, as a bill has been before us for the regulation of utilities; we have bills brought before us for many other purposes, and, oh, with what zeal they are considered. It is an everlasting and unanswerable indictment of the Members of this body that we find so great a number of protagonists for any organized industry—the implication is deadly—and yet when we begin to talk about the agricultural interests there is indifference on the part of everybody. The farmer has no lobby here. He has no organization that may directly or indirectly affect the attitude of Senators. He is numerically great, but organically disorganized. Therefore we can safely stand here and talk about the constitutional provisions which affect him in the field.

Mr. President, it is very discouraging to me. I would to God that the farmers of the country could do one of two things—organize themselves so as to be felt as a unit at the ballot box, or strike for a twelvemonth. What would happen to this country if, for the sake of his self-respect and a demonstration of his manhood and of his right to a place in organized society, the farmer should say, "If I am not to be respected, if I am not to be considered in the scheme of things, I shall withdraw from the markets. I shall not sell any food or any raw material except enough to support myself and my family." How far are our metropolitan centers from starvation? What would be the result? Yet we treat him like the nations of the earth treat disorganized China, more numerous in population than any other nation of the earth, but, with no coherence, no organization, an open door to all nations.

Cannot Senators, if they have any desire to aid, offer constructive criticism of the bill? I am disappointed in the attitude of the Senate toward the bill. If there be anything in it that will help the farmer, that can be made legal and constitutional, let us have it. Any set of ignoramuses can come here and tear down the finest building in Washington which it has taken great genius to build. Any of us can be destructive, but it takes a man of brain and character to be constructive.

Mr. President, I have made my last appeal to the Senate to treat fairly this effort on the part of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I have made my last plea to preserve constructive and helpful elements of the bill. Where it is unconstitutional, let Senators suggest what can be done to make it constitutional and still preserve its efficacy so far as the farmer is concerned. But do not let us burn down our house because we think there is a rat in it.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. NORBECK. There are two objections made to the bill. The first is that it is not constitutional. The second is that it is so drawn that it is constitutional. What are we to do?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; it is as I said yesterday:

> I can and I can't; I will and I won't.
> I am damned if I do, and damned if I don't.

It does not seem to make any difference what we do.

Mr. NORBECK. I have never seen lawyers in the Senate object to anything because it was constitutional, but now they object to a bill that is so drawn as to be constitutional, and their objection seems to be based solely on that ground.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I sincerely hope the Members of this body will join with us in this effort. It is a period of transition. I acknowledge, as everyone must, that the conditions are rapidly changing in the relations of the Government to the people. All the discoveries of science have changed conditions, but the fundamental principles are still here. I beg this body, instead of offering destructive and carping criticism, to get together constructively and pass a bill that will bring some hope to the hopeless millions toiling in the fields of America.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I think there is a genuine desire on the part of every Senator to do whatever can be done for the farmer. I do not think there is any use of chasing rainbows. I do not believe there is any use of enacting legislation which is not economically sound and which will not work. I have yet to find a single solitary illustration anywhere in history which admits that price fixing will work. It may give a temporary relief for a few minutes, but in the end it always results in disaster and distress. That has been the history of price fixing all along the line.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. Does the Senator refer only to Government price fixing or does he refer to the price fixing by the trusts?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am referring to Government price fixing.

Mr. NORBECK. The trusts seemed to be able to fix prices and to make them stick.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not agree with the Senator on that point. I think prices follow the law of supply and demand. There may be some little marginal profit in it somewhere that the Senator from South Dakota does not like, but, in the end, I have found that every effort on the part of the grain exchange, or of any individual, to fix prices has always resulted in disaster and ultimately in collapse. That is the history of the board of trade at Chicago. It is the history of every other effort that has ever been made along artificial price-fixing lines.

Mr. President, I desire to consider for a few minutes the question of whether the Senate is doing a thing that should not be done in the face of the record of the legislation to date. For instance, there has just been rendered a decision in the circuit court of appeals in the city of Boston in the case of Franklin Process Co. against Hoosac Mills Corporation. I have here the brief filed by the complainant and also the brief filed in behalf of the Government. On page 48 of the brief of the receivers, I find this contention:

> The Constitution contains no clauses or provisions delegating to the United States the power to regulate, fix, or control prices or to control manufacturing, agriculture, and trade except interstate or foreign commerce. It is even more evident that it gives no power to improve the economic conditions of any class of citizens or to redistribute the wealth of the country, nor can such power be held to be implied for implied powers must clearly and directly appropriate to the carrying out of the granted powers, and such powers have never been held to exist if the connection is remote or uncertain. * * *
> (United States v. DeWitt, 9 Wall. 41; Loan Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655.)
> It is beyond the power of the Federal Government to reclaim arid lands although there may be arid lands in need of reclamation and the Federal Government is the only organization large enough to accomplish it. Such a power is one of those reserved to the States.
> Citing Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S. 49–91).

In other words, there is the main contention with reference to price fixing in a case which has just been decided in the circuit court of appeals in the city of Boston.

A press dispatch of today reads as follows:

> BOSTON, July 16.—The cotton textile and other processing taxes, under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, met the fate of the N. R. A. codes today.
>
> In the Federal circuit court of appeals here the processing taxes were declared unconstitutional on two grounds.
>
> One was that Congress had no authority to regulate the production of cotton, which is primarily under control of the States.
>
> The other ground was that the law itself is an improper delegation of authority.
>
> Judges Scott Wilson and George F. Morris concurred in the decision.
>
> Judge George H. Bingham dissented.
> At Washington, Government attorneys said a prompt appeal to the United States Supreme Court will be taken.

Why do we proceed to do a thing which we do not know to be within the letter of the law, and keep on amending and attempting to amend the existing law, when as a matter of fact the fundamental principle involved in this case is exactly the same as that in the Agricultural Adjustment Act as it was originally passed? And if the original law is unconstitutional by reason of the two grounds set forth, these amendments likewise would be clearly unconstitutional.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. This decision, as I understand, affects only the district in New England and, of course, will not be final until the Supreme Court shall have passed upon the matter.

Mr. DICKINSON. It affects all the processing taxes to be collected in that district, and will be a precedent for every other circuit court of appeals in the United States. Of course, it will not become national law until it shall have been passed on by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course, the other circuit courts of appeal do not necessarily follow the precedent this court has set, nor does the Supreme Court. In the recent decision on the amendment to the Farm Bankruptcy Act passed at the last session, two district courts held it to be unconstitutional, and the Supreme Court held the other way.

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, yes. I am perfectly familiar with the right of the courts in the different areas to reach different conclusions.

Excerpts from the decision handed down today in Boston by the United States circuit court of appeals are as follows:

> The Government contends that Congress does not seek by the act to interfere with the State's control over agriculture, inasmuch as the reduction of acreage and of production of either of the basic agricultural products depends on voluntary agreements by the producers, and the processing and floor taxes depend on the execution of such agreements to reduce production.
> Citing Massachusetts v. Mellon (262 U. S. 447).
> But it is clear, we think, under the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Schechter Poultry Corporation case, decided May 27, 1935, that Congress at the outset has attempted to invade a field over which it has no control, since its obvious purpose, viz: to control or regulate the production of agricultural products in the several States by the methods adopted in this act, is beyond the power of Congress (Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S. 406), Flint v. Stone Tracy Co. (220 U. S. 107)).
>
> The processing and floor taxes are not dependent on the execution of agreements to reduce acreage or production alone, but on the determination by the Secretary without any foundation other than his own opinion that the existing economic emergency demands that to accomplish the declared purpose of the act, rental or benefit payments shall be made. The imposing of the taxes automatically follows. The issue is not, as the Government contends, whether Congress can appropriate funds raised by general taxation for any purpose deemed by Congress in furtherance of the "general welfare", but whether Congress has any power to control or regulate matters left to the States and lay a special tax for that purpose.
> The issue of whether, under the act, there has been an unauthorized delegation by Congress of its legislative powers is decisive of the case before this court. Except as a premise for the conclusions which follow, it is unnecessary to restate what has been so often reiterated by the courts, viz: that the Federal Government is a government of enumerated powers, and Congress cannot delegate legislative powers to the executive department. The line between grants of legislative powers and the authority to perform a purely administrative function, as drawn in the decisions, may at first blush appear wavy instead of straight, notwithstanding the rule has been often definitely stated.
> The decree of the District Court is reversed, and the case is remanded to that court with directions to enter a decree for the appellants.

As a matter of fact, that simply gives a synopsis of the decision rendered in this case. The two grounds set forth, it seems to me, are in no way clarified by the amendments now proposed here. If the original act is unconstitutional upon the grounds stated, the original act as amended by these amendments must fail.

There have been numerous suggestions along this line. I think it was only yesterday, or the day before, that the circuit court of appeals in Cincinnati held the act authorizing condemnation of land for subsistence homesteads to be unconstitutional, on the theory that the Government under the Constitution has no right to condemn lands for that purpose, or to use or expend public money therefor.

I remember that in the T. V. A. case a similar question arose; also, in the farm-tenant case, the Bankhead bill, with reference to the right of the Government to issue bonds guaranteed by the Government, endorsed by every taxpayer in the country, to buy land for speculative purposes, to be sold out in allotments to individuals. In other words, we are stretching and trying to write into the Constitution all along the line authority which is not there.

I read now from pages 36 and 37 of the reply brief of the United States, giving some of the views of the Government with reference to what may be done:

As a final reply to the contention of the receivers that the use of the proceeds of the processing taxes for rental and benefit payments is class legislation since they inure to the individual advantage of producers of basic agricultural commodities, the language of the court in Coster v. Tidewater Co. (18 N. J. E.), pages 518, 523, 524, is adopted:

"The legislative power is not competent to take the property of A and transfer it to B, simply for the benefit or convenience of B, because such an act has no public aspect; it concerns and affects, exclusively, the two individuals. In such case, it would be within the authority of the judiciary to pronounce such transfer unconstitutional and void. But if the sequestration of the property of A will, to a material extent, be serviceable to the public at large, whether such sequestration shall take place, must be committed, as a pure matter of discretion, to the legislature, provided such discretion be exercised in good faith, and does not rest, incontrovertibly, upon a false foundation."

In other words, it is my belief that in order to take property from A and transfer it to the general public, there must be vested in the property something of a public-interest nature. It must be of the type of transportation; it must be some type of service which is recognized as being imbued with a public interest. I do not believe it can be the mere matter of producing crops, or the mere matter of the production of any commodity, or the mere matter of the price which may be received for a commodity in one locality as against another price. Therefore, I contend that the Government, in its effort to sustain this law, is again attempting to write into the general rule of the law a condition which really is not there.

I presume there are a great many Members of the Congress who, if the roll were called today, would vote to charge the production of foodstuffs in the country with a public interest. I do not think we can do it under the Constitution. I do not believe it would be a good thing if we could do it under the Constitution, because, on the whole, I think we are trying to impose too much responsibility upon the Government. In other words, if a certain condition exists in one locality, I can see how the power of the State, the inherent power of the people themselves in that locality, will rise to a point where they will overcome that condition in their own right.

I can see how the problems of California ought not to be made the problems of Maine. I can see how the problems of Minnesota ought not to be made the problems of Florida. On the other hand, if we bring together all the problems of all those States which have to do, not only with agriculture but with all other phases of society, all the social-economic problems that can be gathered together and lay them on the doorstep of the Federal Government, we shall find that the Government is no longer able to function, and sooner or later it will fall of its own weight. That is the danger I see in many of the steps we are now taking.

Only a few days ago I secured a copy of the new book, The Liberal Tradition, by Lewis W. Douglas. There can be no partisanship so far as Mr. Douglas is concerned. He was formerly Budget Director for the present administration.

From page 52 I begin the quotation:

Expressly this language means a system of planned prices. Its implications, however, are much greater, for under it the Federal Reserve Board is practically directed to control the activities of every industry and of every productive enterprise in the United States. It must be viewed not alone and as an isolated proposal but in connection with the many other attempts to circumscribe our activities by governmental dicta and to plan our economy.

Then he gives the various efforts.

Some of the many other attempts to plan our economy may be listed as follows:

(1) The Agricultural Adjustment Administration Act and its clarifying amendments, which vest in the Executive complete power to plan agriculture and all processing of agricultural products.

(2) The National Recovery Administration, which vests in the Executive complete control of all industry and commerce.

(3) The Wagner labor bill, which centralizes control of all employer-employee relations.

(4) The Guffy coal bill, which in effect socializes coal mines.

(5) The Securities Act, which, even as amended, tends to make the United States Government the exclusive capitalist.

(6) The Social Security Act, immaturely considered, which tends to socialize all savings.

We could go much further than that. He has not itemized them all. There could be included the Bankhead Land Socialization Act, to which I have heretofore referred, and also the Tennessee Valley Authority Administration.

The question in my mind is whether or not we are laying on the doorstep of the Federal Government more responsibility than it should assume; and in the end, instead of bringing relief to the people, instead of affording a solution of any of the problems, will it not bring about a collapse that will be worse than the existing condition?

I read from page 54 of the same book:

The case is strong against the planners. Experience proves that no group, however divine may be its spark of intelligence, is able successfully to plan the various activities of men engaged in hundreds of thousands of different fields and employed in the production of hundreds of thousands of articles which go to make up our complicated modern social and economic organism.

From page 101, I read the following:

The fallacies of a planned economy, too, have been analyzed. Its complete incompatability with both freedom and equality and with the survival, existence, and growth of a vital middle class; the universal poverty which it causes; the social evils which it intensifies; the despotism which it makes inevitable. And it has been shown, also, that the present pseudo-planned economy leads relentlessly into the complete autocracy and tyranny of the collective state.

I now wish to refer to the issue of the Saturday Evening Post of today. It contains an article from which I think we can learn something. It refers to the lessons of history of years ago.

I know that there are a great many people who say we do not need to pay any attention to the signposts of history, that we can ignore them in economics, that we can ignore them in all walks of life; but usually we will find as we proceed that, unless we pay attention to the signposts of history, we fall into the very pitfalls into which the people of various other countries have heretofore fallen.

On page 36 of the Saturday Evening Post which appeared today, there appears an article by Raymond G. Carroll from which I read:

Why did the splendid, yes, magnificient, civilization of the Roman Empire sink into the blackness, the chaos, and the misery of the Middle Ages? Why did Rome prove unequal to her problems? What were the causes of her decline? In the answers to these questions are there any lessons for modern minds? Some do find them there.

The ancients had their antiquity, which we may assume to have been regarded by them with a share of the same disdain which we affect toward all the prior generations which we see massed behind us. It is not the habit of those who wear the garments of trail blazers to cast a scrutinizing eye back over remote persons and events. Yet the ancients were pretty much the same as we are.

The Roman Emperor Diocletian, in 301 A. D., promulgated an edict fixing a maximum price for provisions and other articles of commerce, and a maximum wage for every service, whether by a common laborer, an experienced lawyer, or physician. He was warned against price fixing and wage making by the abortive attempts in the same direction by the Assyrians, the Persians, and the Egyptians centuries before, but all experience was brushed aside.

There was but one penalty for a violation of the edict of Diocletian, engraved on stone and set up in every market place throughout the Roman Empire, and that was death, both for the one who asked for an excess of the official price and for the one who paid it. Deportation was an alternative penalty in extreme extenuating cases. Trade was thus forbidden to fluctuate, exactly as now, and no allowances were made for differences of conditions of production or transportation.

What happened in Rome? The Diocletian edict, plus the commercial speculation of insiders and several bad harvests, ruined the commerce of the Empire. The depreciation of the currency that followed brought about a return to a system of barter, and Romans no longer bought and sold on credit or with the aid of money. Under Diocletian, the Senate became a political nonentity, the last traces of republican institutions disappeared and were replaced by an absolute monarchy approaching to despotism.

Mr. President, that gives some idea of what the experience has been. When we analyze the civilization of Rome we find that they had many of the things we now have; and to say that we are so much superior to them that we can avoid all the pitfalls into which they fell would be sheer egotism on our part.

Much of the article quoted has been heretofore referred to in various articles. I find something quoted here from Governor Hadley, of Missouri, which I think is well worth while. He said:

Destroying the right of private ownership of property, denying to a man of talent and ability the right to advancement or extra reward for his services, brought upon the Roman world a social, industrial, and economic break-down that was the natural result of these efforts to run counter to the inflexible rules of human nature and the inexorable laws of supply and demand. Then, as always in the history of the world, have such efforts not only failed but produced a melancholy train of misery and misfortune. Hope and ambition were banished from the hearts and minds of men.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. Does the Senator believe that price fixing brought on the decline in the civilized world, which extended all over Europe and was not confined merely to the Roman Empire? The Senator must admit that the period referred to was one when everything was breaking down.

Mr. DICKINSON. Are we not now in a period when everything is breaking down?

Mr. NORBECK. But does the Senator attribute the break-down in the Dark Ages to price fixing?

Mr. DICKINSON. That was one of the causes.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator says one of the causes.

Let him be fair. That is only one of the many things that have happened to the farmers and caused their present lamentable condition.

Mr. DICKINSON. If the Senator from South Dakota thinks he is any better friend of the farmer than I am, very well.

Mr. NORBECK. I have heard the Senator from Iowa complaining here about the lack of profits for industry. I have heard him say here that industry is getting into the red on account of conditions. Are not all the Iowa farmers in the red? I have heard the Senator say nothing about that.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have mentioned that a good many times. The Senator listens when he wants to listen, and does not the rest of the time.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator from Iowa stood for the Hoover farm relief bill. That brought a dark age in the United States among the farmers.

Mr. DICKINSON. The same thing exactly is being done under the A. A. A. The Government is lending on cotton at 12 cents, and it loaned on wheat at $1.25.

Mr. NORBECK. The difference is, I voted——

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me finish stating my position.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I would like to have order on the other side of the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. The collapse of civilization has never come about from one thing.

Mr. NORBECK. Exactly.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am not contending that price fixing is the only thing that helped bring about the collapse of the Roman Empire. Nor am I contending that price fixing is the one thing we ought now to avoid. I contend that there are many things we ought to avoid.

Now I shall make further reference to where we are drifting. I hold in my hand a publication dated July 15, 1935, entitled "Foreign Crops and Markets", issued weekly by the Foreign Agricultural Service, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

I find there are numerous pages of this text—I do not know that there is any authority for its publication—which is given over to the Soviet agricultural program in Russia. I find, before I turn to that particular phase, that United States competitive agricultural imports are now declining. I am glad to hear that. Here, however, is one statement I wish to read. On the bottom of that page I find this statement:

The volume of imports of meat and meat products was nearly double the amount taken last year, 74,000,000 pounds this year as compared with 41,000,000 pounds for 1933–34. Most of this gain is accounted for by the increase in imports of canned beef, which have risen from 37,000,000 pounds during the 1933–34 period to 64,000,000 for the current season.

* * * * * * *

As a result of the drought and the consequent forced slaughter of thousands of head of livestock last year, there exists a large surplus of hides and skins.

As a former Member of the House, I remember that a few years ago there was, in the House of Representatives, a strenuous fight, which lasted some 4 or 6 weeks, on the question of putting a tariff on hides. We finally succeeded in putting a tariff on hides. I think we ought to try to see that the importation of hides are not again increased. We want to hold that market here in our own country.

I continue to quote:

Butter is the only item in dairy products to show much change from last year. The volume of imports of this commodity in the current July-May period was roughtly three times as large as the volume for the corresponding months of 1933–34.

Turning to page 62, I find that the importations of butter for 1934–35 were 20,956,000 pounds, as against 689,000 pounds in 1933–34. In other words, the imports were more than 26 times greater.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator contends that we should maintain our own market for the production of hides. How does the Senator think we ought to do that?

Mr. DICKINSON. I think we could do it if we had a higher tariff on hides.

Mr. NORBECK. Has it ever occurred to the Senator that hides are not a product in themselves? Hides are a by-product. Provision first has to be made as to what to do with the carcass.

Mr. DICKINSON. As a matter of fact, we are importing a great deal of beef all the time.

Mr. NORBECK. But what percentage? The Senator quoted certain figures, but does that represent 1 percent or half of 1 percent?

Mr. DICKINSON. I could not give the Senator the percentage, but I think it is 6 percent.

Mr. NORBECK. Following one of the worst shortages of crops we have ever had.

Mr. DICKINSON. The point I desire to make to the Senate, however, is that we cannot fix the price of an animal on one product alone. It is not only the T-bone steak that is involved; it is the chuck; it is the hide; it is the hoof and the hair.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator said that there was a great struggle in the other House on the question of a tariff on hides. Hides are not a product. Hides are just a part of the animal.

Mr. DICKINSON. I said we had a fight on putting a tariff on hides, and we had a hard time getting a tariff put on hides, and I think the Senator from South Dakota voted for it.

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; but I did not vote for the Hoover farm-relief program, and the Senator from Iowa did.

Mr. DICKINSON. The Senator from South Dakota, however, is supporting a plan which is along the same lines as one which has been tried before.

Mr. NORBECK. The Hoover farm-relief plan brought us nothing, and at the time it was before us a Senator from New England said it was not going to bring us anything. He said: "Senator NORBECK, I am going to vote for it, although there is nothing in it except to give Uncle Sam a chance to lose some money, and he can afford to do it." He was right. The farmer got nothing out of the Hoover farm bill.

Mr. DICKINSON. Beginning at page 53, and running to page 57, I find the entire article in this Foreign Crops and Markets given up to an amplification of the scheme of agricultural control in Russia. Quoting from page 53:

The Soviet Government is confronted with the problem of organizing the harvesting campaign and gathering the crop in the shortest possible time and with a minimum loss. In former years, good crops in the field have been materially reduced through the inefficiency of harvesting operations and a noncooperative attitude among the members of certain collective farms.

Further down it is said:

A field will be considered fully harvested and cleared of grain only with the approval of the chairman of the collective farm or the manager of the state farm.

COTTON

It is expected that this year's cotton production will reach 2,342,000 bales (of 478 pounds) compared with 1,736,452 bales in 1934. For this reason the Soviet Government has been paying particular attention to the cotton crop.

We are paying a bonus in this country to keep our people from raising crops. We are imposing upon them a restriction, saying they must not raise cotton. I quote further:

The Commissariat of Agriculture of the Soviet Union must outline the chief measures concerning the cotton season. Special attention must be paid to the question of planning the entire work in the fields, labor-hours, wages, full utilization of equipment, and particularly measures which would induce the farmers to exert themselves to the best of their ability.

* * * * * * *

The immediate concern of the Soviet Government is not only to coordinate all types of harvesting work, but it is also concerned now with the delivery of grain to the state, i. e., with the fulfillment of the 1935 agricultural-procurement program.

Mr. President, instead of having ever-normal granaries over there, they have what is known as the Government production program. After the farmers have raised so much grain and turned it into the hands of the Government, they may have for their own utilization whatever amount they have left. In other words, if there is a crop failure, the farmer must turn over to the Government his entire quota before he may have any left for himself.

Continuing to quote from page 54 of this report:

The struggle for grain, for the fulfillment and overfulfillment of the grain-collection plan, remains with us a component, inseparable part of our entire work aimed toward the completion of the foundation of the Socialist economy. The grain-collection plan is the most important component part of the general national economy, which to a considerable degree determines our resources for the further development of Socialistic reconstruction.

Judging by recent official statements this pronouncement still holds true in 1935. It is for this reason that the Government is not sparing any effort this season to insure the fulfillment of the plan according to schedules already announced.

* * * * * * *

The 1935 plan is in all essentials similar to the one introduced in 1933. Its outstanding feature is the substitution of a fixed grain tax levied upon each cultivated hectare of the land for the former contract system of grain collection. The collective farmer is paid for the grain delivered in this manner at a price fixed by the state. The total of these tax obligations is determined by the area already sown.

Then the report proceeds to show how they sow and how they reap. Quoting further:

Yet another measure which aims toward a speedier delivery of grain is the provision of the resolution which eliminates any trade in grain, both by the collectivized and individual farmers, or any buying of grain by the State cooperative organizations, beginning July 1, 1935.

In other words, they are simply put out of business so far as grain production is concerned.

I continue to quote:

The trade in agricultural products may be resumed only after the grain collection plan has been completed, the farmers' obligations to the machine tractor stations discharged, and seed has been set aside for fall and spring planting.

In other words, the farmers must rent the tractor, and they must pay the rent before they may have any seed, and a certain amount is set aside for sowing in the fall of the year. This statement gives some impression of how a collectivized or socialized agriculture proceeds.

I continue to read from page 56:

The distribution of income in the collective farms in accordance with the principle of "whoever works more and better receives more", may also play an important part in bringing about a successful harvesting season. The quality of production as a most important criterion in determining the remuneration of the collective farmers is stressed in all decrees dealing with the organization of labor in the collective farms. If, for instance, a member of a collective farm plows 1 hectare (2.47 acres) in 1 working day, which is the nominal, he is credited with 1 labor-day; should he only plow one-half of a hectare in 1 working day he is credited with one-half of a labor-day; but if he plows 1½ hectares in 1 working day, he is credited with 1½ labor-days.

Such, in the main, are the measures intended to insure a successful harvesting season and a fulfillment of the procurement plan. The chief reliance of the Government seems to be not upon mere issuance of orders, drawing up of resolutions, and other forms of management on paper, but, on the contrary, upon a tendency away from administrative fiat and toward an appeal for the cooperation of the collectivized peasantry, expressed in terms of mutual economic advantage.

The strange thing is that just at the time when we are considering here an amendment to the A. A. A. Act, which is the ever normal granary plan for our country, the Department of Agriculture, through its foreign agricultural service, finds it necessary to devote about three-quarters of its weekly publication to an emphasis of what is really happening under the planning system in Soviet Russia so far as agriculture is concerned.

I do not say there is any connection between the two, except the conclusions we may draw that one plan is like the other. If we are working to that end this plan will not help the farmers of any State in the Union, but in the end will be their undoing. The farmers have been the greatest individualists and I believe are the greatest individualists we have today. They want to proceed in their own way. They do not want to have someone tell them how and when to plant and how much they may sell or how much they shall curtail their crops.

In conclusion, I want to quote from Walter Lippmann in today's New York Herald Tribune, in which he speaks about planning:

My friend, Mr. Mark Sullivan, may see in all this the deep planning of a highly intellectualized "brains trust." But to my eye it looks much more like the absence of any plan and the lack of intellectual effort, the work of tired brains, relying on their wishes and their prejudices and throwing out casual suggestions which they are too hot and bothered to think about.

For these reasons it is my hope the amendment will be rejected. In the end, I think it would be a splendid thing if the bill should be sent back to the committee whence it came for reconsideration. I do not believe, under the circumstances, that the Supreme Court can hold the A. A. A. Act, as amended, to be constitutional, and for that reason I shall vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment on page 18, line 21.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Chavez	Holt	O'Mahoney
Ashurst	Clark	Johnson	Pope
Austin	Connally	Keyes	Radcliffe
Bachman	Copeland	King	Reynolds
Bailey	Costigan	La Follette	Robinson
Bankhead	Davis	Lewis	Russell
Barbour	Dickinson	Lonergan	Schall
Barkley	Dieterich	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Bilbo	Donahey	McGill	Sheppard
Black	Duffy	McKellar	Shipstead
Bone	Fletcher	McNary	Smith
Borah	Frazier	Maloney	Townsend
Brown	George	Metcalf	Trammell
Bulkley	Gerry	Minton	Truman
Bulow	Gibson	Moore	Vandenberg
Burke	Gore	Murphy	Van Nuys
Byrd	Guffey	Murray	Wagner
Byrnes	Hale	Neely	Wheeler
Capper	Hatch	Norbeck	White
Caraway	Hayden	Norris

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the committee amendment on page 18, after line 20, to insert paragraph (G).

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for only a moment.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] yesterday asked a question to which at the time I was unable to respond. He asked whether or not paragraph (G), at the bottom of page 18, had anything to do with the control of the prices of milk.

In answer to that question I desire to say that that paragraph has nothing to do with the control of milk prices; and that opinion is confirmed, as I understand, by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

I am very sorry that the vote cannot be taken at the same time on paragraphs (F) and (G), as they are related. I desire to say to the Senate that in the event the committee amendment known as "paragraph (G)" shall not be agreed to, and later on the Senate shall decline to eliminate paragraph (F), I shall move to reconsider the vote on paragraph (G), because either both paragraphs should be in or both should be eliminated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment designated as paragraph (G), at the bottom of page 18.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, as I understand, the parliamentary situation is that a vote in the negative is a vote against confirming the action of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is a committee amendment which the Senate must vote into the bill if it is to become part of the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG, Mr. BYRD, and Mr. NORBECK called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon has already risen for that purpose.

Mr. McNARY. It is probably of the same nature. The question, as I understand, is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on adopting the committee amendment. Those who desire the committee amendment to be adopted will vote "yea". Those opposed to it will vote "nay." The clerk will continue the calling of the roll.

The Chief Clerk resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and therefore withhold my vote. If the Senator from Mississippi were present he would vote "yea", and if I were at liberty to vote I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], who would vote "nay" if present, and will allow my vote in the negative to stand.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] and the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], who have a general pair. If the Senator from Oregon were present, he would vote "nay." I am not advised how the Senator from California would vote.

Mr. FRAZIER. My Colleague [Mr. NYE] is absent. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea"; and I understand the Senator from Virginia if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. BULKLEY (after having voted in the negative). I announce my general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is necessarily absent. I understand that a special pair has been arranged for him on this question, so I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I wish further to announce a special pair between the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. I am not advised how the Senator from Oklahoma would vote on this question. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] would vote "nay."

I wish also to announce a special pair between the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. If present and voting, the Senator from Utah would vote "yea" and the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—40

Austin	Costigan	McGill	Reynolds
Bankhead	Duffy	McKeller	Robinson
Barkley	Frazier	Minton	Russell
Bilbo	Gibson	Murphy	Sheppard
Black	Guffey	Murray	Shipstead

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 156. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the city of Perth Amboy, N. J.;

S. 2904. An act to prohibit the interstate transportation of prison-made products in certain cases;

S. 3038. An act to authorize the transfer of certain lands in Rapides Parish, La., to the State of Louisiana for the purpose of a State highway across a portion of the Federal property occupied by the Veterans' Administration facility, Alexandria, La.;

H. R. 298. An act for the relief of Jack Page; and

H. R. 617. An act for the relief of Lake B. Morrison.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to page 16, the amendment which yesterday I asked to have go over. We may dispose of it now. I withdraw any opposition to the amendment involving soybeans, so that may be disposed of.

Mr. SMITH. May we have a vote on it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was so much confusion in the Chamber that the Chair was not able to hear what the Senator said.

Mr. SMITH. On page 16 the amendment to add the word "soybean" was passed over yesterday by request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 16, line 11, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BYRD. I intend to move to strike out subsection (F) at the proper time. Will it be in order at that time for me to move to reconsider the vote by which subdivision (G) was adopted? Those are related provisions. If the chairman of the committee could give me assurance that he would not object to a reconsideration of the vote in the event the Senate should strike out subdivision (F)——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is within his parliamentary right in making a motion to reconsider the vote within 2 days. If the bill is passed, after 2 days the Senator would not have the right to make such a motion.

Mr. BYRD. I will make the motion to reconsider at the proper time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator will permit the Chair, the Chair does not believe the Senator is in a position to make a motion to reconsider, having voted on the losing side.

Mr. BYRD. I had an agreement with the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that that issue can be raised when subdivision (F) is acted upon.

Mr. BYRD. I simply wanted to serve notice on the Senate that they were related provisions.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Chair has suggested that the Senator from Virginia is not in a position to make a motion to reconsider. If subdivision (F) shall be voted out, there will be no difficulty about a reconsideration of the vote on subdivision (G); but the question as to subdivision (F) must first be disposed of, and there is no occasion now for raising the issue of reconsideration.

With the approval of the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, in charge of the pending bill, I should like to submit a request for unanimous consent to limit debate during the further consideration of the bill.

I ask that debate be limited so that after the conclusion of the business of the Senate today no Senator may speak more than once nor longer than 30 minutes on the bill, nor more than once nor longer than 15 minutes on any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I regret that I am not in a position to consent to the proposal made by the Senator from Arkansas. There are several important amendments yet to be discussed, and they may be fully discussed. There are some Members of the Senate absent who might desire to discuss the questions, and at this time I could not consent to the proposed limitation. However, I am willing that it should be considered tomorrow sometime during the discussion of the unfinished business.

Mr. ROBINSON. I may say that I had intended offering the request yesterday. I discussed the subject with the Senator from Oregon, and understood that he was not in a position yesterday to consent to such an arrangement, but felt that he might be today. If he is not in a position to do so, if the debate is to be continued without limit, which would mean, of course, that lengthy speeches might be made on irrelevant subjects, I shall feel that it will be necessary for the Senate to continue in session longer than heretofore. We have been proceeding in a leisurely way, and we may have to change that procedure. At the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon, I spoke to a large number of Senators, and found them all in accord with the proposal I have submitted. I do not know of anyone, save the Senator from Oregon, who objects to a limitation on the debate; but, of course, the request is subject to objection, and I can make no further suggestion at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, Mr. President, we all yield, and we try to yield gracefully in the face of facts. I had hoped we might come to an agreement, and I still hope so. But this is not the last day of the world. I am willing to meet this suggestion tomorrow, and will meet it fairly, as I always do meet suggestions. I am not in a position now to agree to the proposal, and I shall object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard, and the clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 19, line 8, after the word "more", to insert "of the following"; and after line 10, to insert the following:

(B) Providing that (except for milk and cream to be sold for consumption in fluid form) such commodity or product thereof, or any grade, size, or quality thereof shall be sold by the handlers thereof only at prices filed by such handlers in the manner provided in such order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the chairman of the committee just what the implications are that will arise from this amendment? Does it mean that milk and all its products shall be subject to all the terms of the law?

Mr. SMITH. No; it is simply a provision for the filing of the price subject to change at any time. It is simply that the price must be filed so that the public will be advised as to the prices paid.

Mr. KING. If it is desired later that there should be some change in the assumption of control over milk, there would be no objection to returning to this for further consideration?

Mr. SMITH. Milk is excepted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 19, in line 16, before the word "Providing", to strike out "(B)" and insert "(C)"; in the same line, after the word "the", to insert the words "appointment or"; in line 18, before the word "selection", to insert "appointment or"; in line 19, after the word "which", to strike out "among other things,"; and, in line 20, after the word "include", to insert "only"; so as to read:

TERMS COMMON TO ALL ORDERS

(7) In the case of the agricultural commodities and the products thereof specified in subsection (2) orders shall contain one or more of the following terms and conditions:

(A) Prohibiting unfair methods of competition and unfair trade practices in the handling thereof.

(B) Providing that (except for milk and cream to be sold for consumption in fluid form) such commodity or product thereof, or any grade, size, or quality thereof shall be sold by the handlers thereof only at prices filed by such handlers in the manner provided in such order.

(C) Providing for the appointment or selection by the Secretary of Agriculture, or a method for the appointment or selection, of an agency or agencies and defining their powers and duties, which shall include only the powers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina will recall that on yesterday I suggested the insertion of some language on line 18, page 19, and I assume that because that is not a committee amendment the Senator would prefer to have it go over.

Mr. SMITH. In which line?

Mr. COPELAND. Line 18, after the word "agencies", it was agreed that there should be inserted in parentheses the words "which in the case of milk shall be a market administrator." That was agreed to yesterday, but I assume the Senator would prefer to have it go over?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. I may say to the chairman of the committee that I assured the Senator from New York yesterday that, in my opinion, the chairman of the committee would have no objection to the acceptance of the amendment proposed by the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. However, as we are going through committee amendments, and this would be an amendment to the House text, I prefer that it wait.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. I think that is only right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 20, line 23, after the word "order", to insert "which is produced or marketed within the production or marketing area defined in such order"; so as to read:

ORDERS WITH MARKETING AGREEMENT

(8) Except as provided in subsection (9) of this section, no order issued pursuant to this section shall become effective until the handlers (excluding cooperative associations of producers who are not engaged in processing, distributing, or shipping the commodity or product thereof covered by such order) of not less than 50 percent of the volume of the commodity or product thereof covered by such order which is produced or marketed within the production or marketing area defined in such order have signed a marketing agreement, entered into pursuant to section 8b of this title, which regulates the handling of such commodity or product in the same manner as such order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 21, line 4, before the word "Any" strike out "(A)", and in line 11, after the word "order" to insert "which is produced or marketed within the production or marketing area defined in such order"; so as to read:

ORDERS WITH OR WITHOUT MARKETING AGREEMENT

(9) Any order issued pursuant to this section shall become effective in the event that, notwithstanding the refusal or failure of handlers (excluding cooperative associations of producers who are not engaged in processing, distributing, or shipping the commodity or product thereof covered by such order) of more than 50 percent of the volume of the commodity or product thereof covered by such order which is produced or marketed within the production or marketing area defined in such order to sign a marketing agreement relating to such commodity or product thereof, on which a hearing has been held, the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the President, determines.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, recurring to the amendment which has just been agreed to, I ask the Senator in charge of the bill what limitations are to be found in the bill with respect to the areas, the milk areas, or, for that matter, areas affecting any other commodities? Who is to determine what the area shall be? Shall it be a State, or a subdivision of a State, or several States?

Mr. SMITH. The Senator will find that on page 23 of the bill. It is to accommodate itself to those areas where similar conditions prevail, and is to accommodate itself largely to what is already the marketing area.

Mr. KING. However, I presume it is in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, or whoever he may designate to carry out the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SMITH. No; I think it will be largely determined upon the consent of those affected in the area. It will be necessary to get the consent of the producers within each area before the prices can be established.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 21, lines 4 and 11.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 21, line 17, before the word "that" to strike out "(1)" and insert "(A)", and in line 23, after the word "therein" to insert "which is produced or marketed within the production or marketing area specified therein"; so as to read:

(A) That the refusal or failure to sign a marketing agreement (upon which a hearing has been held) by the handlers (excluding cooperative associations of producers who are not engaged in processing, distributing, or shipping the commodity or product thereof covered by such order) of more than 50 per centum of the volume of the commodity or product thereof specified therein which is produced or marketed within the production or marketing area specified therein tends to prevent the effectuation of the declared policy of this title with respect to such commodity or product, and.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 22, line 3, before the word "That", to strike out "(2)" and insert "(B)", and in line 6, after the word "or", to strike out "favored by at least two-thirds of the producers who, during a representative period determined by the Secretary, have been engaged in the production for market of the commodity specified in such marketing agreement or order, or by producers who, during such representative period, have produced for market at least two-thirds of the volume of such commodity produced for market during such period" and to insert "favored:

"(i) By at least two-thirds of the producers who, during a representative period determined by the Secretary, have been engaged, within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, in the production for market of the commodity specified therein, or who, during such representative period, have been engaged in the production of such commodity for sale or consumption in the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement, or order, or

"(ii) By producers who, during such representative period, have produced for market at least two-thirds of the volume of such commodity produced for market within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, or who, during such representative period, have produced at least two-thirds of the volume of such commodity sold or consumed within the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement or order", so as to read:

(B) That the issuance of such order is the only practical means of advancing the interests of the producers of such commodity pursuant to the declared policy, and is approved or favored;

(i) By at least two-thirds of the producers who, during a representative period determined by the Secretary, have been engaged, within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, in the production for market of the commodity specified therein, or who, during such representative period, have been engaged in the production of such commodity for sale or consumption in the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement, or order, or

(ii) By producers who, during such representative period, have produced for market at least two-thirds of the volume of such commodity produced for market within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, or who, during such representative period, have produced at least two-thirds of the volume of such commodity sold or consumed within the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement or order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, according to our agreement yesterday I think the chairman would be willing to change "two-thirds", in line 14, to "three-fourths"; and also, in lines 24 and 25, to strike out "two-thirds" and insert in lieu thereof "three-fourths." That was the arrangement we had on yesterday.

Mr. SMITH. The chairman of the committee was absent at that time. I do not know whether that difference is serious enough to interfere with carrying out the provisions of the bill. I offer no objection to changing "two-thirds" to "three-fourths."

Mr. COPELAND. That should be done in each instance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to the committee amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 22, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "two-thirds" and to insert in lieu thereof "three-fourths." On the same page, lines 24 and 25, it is also proposed to strike out "two-thirds" and to insert in lieu thereof "three-fourths."

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, is it proposed to change from two-thirds to three-fourths the proportion of those who shall make the marketing agreements?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not consent to that, so far as I am concerned. An increase from two-thirds to three-fourths, I submit to the chairman of the committee, ought not to be made.

Mr. SMITH. I have consulted the Department as to their experience, and they said that they would prefer the two-thirds, but, in their opinion, three-fourths would not make any material difference whatever in the agreements they have signed up thus far.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, in response permit me to say it might make a very material difference. If two-thirds, in the experience of the Department, has been the appropriate proportion which ought to be applied, and if the Department also says it believes two-thirds to be the appropriate proportion, I can see no reason for increasing it to three-fourths. It would simply make more difficult the operation of the bill, and make it more difficult for those who desire to come under it to get under it.

I hope the amendment to the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SMITH. In justification of the position I take, I wish to say that I have stated the facts to the Senate. I will, of course, have nothing to do with the administration of this law, if enacted. However, it will be left entirely with the Senate as to whether it will agree to the three-fourths or the two-thirds. Of course the question will be put to a vote.

Mr. JOHNSON. But, Mr. President, it ought to be made perfectly plain, I think, that those who have administered the law in the past prefer the proportion of two-thirds and not the proportion of three-fourths.

Mr. SMITH. They do; that is the fact.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I think the amendment to the amendment ought not to be adopted, because experience has demonstrated the fact, and we ought not to change it in the light of what has transpired in the days gone by.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, Senators will observe on page 13, line 5, where the volume of milk is referred to, that in the House bill it says "three-fourths of the volume." The milk producers of my State do not like the bill, anyway, but they are anxious that a larger proportion of the producers should be permitted to determine what shall be done. I submit to my friend from California that, while there is not much difference between two-thirds and three-fourths, after all it means something; and yesterday, after rather full consideration, it was determined that there would be from those in charge of the bill no opposition to the change. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] was in charge of the bill at the time, and that was the position he took. So I appeal to the Senate to make the change from two-thirds to three-quarters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will again state the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. As an amendment to the committee amendment, it is proposed, on page 22, line 14, to strike out the words "two-thirds" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "three-fourths."

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON. This is a committee amendment. We are now considering only committee amendments which were passed over, and the amendments which were to be presented otherwise were to be presented subsequently to the determination of the committee amendments in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair call the Senator's attention to the fact that, as the Chair understands, this is an amendment to a committee amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. One of those which were passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; but the Chair does not know of any agreement to prohibit amendments to committee amendments. There was no agreement to that effect.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is quite true; but this is an amendment now offered from the floor, and the committee amendment was the one which was passed over. The right to offer the amendment, of course, rests with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], but not under the system which prevails in the consideration of the amendments.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I think the Senator from California is laboring under a misapprehension. The committee amendments which were passed over certainly are subject to amendment as we reach them. The amendments to the text will come after we shall have gotten through with the committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the parliamentary situation to be that in the beginning the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] asked unanimous consent to have committee amendments considered prior to any amendments offered to perfect the bill. Later on, the Senator asked that certain amendments be passed over without prejudice; so now they come up de novo. Therefore, the Chair thinks the amendment is in order.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what is the purport of this amendment? Is it proposed to increase the two-thirds to three-fourths?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York has offered an amendment on page 22, line 14, and lines 24 and 25, to strike out the words "two-thirds" and insert the words "three-fourths."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, yesterday I thought the matter was settled. Argument was made at that time. It should be kept in mind that there are two types of orders under consideration. First, there are orders in connection with the marketing agreements; second, there are orders in cases where it has been felt impossible to effect a marketing agreement. The provision for making orders in the absence of a marketing agreement is one of the most drastic authorizations of the measures. Its drastic character may be seen from the fact that such orders may be made only following the approval of the President. To stand any reasonable chance of enforcement, as I see the matter, it is obvious that the orders should be supported by a strong producer sentiment; and, therefore, the proposal is that compulsory orders shall not be made unless approved by at least three-fourths of the interested producers.

A minority less than 25 percent might well be expected to thwart any attempted regulation. That is the reason why the proposal for the concurrence of three-fourths of the producers brings the provision in harmony with the requirement under somewhat similar circumstances which I have pointed out on page 13. Certainly there is a much stronger reason for the adherence of 75 percent of the producers. I hope that the Senate will agree to what those in charge of the bill agreed to yesterday, that the number should be changed from two-thirds to three-fourths.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the committee which has been passed over will be stated.

The next amendment passed over was on page 23, line 14, in the subheading, to strike out "rule" and insert "application", so as to read:

Regional application.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 24, line 17, after the word "Secretary", to strike out "may" and insert "shall", so as to read:

COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION REPRESENTATION

(12) Whenever, pursuant to the provisions of this section, the Secretary is required to determine the approval or disapproval of producers with respect to the issuance of any order, or any term or condition thereof, or the termination thereof, the Secretary shall consider the approval or disapproval by any cooperative association of producers, bona fide engaged in marketing the commodity or product thereof covered by such order, or in rendering services for or advancing the interests of the producers of such commodity, as the approval or disapproval of the producers who are members of, stockholders in, or under contract with, such cooperative association of producers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 25, line 17, after the word "Provided" and the comma, to strike out "That no person shall be convicted under this title because of any violation of any order or of any obligation imposed in connection therewith, if such violation occurs between the date upon which such person files with the Secretary a petition, with respect to such order or obligation, as provided for in subsection (15), and 5 days after the Secretary enters a ruling thereon", and insert: "That if the court finds that a petition pursuant to subsection (15) of this section was filed and prosecuted by the defendant in good faith and not for delay, no penalty shall be imposed under this subsection for such violations as occurred between the date upon which the defendant's petition was filed with the Secretary, and the date upon which notice of the Secretary's ruling thereon was given to the defendant in accordance with regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (15)", so as to read:

VIOLATION OF ORDER

(14) Any handler subject to an order issued under this section, or any officer, director, agent, or employee of such handler, who violates any provision of such order (other than a provision calling for payment of a pro rata share of expenses) shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $50 or more than $500 for each such violation, and each day during which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate violation: Provided, That if the court finds that a petition pursuant to subsection (15) of this section was filed and prosecuted by the defendant in good faith and not for delay, no penalty shall be imposed under this subsection for such violations as occurred between the date upon which the defendant's petition was filed with the Secretary, and the date upon which notice of the Secretary's ruling thereon was given to the defendant in accordance with regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (15).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 26, line 24, after the word "business", to strike out the word "is" and insert the word "are"; on page 27, line 11, after the word "requires" and the period, to strike out "Nothing contained in this subsection (15) shall be construed to prevent, hinder, or delay the United States or the Secretary of Agriculture from pursuing the remedies provided for in section 8a (6) of this title." and insert "The pendency of proceedings instituted pursuant to this subsection (15) shall not impede, hinder, or delay the United States or the Secretary of Agriculture from obtaining relief pursuant to section 8a (6) of this title", so as to read:

PETITION BY HANDLER AND REVIEW

(15) (A) Any handler subject to an order may file a written petition with the Secretary of Agriculture, stating that any such order or any provision of any such order or any obligation imposed in connection therewith is not in accordance with law and praying for a modification thereof or to be exempted therefrom. He shall thereupon be given an opportunity for a hearing upon such petition, in accordance with regulations made by the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the President. After such hearing, the Secretary shall make a ruling upon the prayer of such petition which shall be final, if in accordance with law.

(B) The district courts of the United States (including the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia) in any district in which such handler is an inhabitant, or has his principal place of business, are hereby vested with jurisdiction in equity to review such ruling, provided a bill in equity for that purpose is filed within 20 days from the date of the entry of such ruling. Service of process in such proceedings may be had upon the Secretary by delivering to him a copy of the bill of complaint. If the court determines that such ruling is not in accordance with law, it shall remand such proceedings to the Secretary with directions either (1) to make such ruling as the court shall determine to be in accordance with law, or (2) to take such further proceedings as, in its opinion, the law requires. The pendency of proceedings instituted pursuant to this subsection (15) shall not impede, hinder, or delay the United States or the Secretary of Agriculture from obtaining relief pursuant to section 8a (6) of this title. Any proceedings brought pursuant to section 8a (6) of this title (except where brought by way of counterclaim in proceedings instituted pursuant to this subsection (15) shall abate whenever a final decree has been rendered in proceedings between the same parties, and covering the same subject matter, instituted pursuant to this subsection (15).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 28, line 10, before the word "specified", to strike out "as", and in line 15, after the word "order", to strike out "provided that such majority have during such representative period produced for market more than 50 percent of the volume of such commodity produced for market during such period" and insert "within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, or who, during such representative period, have been engaged in the production of such commodity for sale or consumption within the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement or order: Provided, That such majority have, during such representative period, produced for market more than 50 percent of the volume of such commodity produced for market within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, or have, during such representative period, produced more than 50 percent of the volume of such commodity sold or consumed in the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement or order", so as to read:

TERMINATION OF ORDERS AND MARKETING AGREEMENTS

(16) (A) The Secretary of Agriculture shall, whenever he finds that any order issued under this section, or any provision thereof, obstructs or does not tend to effectuate the declared policy of this title, terminate or suspend the operation of such order or such provision thereof.

(B) The Secretary shall terminate any marketing agreement entered into under section 8b, or order issued under this section, at the end of the then current marketing period for such commodity, specified in such marketing agreement or order, whenever he finds that such termination is favored by a majority of the producers who, during a representative period determined by the Secretary, have been engaged in the production for market of the commodity specified in such marketing agreement or order within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, or who, during such representative period, have been engaged in the production of such commodity for sale or consumption within the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement or order: Provided, That such majority have, during such representative period, produced for market more than 50 percent of the volume of such commodity produced for market within the production area specified in such marketing agreement or order, or have, during such representative period, produced more than 50 percent of the volume of such commodity sold or consumed in the marketing area specified in such marketing agreement or order, but such termination shall be effective only if announced on or before such date (prior to the end of the then current marketing period) as may be specified in such marketing agreement or order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I wish to submit an inquiry with reference to the language proposed to be stricken out on page 28, commencing in line 15.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the amendment which has just been stated.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask the chairman of the committee wherein there is any change made from the House text?

Mr. SMITH. The purpose of the amendment was to determine the interests both by area and by volume, by production, and by marketing area.

Mr. McNARY. The House text proceeds upon the theory that there must be 50 percent of the volume and of the quantity, and the other consideration applies that factor as well as the area?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 29, line 16, after the word "orders", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That notice of a hearing upon a proposed amendment to any order issued pursuant to section 8 (c), given not less than 3 days prior to the date fixed for such hearing, shall be deemed due notice thereof", so as to read:

PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO AMENDMENTS

(17) The provisions of this section, section 8d, and section 8e applicable to orders shall be applicable to amendments to orders: Provided, That notice of a hearing upon a proposed amendment to any order issued pursuant to section 8 (c), given not less than 3 days prior to the date fixed for such hearing, shall be deemed due notice thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] if there is any limitation in the bill as to the duration of the A. A. A. Act or of the pending bill? That is to say, will they terminate contemporaneously or is there any period fixed for the termination of either?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, no provision is made in this bill to that end, but in section 13 of the original act there is a provision that it shall cease to be in effect when the President finds the emergency to have come to an end.

Mr. KING. Is it left entirely to the discretion of the President of the United States as to how long the measure now before us, if it shall be enacted into law, and the A. A. A. Act shall continue in force?

Mr. SMITH. The Senator must realize these are simply amendments to the original act, but in that respect they are not amendatory of the original act.

Mr. KING. I assume the Senator has accurately stated the situation, but it seems to me this would be a good time, before the fall shall have passed, to amend the original act so that it shall terminate at a given time.

Mr. SMITH. We are proceeding upon the assumption that this is emergency legislation and that recovery shall have been made and we shall have returned to normalcy, if I may use the term which sprung up during war times, these provisions will not be necessary, but we will be in such a glorious state of prosperity that our difficulties will have disappeared like mist before the sun.

Mr. KING. Of course we shall look forward with the eye of the prophet to that day and will rejoice when it shall have dawned, but notwithstanding the A. A. A. measure is predicated upon the assumption that when parity of prices had been reached between agricultural commodities and other industrial commodities, processing taxes would cease. Now I find in the bill a provision that when that happy state shall have been reached we may go on enforcing these taxes until 20 percent above parity shall have been attained, and I am not sure that even when that state shall have been attained there is any provision that when the emergency shall have passed the bill shall cease to operate or that the A. A. A. shall terminate.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question because I desire to have the point clear in the record and also clear in my own mind. On page 40 of the bill, beginning in line 23, it is stated that when "more than 20 percent of the fair exchange value thereof" is reached, "the rate of such tax shall be reduced * * * to such rate as equals 10 percent of the fair exchange value thereof." In other words, the tax does not continue as was originally intended, but is lowered to 10 percent of the fair exchange value. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will read the paragraph beginning in line 3 he will understand that the benefit payments will cease when a certain stage is reached. Then the tax will be reduced to zero and pass out of existence; but where there is a temporary approach to parity and there is reason to believe it is merely temporary during the marketing year the tax may be reduced to 10 percent. If, however, for 2 months preceding the next marketing year the conditions are such as to justify the belief that the parity will be maintained, the tax will be reduced to zero, and no benefit payments made.

Mr. GERRY. But it is always left to the Department to declare that condition to have been reached.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; but it is always dependent upon the facts in the case. The facts in the case will be that when parity shall be reached and maintained, no benefit payments will be made, and therefore no tax will be levied or collected. That is provided for in the first paragraph on page 40. In the next paragraph it is provided that during a marketing period where the price reaches parity, or even above, it may be reduced, for the obvious reason that during the same marketing period prices may drop away down below parity, and otherwise no machinery and no provision whatever would be made to recoup for the benefit of the producer.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if, under these amendments, these taxes may not be continued so long as the Secretary of Agriculture or the Administrator has any obligations under the act?

Mr. SMITH. I do not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. GEORGE. So long as the Secretary or the Administrator has any obligations under the act, so long as he is called upon to perform any duty with respect to the payment of benefits, or if he is engaged in purchasing commodities to be kept in storage, as is authorized under the bill, are not the processing taxes to be continued?

Mr. SMITH. No; I think not, for this reason: I went over the language carefully, and called their attention to the fact that there was a moral as well as a legal obligation implied, and it is explicit; that where we levy a tax for the purpose of bringing the price of the produced material up to parity, when the processors and the producers have agreed upon and maintained that price or above that price, as in the case of tobacco, it is morally wrong still further to collect the tax, because the object was to raise the price to parity.

Mr. GEORGE. That is entirely true. The distinguished chairman is entirely correct; but, if he will study his bill——

Mr. SMITH. I went over those terms very carefully.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand, but I am going by the bill. If the Senator will study the bill, he will find that the processing taxes will continue until certain affirmative findings and conclusions shall have been reached by the Secretary or the Administrator, and that they may be continued notwithstanding the parity price has been attained and has been maintained during the period if there is any other obligation or any other undertaking by the Administrator which has not been discharged. So I wish it to be made perfectly clear that the purpose of the bill as it actually is written, considering all the technicalities, is to continue this tax practically indefinitely.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, that is what I was afraid of. The statement of the Senator from Georgia is very clear. It seems to me that the section should be made clearer, because the idea is just what the chairman of the committee has said.

Mr. SMITH. I think the Senator from Georgia has misconstrued the bill, because whenever parity shall be reached, the bill provides, not only in the paragraph under discussion, but in the one on page 5, that—

> Whenever * * * the average farm price for such commodity is not likely to be less than the fair exchange value thereof for the period in which the production of such commodity during the current or next succeeding marketing year is normally marketed, or
> The conditions of and factors relating to the production, marketing, and consumption of such commodity are such that none of the powers conferred in subsections (2) and (3), and no combination of such powers, would, if exercised, tend to effectuate the declared policy of this title—

The tax shall cease.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, that provision is found in the bill; but under the subsequent amendments which are included in the bill I do not think I can be wrong in my conclusion.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the specific language to which he refers?

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be very glad to do so, but I had not anticipated doing so.

Mr. SMITH. There was no such understanding whatever in the discussions of the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. I am quite sure of that.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will find in the bill any provision under which the Secretary of Agriculture may tax the processor for some other purpose than bringing about parity, the chairman now commits himself to strike that from the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to have the Senator say that.

Mr. GERRY. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know what is in the mind of the chairman with regard to that matter; but while we probably shall have to abandon a great many of the details of the rather complex structure we now have before us, I am one who believes we are going to have to continue for a long while the processing taxes in behalf of the major agricultural crops, and the Senator from Texas favors it.

What hope have we, unless we maintain the processing taxes, that agricultural prices of themselves will maintain any fair relationship to the costs of other commodities? They did not do it before the war, and they have not done it since the war. They did it for a short time only under the influence and the stimulation of a great shortage of food supplies in Europe, because millions of men were withdrawn from productive enterprise and were killing each other.

Mr. SMITH. Is the Senator from Texas saying that he would be willing to tax the processor after the price of the commodity had reached parity, the object of the tax?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; perhaps not; but I am not in favor, simply because for a little while——

Mr. SMITH. Provision is made here——

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, certainly; I will give the Senator all the time he wishes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator very much. He is generous with his time. I am very grateful to him for being allowed to talk a little while.

The moment the price reaches parity, produced probably by some temporary cause, I am not in favor of instantly abandoning the processing taxes.

Mr. SMITH. That is not in the bill. I tried to make clear that the tax would be reduced only temporarily when the price reached parity or above during a current marketing year; but if, preceding the next marketing year, conditions were such as to warrant, in the estimation of both the producers and the Department, the belief that the price would be parity or above, the tax could be reduced to zero.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. What I am trying to point out is this:

I have heard the Senator from South Carolina, standing upon this floor, denounce the high industrial costs, the high tariffs that the farmer has to pay. I have heard him say here within the past few days that never in the history of the world has the farmer been able to fix his own price and get what he desired for his product. What is there in the future which indicates to the mind of anyone that without some form of relief such as the Agricultural Adjustment Administration industrial costs are coming down and farm prices are going up?

No one, if he will study the history of the past, can believe that that will happen; and, so far as I am concerned, I am prepared to vote for processing taxes in behalf of the major agricultural crops whose surpluses are exported, and whose prices, therefore, are fixed in the export market. I am willing to vote for processing taxes on such products in order to equalize the spread between the high price of industrial products which the farmer has to buy and the low price of agricultural products which he has to sell.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment. By the same process of reasoning, if the American farmer is forced by law to pay a higher price for the products of American industries in order that the men who work in those industries may receive higher wages and in order that the men who own the factories may derive higher dividends, why is it not fair for the same men who work in the factories and the same men who own the factories to pay the farmer increased costs on his product in the form of a processing tax in order that the man who labors on the farm and the man who owns the farm may get back a little of what they have been paying to the industrialists for 75 years?

I am astonished that the senior Senator from South Carolina should be opposed to that sort of a principle.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to take me to task for doing what he is arguing against. If the price of the farmer's produce reaches a parity with the protected price or any other price of the commodities he has to buy, that is, if the farmer's dollar has a value of 100 cents as compared with what he has to buy, does the Senator think it is fair to keep on taxing the other industries to pile up an extraordinary price even above the ungodly protected price? Does he think that is fair?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will answer the Senator, but I promised to yield first to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. SMITH. I do not want the Senator to misquote my statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will come to the Senator's suggestion if he will give me time. I will reach the Senator on the calendar.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from South Carolina will take care of himself.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from South Carolina not only takes care of himself, but of the time of everybody else.

Mr. SMITH. No, that is not a task I would assume.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas thought he had the floor. He promised to yield, but was denied that opportunity by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. I now give the Senator the opportunity.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will yield to the Senator in due process, but I reserve the right to control my own time. I now yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. GERRY. My question was as to what provision there is in the bill to provide for the situation affecting the taxes when the price shall have reached parity. The Senator will understand that in the textile business it is very important whether or not the tax is to continue after parity shall have been reached. The Senator from Georgia seemed to have some doubt as to the interpretation of the bill. I think that should be made very clear.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Rhode Island that I am not talking about parity as parity was defined in the bill originally. I am not prepared to say that I am going to live by that rule of parity the rest of my life. That was a standard that was fixed arbitrarily by taking a certain series of years, from 1909 to 1914. I do not know that that standard of measurement was necessarily fair at that time.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. The testimony before the committee was to the effect that the parity ratio was established before farmers had Fords or had radios, and did not take into consideration those things which were then considered luxuries.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. NORBECK. So that he has to be on a lower standard of living in order to live at the parity price.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from South Dakota is exactly correct. The standard of parity which we adopted was one which obtained at a time when the farmer had no artificial aids whatever. In other words, the prices were fixed, not by artificial devices, but by the natural process of things. So we adopted that, but it is not necessarily a safe and fair guide value, because at that very time the industrial interests were receiving bounties in the form of high tariffs, and the laboring men in the factories, at least in theory, were receiving higher wages because of the existence of those tariffs.

I understand the difficulties of the Senator from Rhode Island, in whose State there are textile factories. Of course, the textile mills are having to pay more for the cotton they spin because of the processing tax. That makes it more difficult for them to compete in foreign markets.

I have an amendment now pending which will be of benefit to the textile producers in that I propose that the Government shall use a part of the import revenues to pay an export bounty on the manufactured cotton, not on raw cotton, but on the articles manufactured in the textile mills, in order to aid the textile manufacturer to compete in the export trade and to some extent to repay him for the burden which is imposed upon him by the processing tax.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I now yield to the Senator from South Carolina, if he desires.

Mr. SMITH. The point I desire to make is this: The Senator talked about taking an arbitrary date. The statisticians took the date when, in their opinion, the purchasing power of the agricultural dollar was a hundred cents. That will be maintained in all the exigencies of the subsequent marketing trend. For instance, if the thing the farmer has to buy goes up, then the parity is spread. In other words, the object of this entire proposal is to give to the farmer, in return for what he sells, the same value in dollars as he pays for the things he buys, and, of course, there is a sliding scale. We took the year when it happened that his dollar was worth exactly what the dollar of the industrialist was worth. It just happened that that was the year when there was such a parity.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, of course the Senator from South Carolina has elucidated the matter entirely, completely, and thoroughly, and the statement means just what the Senator from Texas said a moment ago, that when we adopted a standard of parity we adopted a standard in which the farmer had no artificial benefits, but one which he reached by reason of world economic laws. I am not prepared to say that for all time that is a just standard, and I am prepared to vote for a new standard whenever it appears that the farmer is entitled to that sort of a standard.

I am not attacking the Senator from South Carolina. He says the purpose of the bill is so-and-so. Of course, that is the purpose. My complaint is that it does not necessarily attain the purpose by the measures which the Senator from South Carolina proposes.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina allow me a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. What is the amendment now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over has not been stated.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has the floor. The Senator from New York rose to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CONNALLY. I propound a parliamentary inquiry myself. I thought when one had the floor he had to be asked to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator does not have to be asked to yield when a parliamentary inquiry is propounded.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have the floor. If the Senator wants me to yield, I will yield, but I do not understand the process whereby he can take me off the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. I did not take the Senator off the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the Senate practice a parliamentary inquiry is equivalent to a point of order. There is no amendment before the Senate at the present time. The inquiry of the Senator from New York was equivalent to a point of order. The Chair announced that the next amendment passed over had not been stated.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is a flock of amendments pending; the whole bill is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. I am making an inquiry only for information. I freely confess that I have had the very greatest difficulty in comprehending the pending bill in its details or as a whole. I have carried it around with me for several days.

On the matter of the base price, the parity price, we are all in confusion. I wish to see if we can clear it up. I may be entirely wrong.

We began in the Agricultural Adjustment Act in 1933 with the pre-war period parity, August 1909 to July 1914. That was the base and that was the standard of parity in the old act and the present law. But at the top of page 3 of the pending bill that standard is abandoned and a different standard is established. If that be true, I wish to know it; and if it be not true, I wish to be corrected; but I shall read the language. It is as follows:

> Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture has reason to believe that:
> (a) The current average farm price for any basic agricultural commodity is less than the fair exchange value thereof, or the average farm price of such commodity is likely to be less than the fair exchange value therefor for the period in which the production of such commodity during the current or next succeeding marketing year is normally marketed, and—

And so forth.

It occurs to me that we are asked to establish a new standard. Are we still on the old standard of 1909 to 1914?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Then what is the meaning of this language?

Mr. SMITH. The terminology is interchangeable—"fair exchange value or parity."

Mr. BAILEY. Would that be the fair exchange value as of now or the fair exchange value as of 1909–14?

Mr. SMITH. The fair exchange value as interpreted in terms of 100 cents of the farmer's purchasing price as it was in 1924.

Mr. BAILEY. But that took as the base 1909–14. This language is without dates, but I understand the Senator now to say that the base is still 1909–14. Is that correct?

Mr. SMITH. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not care to occupy more of the time of the Senate. What I rose to do was to challenge the statement of the Senator from South Carolina and other Senators that at some time or other we had to abolish the processing taxes. It seems to me that if we are to maintain any sort of a farm program at all for the benefit of farm producers, we must maintain the processing taxes in some form, or else go into the Treasury itself. The processing taxes are the sounder and the better method, because we are making the consumers of the product pay a higher price; and the justification is that the farmer himself has been paying all his life a higher price for the commodities he has consumed. So I, for one, am prepared to vote, whenever and however it may be necessary, for a permanent system of processing taxes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, at the top of page 38, to insert:

> SPECIFIC TAX RATE—FLOOR STOCKS—FLAXSEED AND BARLEY
> (5) If at any time prior to December 31, 1937, any tax with respect to flaxseed, or barley becomes effective pursuant to proclamation as provided in subsection (a) of this section, such tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid during the period from the date upon which such tax becomes effective to December 31, 1937, both inclusive, in the case of flaxseed at the rate of 35 cents per bushel of 56 pounds, and in the case of barley at the rate of 25 cents per bushel of 48 pounds. The provisions of section 16 of this title shall not apply in the case of flaxseed and barley.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that opens up a very controversial question. Would the Senator from South Carolina be willing to recess at this time?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, we have consumed practically all of the day on matters which were of interest to those who discussed them; and while the discussion perhaps has been very illuminating, we have made very little progress. I should prefer to go on and at least try to get rid of a few more of the amendments.

Mr. McNARY. This is an amendment which will require considerable discussion. A number of the Members of the Senate are absent. It is nearly 15 minutes after 5. We have had a good day, and have progressed very well.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that it is going to take some time to dispose of the amendment on page 38 relating to flaxseed. I hope the Senator will either ask for a recess now or let that amendment go over until tomorrow morning. I can assure the Senator that we cannot finish it tonight.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not know of any time——

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is not going to finish the bill tonight.

Mr. SMITH. I know the Senator is not going to finish the bill this afternoon, but what we are trying to do is to make as much progress as possible.

Mr. GEORGE. That is all very well; but there are many of us here who have not taken up much time on this amendment or any other amendment, and it is not fair to hold the Senate in session after 5:15 in the afternoon when it is perfectly obvious that we have now reached a portion of the bill as to which there will be considerable discussion.

The amendments which immediately follow this amendment all go to the very vitals of this whole measure. There may be other committee amendments which the Senate could take up, but it is obviously not fair to take them up this afternoon.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not know just where the element of fairness or unfairness is.

Mr. GEORGE. It is 5:15 o'clock, and it is now past the middle of July. There are some of us who have not taken up a great deal of time in discussing any matter before the Senate, or any particular issue which may have arisen before the Senate. It seems to me that an amendment which is so important and so intricate as is this amendment might be passed over until tomorrow. I am not particularly interested in the other amendments; but I do know, and the Senator from South Carolina knows, that inasmuch as the amendment relates to the taxes and provisions relating to proceedings in court, we have reached the point in the bill where certainly some time will necessarily be consumed.

There may be other committee amendments undisposed of outside of these particular amendments. I am not familiar with them; but I make the request, which the Senator does not have to grant, that this particular amendment, paragraph (5), on page 38, go over until tomorrow morning.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I simply wish to make the request, after what has been said by the Senator from Georgia, that the Senator from South Carolina consent that the Senate take a recess at this time.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, the Senator knows that I am just as weary—perhaps more so—than is any other Senator here, because unfortunately I am more or less charged with the responsibility of trying to pilot this measure to its final conclusion. I am compelled to be in attendance all the time, and I desire to have the bill completed as soon as possible.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator has worked assiduously and has been kindly, and we have all tried to cooperate in the consideration of this very comprehensive bill. I think such cooperation will continue, and I am only asking that the Senate may recess at this time.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I wish to add my request to that of the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Oregon that the Senator from South Carolina consent that a recess be taken at this time.

The Senator from South Carolina has worked hard today and he has done everything he could to further the passage of the bill. He says he is weary, and I desire to assure the Senator that the Senators who have not taken part in the debates are as weary as he is, possibly more so. On behalf of those who are weary—and I am sure we are in the majority—I ask the Senator from South Carolina to consent that the Senate now take a recess.

Mr. SMITH. I can appreciate what the Senator says, that some Senators not actively engaged in the debates on this particular bill are weary. They have reason to be weary.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in connection with the pending bill, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a news item published today in the Washington Evening Star, as well as in every other newspaper in the country. It relates to a decision rendered today by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals holding unconstitutional the processing taxes and the flour taxes imposed under the Agricultural Adjustment Act. I ask unanimous consent that the article in question be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star of July 16, 1935]

A. A. A. TAX IS ILLEGAL, UNITED STATES APPEALS COURT IN BOSTON ASSERTS—SPLIT DECISION OF 2 TO 1 HOLDS PROCESSING, FLOOR LEVIES UNCONSTITUTIONAL—JUDGES SCORE DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY TO SECRETARY—CONGRESS FIXED NO RULES FOR HIM, BUT PERMITTED LAWS BY DECREE, TRIBUNAL DECLARES

BOSTON, July 16.—The United States Circuit Court of Appeals today held unconstitutional the processing and floor taxes imposed under the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

The court found that no such authority to impose taxes had been delegated to the Secretary of Agriculture by the Constitution or by decisions of the Supreme Court.

The Circuit Court's decision was based upon a test case brought by receivers of the Hoosac Mills, which sought recovery of $81,694.48. The decision was subscribed to by Judges Scott Wilson and George F. Morris. Judge George H. Bingham, senior justice, dissented.

The Hoosac Mills suit was one of many brought by textile corporations who sought recovery of taxes paid on constitutional grounds. It was chosen by United States attorneys as a test case to be carried to the United States Supreme Court chiefly because of the initial success of the Government in obtaining a favorable decision in the district court of Judge Elisha H. Brewster.

COLLECTION OF $700,000,000 HELD UP

Yesterday Judge Brewster had hinted that this finding might be reversed by the Circuit Court as he ordered continuation of a temporary injunction preventing collection of processing taxes from four New Bedford mills and a Fall River corporation.

The collection of some $700,000,000 of processing taxes hinges upon the question of their constitutionality.

"It is clear", said the court of appeals decision, "that the main purpose of the act is to control and regulate the production of the so-called "basic agricultural commodities" of the several States, through agreements with the producers and in consideration of what is termed "rental or benefit payments", to reduce acreage or production for market sufficient to increase the current average price of such products to that elusive point where the returns to the farmer from the production of such commodities will purchase under present conditions the same amount of industrial products that the returns to the farmer from the same products would buy in the 5-year pre-war period from July 1909 to August 1914. * * *

HEARING IN FALL SEEN

Frank J. Wideman, Assistant Attorney General in charge of tax cases, said the Hoosac case would be heard before the Supreme Court "some time in the fall * * *, in any case before the holidays."

The decision will not stop processing tax collections, Wideman said.

Two other direct tests of the A. A. A.'s constitutionality, now awaiting action of the Federal Court of Claims here, probably will be heard in October, he added.

The Hoosac Mills case may be consolidated with these two, brought by Continental Mills and Interlaken Mills in the Supreme Court hearing.

THREE APPEALS TOMORROW

About 200 suits to stop tax collections are pending. These ask injunctions, and Government attorneys contend they do not involve the constitutionality of the tax. The circuit court at Louisville will meet tomorrow to hear an appeal from three Cleveland injunction suits against the A. A. A.

Gratification at the promptness of the Boston decision was expressed by Chester C. Davis, the A. A. A. Administrator.

Davis said it probably would result in an early ruling by the Supreme Court on the taxes and the entire farm program.

Officials were quick to say that the ruling would not affect immediate progress of the adjustment programs.

CANNOT INVADE INTRASTATE FIELD

"The power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce does not authorize it to do so by taxing products either of agriculture or industry before they enter interstate commerce, or otherwise to control their production merely because their production may indirectly affect interstate commerce.

"The issue is not, as the Government contends, whether Congress can appropriate funds raised by general taxation, for any purpose deemed by Congress in furtherance of the 'general welfare', but whether Congress has any power to control or regulate matters left to the States and lay a special tax for that purpose."

The court also set forth: "The power to determine what the law shall be, what property shall be affected by taxation or regulation, and what standards shall govern the administrative officers in administering acts of Congress, has never been held to be an administrative function.

MUST LAY DOWN GUIDE

"The power to impose a tax and to determine what property shall bear a tax can only be determined by the legislative department of the Government. If Congress undertakes to lay down a guide for an administrative officer to follow in carrying out its mandates, it must be an intelligible and reasonably definite standard. * * *

"The balance between production and consumption of certain commodities or the equalizing of the purchasing power thereof between certain widely separated periods alone forms no such standard.

"If Congress has the power to control or regulate the production of agricultural products within the several States, and assess a tax on their processing or sale for that purpose, it is obviously legislative in character. Query: Then has Congress set up any definite standard for the Secretary's action in making rental or benefit payments to producers and thereby imposing a processing tax?

"NO SUCH GUIDE FOUND

"We find no definite, intelligible standard set up in the act for determining when the Secretary shall pay rental or benefit payments in order to reduce production of any particular commodity except in his own judgment as to what will effectuate the purpose of the act.

"The declaration of the emergency in the agricultural act contains no such standard for the Secretary of Agriculture to follow in entering into restrictive agreement with producers of agricultural products. It is merely a statement of conditions which, in the judgment of Congress, warranted legislative action. * * *

"Without requiring any findings to warrant his action, Congress has empowered him, in conjunction with the producers, to determine when a reduction of acreage or production of any one of the agricultural commodities which it termed basic should be resorted to to accomplish the act, when rental or benefit payments are to be made and in what amounts, and thereby to determine through the initiation of the benefit payments or rentals the consequent imposition of a tax.

"NO FACT FINDING MADE

"The Secretary made no findings of facts as to why he selected the first list of basic commodities for reducing acreage or production, and was not required to do so. He simply made a proclamation; rental and/or benefit payments are to be made with respect to cotton; and a processing tax automatically followed.

"While the amount of the reduction of acreage or production of any basic commodity under this act is done by agreements and not by a code, the purpose and the result is the same; viz, the control and regulation of a great intrastate industry. * * *

"If Congress can take over the control of any intrastate business by a declaration of an economic emergency and a public interest in its regulation, it would be difficult to define the limits of the powers of Congress or to foretell the future limitations of local self-government.

"SCHECHTER CASE CITED

"No standard or guide is here laid down to determine how the compensating tax shall be fixed or what elements shall be taken into consideration in determining the amount, except that it shall be determined by the amount necessary to prevent such disadvantage in competition. We find no decision of the Supreme Court authorizing such a delegation of power to an administrative officer.

"On the contrary, the recent decision in the Panama Refining Co. case and the Schechter Poultry Corporation case, we think, clearly condemns it as unwarranted under the Constitution.

"If Congress has invaded a field over which it has no control under the Constitution, or the Secretary has been unlawfully vested with legislative powers, the exercise of which has affected these appellants, it is not necessary to consider whether the processing and floor taxes are direct taxes, or, if excise taxes, are not uniformly laid.

"The decree of the district court is reversed and the case is remanded to that court with directions to enter a decree for the appellants."

ILLINOIS COLLECTIONS BALKED—COURT HOLDS CONSTITUTIONALITY AT LEAST APPEARS DOUBTFUL

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., July 16.—The United States District Court has ruled the Government temporarily cannot collect processing taxes from 12 firms in central and southern Illinois.

Eleven milling companies and one packing firm have been granted a temporary order restraining the Government from collecting the taxes. They claimed the A. A. A. was unconstitutional.

Judge Charles G. Briggle issued the order late yesterday declaring constitutionality at least appeared doubtful. He held that a section saying no injunction should be issued to prevent the collection of taxes did not apply because of extraordinary circumstances in the cases involved.

"The equitable powers of the court were invoked in spite of the prohibitory provisions of the section relating to injunctions, because of the character of the penalties involved for failure of the companies to pay the taxes and the multiplicity of the suits required to get refunds from the Government", Justice Briggle said.

He held the companies should pay the taxes to the clerk of the court, pending decision of the constitutionality of the act.

VIRGINIA MILLERS PROTEST

RICHMOND, VA., July 16.—Virginia millers today had joined with peanut companies of the Old Dominion in a protest against processing taxes.

Judge John Paul in district court at Harrisonburg Monday will hear petitions of the Shenandoah Milling Co. and other millers for an injunction to restrain the collector of internal revenue from collecting processing taxes on wheat ground into flour.

Other petitions have been filed by the J. M. Strickler Mills of Harrisonburg and the Natural Falls Milling Co. of Bridgewater. Judge Paul has granted a preliminary restraining order on each.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, with the approval of the Senator from South Carolina, it is my intention to move an executive session.

Mr. SMITH. I think that will be all right, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY—DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA MUNICIPAL COURT JUDGES

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Nathan Cayton, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the municipal court, District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George C. Aukam, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the municipal court, District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ellen K. Raedy, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the municipal court, District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

JUDGE OF THE POLICE COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Walter J. Casey, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the police court, District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

SPECIAL COUNSEL, NAVAL RESERVE NO. 1, CALIFORNIA

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John W. Preston, of California, to be special counsel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for State administrators in the Works Progress Administration.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations on the calendar for State administrators in the Works Progress Administration be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations will be confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate, as in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, July 17, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 16 (legislative day of May 13), 1935

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JULY 16, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our blessed Heavenly Father, we pray that the spirit of the Lord may rest upon us—the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and the fear of the Lord. Do Thou keep us untroubled and unclouded by regular desire; free us from delirious fancy and help us to see through every perplexity and triumph over every assault of evil. Let the blessed divinities of patience and golden hope work in us. May obligation to our country, the subordination of self be fostered by a Christian faith. We thank Thee for a world which Thou hast made and clothed in all its glory; it is so rich in materials and opportunities. Make us altogether one in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings of the House by which the bill (H. R. 7506) to provide for a stenographic grade in the offices of Chief Clerk and Superintendent in the Railway Mail Service was considered and passed.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us the reason for this request?

Mr. MEAD. The reason for the request is that although the bill had been amended by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the same amendment was again offered from the floor and adopted, so that the bill now carries two identical amendments, and I want to eliminate one of them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 7506, and I shall ask the House to vacate the proceedings by which the Sweeney amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the Sweeney amendment was agreed to on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2½ minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, much is being said now in the press, and some remarks were made on the floor of the House yesterday about the adjournment of Congress. I agree 100 percent with the very delightful optimism expressed by the distinguished and able gentleman from Georgia that Congress ought speedily to adjourn. [Applause.] If I interpret your applause correctly, it is an expression of sympathy with the sentiment rather than an expression of your intentions.

Mr. Speaker, in the first place, this is not an unusually long session of Congress. I have before me the record and I find that the long session of Congress, which this would have been had it not been for the twenty-first amendment to the Constitution, usually runs about 6 or 7 months. If there had been no such constitutional amendment this session would have adjourned along about the middle of June or 1st of July.

I am as anxious to get home as any Member of Congress. Without discussing the propriety or impropriety or the good judgment of taking up a tax bill now, the fact remains that it is up, and I address my remarks particularly to my colleagues of the majority; for, after all, the responsibility of legislation and carrying out the President's program is with us. I want to say to you, gentlemen, that to my mind it will be a major strategical blunder on our part to leave this Congress without settling one way or the other the question of the tax bill. [Applause.]

I believe that no Congress has ever passed a tax or tariff bill in an election year. I think that is correct, although I have not verified the record. I have, however, talked to some oldtimers, and I believe that is correct. If we leave this matter now we will not pass it at all. Our leader, the President of the United States, has said we must raise some additional revenue. I am not saying how it ought to be raised or what kind of a bill we ought to vote for, or whether you want to vote for a tax bill or not, but I say it is fair to us and to the American public to settle this issue now in order that the business people, the taxpayers, and the rest of the country may know what they have to face.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. If it had not been for the "lame duck" amendment, this session of Congress would have been the short session and would have adjourned sine die on March 4, 1935.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. So this is an extraordinarily long session.

Mr. WOODRUM. No; this would have been the long session.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is incorrect. The short session always followed an election year until the "lame duck" amendment changed it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. May I ask the gentleman if the first session of the Seventy-second Congress did not pass a nuisance-tax bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. Maybe the gentleman is correct, but I do not think we ever passed a general-tax bill in an election year.

Mr. Speaker, I am as anxious as anyone is to go home, but I appeal to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle that the business men of the country have a right to know what they will have to face in the way of taxes. You may think it is hot here in Washington right now, but I want to tell you that if we do not settle this issue it is going to be an awful sight hotter when we go back home, and in the elections next year.

[Here the gavel fell.]

WITHDRAWAL OF RIGHT TO SUE UNITED STATES ON BONDS AND SIMILAR OBLIGATIONS

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution 348 may be given a privileged status on Thursday; that there may be 2 hours of general debate, to be confined to the bill and to be divided equally between myself and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have had several requests for time on this side. This is a very important bill, and there are many Members who believe it is vital to the integrity of the obligations of the Federal Government. For this reason I am constrained to insist that we have at least 4 hours.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will not two hours and a half be satisfactory?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That would allow only an hour and a quarter to a side. I have in mind two Members who will speak for at least an hour, and I have received requests this morning from three other gentlemen for talks ranging from 10 to 30 minutes, so I do not see how we can possibly do credit to this bill unless we have not less than 4 hours' general debate, or 2 hours on each side.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request and amend the request to make it 3 hours of general debate, to be confined to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama as amended?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we want to cooperate in this matter. As a matter of fact, we are against the principle of this bill; but I appreciate the fact that you have the power to bring in a rule here which would make general debate shorter if it was so desired. For this reason, and being desirous of getting a reasonable amount of time to discuss this proposition, may I ask the gentleman to make it 3½ hours?

Mr. STEAGALL. May I say to the minority leader that, to be perfectly frank, I had a reasonable basis to believe that 3 hours would be considered ample time by the minority, and I hope the gentleman will agree to 3 hours.

Mr. SNELL. We have had so many requests for time that we just cannot get through in that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the numerous requests for time on this side, may I suggest that the minority side be given two-thirds of the time to be allotted?

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, I cannot agree to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a privileged resolution, and I want to inquire whether or not I will be permitted to discuss the objections that may be offered to the resolution on any point of order which may be made against the same?

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman withhold his request?

Mr. DEEN. Not at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot answer the gentleman's question at this time.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 31

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Tuesday, the 23d day of July, 1935, and when they adjourn on said day they stand adjourned sine die.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DEEN and Mr. SNELL) there were—ayes 111, nays 48.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is counting. [After counting.] Two hundred and eleven Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 261, nays 87, not voting 81, as follows:

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 297

Resolved, That SCOTT W. LUCAS, of Illinois, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Agriculture.

The resolution was agreed to.

JUDICIAL NULLIFICATION

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein an address I recently made at the Institute of Public Affairs at the University of Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address which I made at the Institute of Public Affairs at the University of Virginia July 10, 1935:

An exhaustive discussion of the question of the power of the Federal judiciary to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress cannot, of course, be given within the limits of this address. A thorough and exhaustive discussion would involve the history from contemporary sources of the framing of the Federal Constitution in the Convention of 1787 and of the ratifying conventions held subsequently thereto in the several States. It would also include an analysis of a number of the decisions by the Supreme Court wherein the constitutionality of acts of Congress was passed upon by the Court. To go further and make the study of this question of practical value for the present and future there should be included within the study such related questions as:

Should the Supreme Court or other Federal courts have the power to nullify acts of Congress?

And the other equally important related question:

What is the remedy for the present anomalous situation in our Government wherein laws which have been in effect for a period of years, and under which men have made contracts, engaged in business, shaped their lives, may be set aside by a court?

Any such exhaustive discussion of this subject would obviously extend far beyond the limits of my address.

I am simply hoping at this time to present to you such a statement of the subject as will show it merely in outline and as may lead this body and others, where leaders of thought and those who mold public opinion meet, to give further consideration to this question which is daily becoming of greater importance to our country and which, if our present economic system and our present form of government are to be preserved, must soon be answered.

I wish in this address to make two points:

First, neither the Supreme Court nor any of the lower Federal courts have under the Constitution any right to adjudge an act of Congress unconstitutional; or in any suit between private litigants to pass upon the constitutionality of an act of Congress.

Second, the exercise or assumption of such power by the Supreme Court or other Federal courts is not only unnecessary in our system of government, but it is also positively harmful, and its continued assumption and exercise in these times constitute a danger to our form of government and our economic system, such as may at any time cause them to break down.

The proof of my first point that such power is not given to the Supreme Court or other Federal courts in the Constitution requires, of course, not only a careful reading of the Constitution itself, which may be easily done by any lawyer or other student of our Government; but also in order to determine the intention of the framers of the Constitution with respect to this power of judicial nullification, a study of the Constitutional Convention of 1787 from the contemporary sources of the history of the Convention, consisting of the notes of the Convention as kept by Madison, Pierce, King, Hamilton, and others. I regret that the limits of this address will not allow me to do much more than give you my conclusions as to the intention of the makers, gathered from such sources and from such valuable contributions to the history of the Constitution and the purposes of its makers as have been made by Jackson H. Ralston, Esq., Dr. Edward S. Corwin, professor of jurisprudence of Princeton University; Horace A. Davis, Esq., of Brookline, Mass.; Dr. James F. Lawson, of Falls Church, Va., and several others from whom I have borrowed very liberally and to whom I make my grateful acknowledgment. My conclusions, however, may be readily checked and verified from the contemporary sources which I have mentioned and may be easily disproven if in any respect they are incorrect.

I fully appreciate that this inquiry is startling in its nature to a great many of our people—even to a great many lawyers—who have acquiesced in this unwarranted assumption of power by the Federal courts and who have not subjected it to the light of the history of the framing of our Federal Constitution, the purposes of its makers, or the effects of this assumed power of nullification by the courts. I know, therefore, that in some quarters my purpose will be distorted and misrepresented, and that I shall be accused, as I aready have been in certain newspapers, of seeking to cut the heart out of the Constitution and to undermine our form of government.

I might say in reply—if reply be necessary—to those who make the charge that I am proceeding to undermine the Government, that in my denial of the right of the judges to exercise the power of nullifying acts of Congress, I am in rather respectable company. The constitutionality of the exercise of this power was denied, and the Court severely criticized for attempting to exercise it, by some of the greatest of our Presidents; notably Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, Grant, and Theodore Roosevelt. My colleague, Representative LEWIS, has so ably and fully covered this in his recent speech upon this subject in the House of Representatives that I shall content myself by simply calling attention to the fact that none of our great Presidents ever conceded this power, and that all of them have challenged and resisted it when it was either asserted or exercised by the Court during their respective administrations.

I feel sure, however, that it is unnecessary for me to defend myself before this body against any such charge, and that those here today will understand that I am not attacking the Supreme Court nor the Constitution. On the contrary, no one as a lawyer more fully recognizes than I the character and ability typified by the membership of the Supreme Court, not only now but generally throughout our history, as well as the usefulness and necessity of the Supreme Court in our dual scheme of government. It is my purpose to add to, not to detract from, the usefulness of the Court, and the respect that should be given to it by our people. I am trying to help preserve the Court and preserve our present form of National Government. I do not agree, however, at all with those who falsely or foolishly represent that there is anything so sacred about the Supreme Court as to make it immune to constructive criticism, or anything so immutable about each and every part of the Constitution as to condemn those of us who suggest changes—either in the form of the instrument or a broader construction of some of its provisions, either of which may be found to be necessary to meet the changed conditions of modern times.

Jefferson said that the people must from time to time "be attentive to amendments to the Constitution to make it keep pace with the advances of the age in science and experience." He added that if reformation, adding to the powers of the Government, be resisted, it is to be expected that the people will "undertake it themselves by force, their only weapon, and work it out through blood, desolation, and long-continued anarchy" (Sun Dial Letters 279, 138; S. Works 144).

So much for those who now call themselves "Jeffersonians", whether they are Democrats or Republicans, and who would have you believe that Jefferson opposed such extension of the national powers as might be found necessary in changing times to keep pace with changing conditions.

My first point, as stated above, is that the Supreme Court has no power, either under the expressed or implied powers of the Constitution, to adjudge unconstitutional a law passed by the legislative branch, the Congress; or, in any suit between private litigants, to pass upon the constitutionality thereof.

That the power of judicial nullification is conferred in language in the Constitution itself, no one of reputation as a lawyer, as a student of our Government and its origin will dare publicly assert, and if anyone so asserts, ask him to point out to you that part of the Constitution which either in words, or impliedly, confers upon the judicial branch of the Government power to override the legislative and, as in most cases, the executive branch of the Government. So much for the expressed power.

That I am right about this is as demonstrable as any mathematical proposition and requires only an examination of the Constitution itself.

It is equally demonstrable that no such power to the Supreme Court is implied in the Constitution or was so intended by the makers thereof or was understood by the Thirteen Original States when in their several conventions they ratified the Constitution and entered into the Federal Union.

Now, as to the intention of the framers of the Constitution:

Our Federal Constitution, in the form in which it was submitted to the 13 States, was prepared in the Constitutional Convention of 1787. That Convention, composed of delegates from 11 of the Original States, carefully and during its many weeks of deliberation, considered among other things as one of its most important questions what check or safeguard, if any, should be provided against the passage of laws by the legislative branch of the Federal Government that were beyond the Federal powers. Various measures were from time to time proposed, some of which were brought to a vote in the Convention.

The plan to give the judicial branch alone the power to override a law passed by the legislative branch, thereby making the act of the legislative branch (approved by the executive branch as was finally decided upon in the Convention) a nullity was never, in that Convention, seriously enough considered as to bring it to a vote. After much discussion of this question it was proposed in a resolution that a council of revision should be established for the purpose of passing upon the constitutionality of laws passed by Congress. This council of revision was to be composed of the members of the judicial branch when established (now the Supreme Court) and the executive branch (now the President); in other words, to annul a law passed by Congress the concurrence was necessary, not of the Court alone, but also of the President.

This was the only proposal looking to a judicial veto that was even brought to vote by the framers of our Constitution. It was also proposed in the same resolution that in the event a law passed by Congress was decided by such council of revision to be unconstitutional that the Congress might then repass the law by a two-thirds majority of each of the branches thereof, if either the members of the judiciary or the executive disapproved, and by a three-fourths majority if both the members of the judiciary and the executive disapproved. This resolution, a much more guarded and less drastic form of judicial veto or nullification by the Court than now employed, was rejected by the convention by a vote of 8 States to 2 in favor of the Executive veto. (Madison's Notes on the Convention. Haines Doctrine of Judicial Supremacy, p. 144.)

In short, the framers of the Constitution relied in the Constitution which they presented to the Thirteen States upon the method of the well-known, so-called "checks and balances", whereby each of the two branches of Congress should be a check upon the other, both as to hasty or unwise action and also as to unconstitutionality, and whereby the Executive, the President, through his veto power, should have a check upon both. No judicial check upon unconstitutional action by the legislative branch was submitted or intended.

The advocates of judicial nullification, however, make the historical argument of long-time acquiescence and rely in effect not upon a written but upon an unwritten constitution. Relying upon the saying that the law is what the judges say it is, they go back to Chief Justice Marshall's opinion in Marbury v. Madison (1 Cranch 137), decided in 1803. They rely upon the oft-repeated statement that Marshall here asserted the power of judicial veto, and that it has never since been disputed. This case merely involved the appointment of a justice of the peace of the District of Columbia and did not, except so far as the jurisdiction of the Court was concerned, involve the constitutionality of an act of Congress. That part of Marshall's opinion in which he went out of his way to declare that the Supreme Court had the power to annul an act of Congress as being unconstitutional was pure dictum. There was no opportunity to challenge or contradict Marshall's statement except to say that it was unfounded, which Jefferson, then President, most pointedly did.

My second point, as stated above, is that the exercise or assumption of such power by the Supreme Court or other Federal courts is not only unnecessary in our system of government, but it is also positively harmful, and its continued assumption and exercise in these times constitutes a danger to our form of government and our economic system such as may at any time cause them to break down.

The power of judicial nullification was never again attempted to be exercised against any act of Congress of general application until the well-known Dred Scott decision of 1857, when the Supreme Court decided that the Missouri Compromise Act of 1820 was unconstitutional, an act which had been in effect for 37 years and in which Congress had provided that all other territory north of the southern boundary of Missouri should be kept free. The Missouri Compromise, it will be remembered, was an act passed by Congress, in carrying out a compromise entered into by Representatives in Congress from the free States and the slave States, and as between those who were opposed to the further extension of slavery into territory to be organized into States and those who did not wish at that time to have the institution of slavery interfered with. This act was passed by Congress to "insure domestic tranquillity" by preserving the Union from dissension and disseverance over the question of the extension of slavery.

This decision of the Supreme Court unnecessarily deciding an act of Congress unconstitutional, an act which had been in effect 37 years and which had been passed by Congress, to preserve the Union, in the judgment of most students of history, did more to bring on our great unnecessary Civil War than all other causes combined. None of the Southern States—no one of our sovereign States repudiated this agreement.

I venture to say that no one of the then slave States would have sought to withdraw from the agreement entered into between the two sections in 1820 in the Missouri Compromise Act. As has so frequently occurred since that time, and in recent times in our history—with great disaster to our people—it was in a suit between private litigants that this decision was made. It remained for the Supreme Court, in a political decision, unnecessarily to cause this great evil. Most students of history agree that except for the Dred Scott decision of 1857 our terrible and disastrous Civil War would never have ensued, and that the institution of slavery would gradually but eventually have fallen by its own weight.

Of this decision Abraham Lincoln said: "Somebody has to reverse that decision, and we mean to reverse it. If the policy of the Government upon vital questions affecting the whole people is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court—in ordinary litigation between parties in personal actions, the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned their Government into the hands of that eminent tribunal. Why should there not be a patient confidence in the ultimate justice of the people? Is there any better or equal hope in the world?"

The storm of criticism following upon the Supreme Court's Dred Scott decision, as well as the Civil War as a result thereof, kept the Supreme Court from again asserting the power of judicial veto until the Legal Tender cases in 1870. The United States in order to finance the Civil War, caused in large part by the decision of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott decision, had, by act of Congress, made the notes of the Government legal tender.

In a private suit in 1870 the Court declared the Legal Tender Act of Congress unconstitutional. Grant was President, and he not only challenged the power of the Court but he filled up the Supreme Court—i. e., "stacked" it, so to speak—so that the Court in the same year reversed itself and declared the Legal Tender Act of Congress unconstitutional. Had this decision of the Supreme Court been made during the war and been acquiesced in by the executive and legislative branches of the Government, it would have rendered the Government impotent and helpless to preserve the Union from disseverance.

In the income-tax decision of 1894 the Supreme Court for a third time adjudged an act of Congress unconstitutional, and again in making its decision exercised a legislative rather than a judicial function. Mr. Justice Field, in writing for the Court in that decision, said: "It discriminates between those who receive an income of $4,000 and those who do not; * * * whenever such a distinction is made and the law imposes a tax under it, * * * it is class legislation * * *." That there was a difference between the levy of a 5-percent tax on the income of a man receiving $4,000 or more a year and upon another man having an income scarcely large enough to furnish his family with the barest necessities of life, never occurred to the distinguished member of the Supreme Court who wrote the opinion. This decision was cured by constitutional amendment. The two former decisions of which I spoke had been cured, one by the Civil War and the other by the Court's reversal of its own decision.

The Supreme Court later (in 1906) by a 5 to 4 decision adjudged the Federal Employer's Liability Act, passed by Congress, as unconstitutional. When, sometime afterward, Congress reenacted this law, it was sustained by the Supreme Court. But in the interval there were some thousands of men killed or maimed and they or their families left without remedy through the doubtful exercise of what the Supreme Court itself declared to be its power.

In decisions during the past three decades the Supreme Court has much more frequently than during the first hundred years of our history asserted its power to nullify acts of Congress. The majority of the Court has been usually extremely zealous in safeguarding property and has, in fact, stretched the "due-process" clause extremely thin in order to safeguard property against the revenue acts passed by Congress, and in its construction of the "due-process" clause has been extremely solicitous of the right of freedom of contract in decisions involving the right of parents to sell the labor of their children, and generally in denying the power of Congress to protect women, children, and labor in general as to minimum wages and maximum hours, and has more frequently asserted and exercised the power of judicial veto.

Time does not permit me to discuss these instances in detail.

Now, I am going to be so bold as to make the statement that during the entire period of time from the first exercise of this assumed and unconstitutional power of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scot case in 1857 down to its recent decisions in the present year, in which the Court has exercised its power of nullifying acts of Congress, it will be found that in each of these the judges were exercising not a judicial function but a legislative or a sociological function.

I shall not expand this further for lack of time and also by reason of the fact that my esteemed colleague, at whose feet I have sat as a student of this subject, and whose greater research I must concede, Congressman DAVID J. LEWIS, of Maryland, who will speak to you tomorrow, will present this phase of the subject by facts and arguments which I believe are unanswerable. I am also going to be bold enough to make this assertion: That in none of the cases wherein the Supreme Court has exercised the power of judicial nullification—from the Dred Scott decision of 1857 down to its decisions of the current year—has the Court really safeguarded either the rights of the people or the rights of the States. On the contrary, it has caused such a derangement of the functions of the Government itself as have in some instances required curing either by constitutional amendment or by a reversal by the Court of its own decisions. Again let me say I am not attacking the Court either as an institution or as to its membership. The Court, during all this time, has been simply upholding the principle of stare decisis, and has been bound up in its own precedents, as Congressman LEWIS will ably demonstrate.

In support of my second point that this power is unnecessary, and is not only unnecessary, but is harmful to our scheme of government, I should like to give you the results of a comparative study of other governments, did not the limits of this address forbid. I should feel, however, that this very cursory treatment of a subject which is deserving of the most careful consideration, would be inconclusive and ineffective in pointing to an ultimate objective or remedy if I failed to direct your attention to the fact that now, even more than ever before in our history, does the assumption of this power on the part of the Court, or the threat of its exercise at the instance of private litigants, create an anomalous and unbearable condition in our Government.

It may be urged by some that the recent decision of the Court in the Schechter case, wherein the N. R. A. was, in effect, adjudged unconstitutional, was of constructive service. It may, I think, be conceded without harm to my argument that the N. R. A. was too hastily put together and that some of its provisions were unworkable. Its codes extended to certain businesses and trades in which enforcement was either too difficult or impossible. When that act was passed the economic system of the country was on the verge of collapse. It was not beyond the bounds of possibility or of danger that the flames of revolution might sweep over us. When a fire has been started and is about to spread damage is sometimes caused to property by the fire department in quenching the fire. The Recovery Act needed to be revamped and this would have been done. I believe the Court, in the limitations placed upon interstate commerce in its decision, went much too far.

The Court recently adjudged the Railroad Retirement Act as unconstitutional. Language employed in such recent decisions of the Court threatens that the Social Security Act and other legislation—some pending and some passed by the Seventy-third Congress—will also receive the condemnation of the Court. All of these acts, such as the Railroad Retirement Act—all of the legislation now proposed and pending, such as the Social Security Act—are exercises on the part of the law-making branch of the Government of powers long exercised in other countries of the world. England, Germany, most of the self-governing dominions of Great Britain, have long carried out these purposes as functions of government, and have built up thereby bulwarks against economic insecurity and economic waste and loss.

That an act may be passed by the Congress, representing the sovereign will of a sovereign people, approved by the Executive, also representing all of the people, that men may order their businesses and their lives, make their contracts and engagements under such law for years, only to have it stricken down years later by the assumed unconstitutional exercise of power by an appointive judiciary, is, I say, an anomalous and unbearable state of affairs and one wherein we fall short of the ability to exercise the sovereign powers of a nation.

It may not always be easy to draw the line between the State powers and the national powers. I am as much of a believer in State rights as anyone. But there must be no gap between the State powers and the National powers. What concerns a single State alone within its own borders; what does not affect the rights, the interests, the well-being of the people of other States; what the State may control by its government, those things are within the powers of the States, and the National Government has no duty or right to step in. What does not fall within the limits which I have stated of the State powers, and is necessary for the general welfare of the people, must be within the national powers, exercised by the will of the people working through their elected representatives, the legislative and executive branches of the Government.

No further argument can possibly be needed to prove that the Constitution does not give, either expressly or impliedly, the power to the Supreme Court to nullify statutes passed by Congress, nor to pass upon their validity in an action between private litigants. It is easy to go further and show that this power was specifically denied.

Article III of the Constitution provides for the Federal judiciary and prescribes the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Let me call your attention again to the second paragraph of section 2 of article III:

"In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions, and under such regulations as the Congress shall make."

The above paragraph prescribes the whole original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. The appellate jurisdiction is, as set forth, in such paragraph left to Congress to prescribe.

Of course, nowhere is any power given to any of the lower Federal courts to pass upon the constitutionality of an act of Congress.

If the convention had intended to give this power to the Supreme Court, apt words would, under every rule of construction applying thereto, have been used to effect such grant.

The Constitution does give the Supreme Court by article III appellate jurisdiction to pass upon the question as to whether acts passed by the legislature of a State are in conflict with the Federal Constitution.

This power is, of course, expressly granted and is necessary in our dual scheme of government to prevent a conflict between legislative acts.

In my opinion, the practice of State courts in invalidating statutes passed by the legislature thereof or passing upon the question as to whether acts of State legislatures are within the powers of such legislature, as expressed in the constitution of the State, is to be condemned. The legislature is the supreme law-making body of the State and represents the sovereign will of a sovereign people.

Needless to say, the lower Federal courts have no power under the Constitution to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress, and this should at once be expressly declared by an act of Congress.

Congressman LEWIS who will speak to you tomorrow will, I understand, discuss the welfare clause of the Constitution. But to afford at least an introduction to his argument, as well as a basis for discussion today, let me say that this clause was not thrown into the Constitution as a meaningless phrase. Madison admitted that the welfare clause gave the Federal Government "a fund of power inexhaustible and wholly subversive of the equilibrium between the General and State Governments", and "all within reach of the former."

It was intended by this clause to make the Federal Government a Government of sovereign powers and able to do those things which every sovereign government must do in order to secure the safety and happiness of its citizens.

It is fitting that this discussion of what properly belongs to the national powers should be presented in Virginia, and I hope that there are some Virginians here today to consider this subject. I speak in full appreciation of the fact that we are not far from a shrine of all true Americans, where Jefferson, statesman, philosopher, and sage, so long lived, struggled, and thought. And I would remind those who cite Jefferson as an advocate of the rights of the States and who think that ends the argument that his highest aim was to secure and safeguard the rights of the people and to secure their welfare and happiness, and that if he found it necessary to effect that purpose, he would have been among the first—as he was when he did so find it necessary—to advocate an extension of the national powers sufficiently so that there should not be a no-man's land between the national powers and the State powers wherein the people might be exploited, or their dignity, happiness, and security jeopardized.

I said that this ought expressly to appeal to Virginians; because when the Virginia delegation to the Convention of 1787 arrived in Philadelphia, they came a little ahead of most of the others. That delegation was headed by Washington and included Madison, Randolph, and Mason, and that delegation prepared an outline of a plan for our National Government for discussion in the Convention, and, item by item, that plan was acted upon. As showing the power the Virginia plan proposed to confer upon Congress, I quote the following from the plan itself:

"To enjoy the legislative rights vested in Congress by the Confederation; moreover to legislate in all cases to which the separate States are incompetent, or in which the harmony of the United States may be interrupted by the exercise of individual legislation; and to negative all laws passed by the several States, contravening in the opinion of the National Legislature the articles of union."

In order finally to effectuate the purpose of this plan the welfare clause was placed in the Constitution itself.

To those who contend that it is unsafe to intrust a general power without check by an umpire, such as the Supreme Court, as a guard against the exceeding of constitutional limits, if they need authorities, I refer them again to Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, and the others of our great Presidents. That a power may be abused is no reason for its denial; and where, again, to paraphrase the words of Lincoln, can power be more safely lodged than in the representatives of the people, who, by their ballots, may speedily correct the abuse of its exercise. In the case of the abuse of this power by the law-making body, the people may correct it at the next election. In the case of a denial, a curtailment of a power necessary to the general welfare by this assumed unconstitutional usurpation by the Supreme Court, usually only death of a sufficient number of the members thereof can correct it.

The surest way to destroy the Constitution—our present form of government—is to give it such a rigid construction, at the same time not recognizing the general-welfare clause, as to make it too narrow and inflexible to meet modern needs. It is an old trick of the reactionaries, of those who have long fattened on special privilege, to arrogate to themselves the sole responsibility of defending established forms such as the Constitution. They profess great fear that those who would show that the Constitution is flexible enough to meet modern needs, if rightly interpreted, may elope with our beloved Constitution, while all the while they are endeavoring to keep her shackled and confined in a dungeon.

The power of judicial nullification was, at the time of the making of the Constitution, unknown among the governments of the world, then or formerly existing. Had it been the intention of the makers to grant this power to a court to nullify the acts of the law-making body, to include that in the jurisdiction of the Court, it is unthinkable that they would not have clearly and positively expressed it in language that would have been unmistakable.

"Every well-organized government has political power to provide for the general welfare of its own people" (Lawson on the general-welfare clause).

It would be strange, if it were true, that a representative democracy such as ours is less well equipped with power to provide for the general welfare than an autocracy or an oligarchy. The Parliament of England was not then, and has not been since, and is not now, subject to such limitation; and this is not, as the advocates of judicial nullification contend, because England has no written constitution, but rather because every act of Parliament becomes a part of her constitution.

Did the framers of our Government believe that they, our people—do you believe that our people now are not to be trusted to govern themselves? Yet the argument of those who claim the existence of a constitutional sanction for judicial nullification presupposes just this. And so with those who contend that the judicial nullification or veto is necessary in our system of government.

"The argument from the possible abuse of a power against its existence or use is, in its nature, not only perilous, but, in respect to governments, would shake their very foundations." (Story's Commentaries, p. 425.)

In summary, I stand upon the following propositions, which I believe the majority of the Congress will sustain and which I believe a majority of our people will uphold when informed upon these propositions:

1. That the exercise by the Supreme Court in any suit of the power to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional, whether between private parties or otherwise, is in itself not warranted by any power conferred in the Constitution, either expressed or implied; and, therefore, such power does not legally exist under our Constitution or scheme of government.

2. That the power of judicial veto is not necessary in our scheme of government and ought not to exist.

3. That its exercise by the Supreme Court has resulted not in protecting the States or the people in their rights, but, on the contrary, has been harmful to our scheme of government and has lessened the respect of our people for their Government and Constitution and their support thereof.

4. That the remedy is that together with whatever necessary amendments clarifying the welfare clause of the Constitution or extending the national powers where needed to meet the conditions of modern times, there should be a restatement by an act of Congress of its own legislative powers, as well as of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court with respect to its power to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of the legislative branch of the Government.

I have appended at the end of this paper a brief bibliography of the sources from which I have drawn and to which I direct your attention. Most important of all, I wish to make my most grateful acknowledgments to my colleague, Representative DAVID J. LEWIS, of Maryland, and point your attention to his discussion of the welfare clause of the Constitution, which even more clearly points you to the remedy. Congressman LEWIS' address to you and his very able speech in the House of Representatives on this subject under date of June 29, 1935, printed copies of which are available and which I am sure he will be glad to furnish, in my opinion so supplement my much briefer and more cursory argument as, that taken together, they clearly prove that our Federal Constitution, the noblest instrument of government ever conceived by the mind of man, is, when properly construed, as adequate to meet the needs of government today as it was when first ratified by the original Thirteen States.

On May 31 I introduced in the House of Representatives a resolution calling for an investigation of the legislative powers of Congress and involving therein the question of the power of the Supreme Court to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress. This resolution is House Resolution 234. It has been referred to the Rules Committee, and I trust it will be reported to the House during this present session of Congress. A copy of this resolution will be furnished by me upon request to anyone who is interested or can be procured from your Member of Congress.

UTILITY HOLDING-COMPANY BILL

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, the other day I read into the RECORD a letter which I had written to Hon. Joseph P. Kennedy, Chairman of Securities and Exchange Commission, with reference to the public-utility holding-company bill.

I have received a reply from Mr. Kennedy. In justice to him, his reply ought to be made a part of the RECORD, and I am, therefore, asking to extend my remarks by including it, and also my response to him of even date.

I trust that this correspondence may be helpful to those interested in understanding the points of difference between the House and Senate drafts with respect to section 11.

I have the highest regard for Mr. Kennedy. He is doing a splendid job with reference to the Securities Act of 1933. Under the intelligent administration which he and the other members of this Commission are giving to that act, holding companies which exist only to sell securities based on fictitious values are going to die of financial malnutrition. It has been my judgment that the Securities Act, wisely administered, will in itself make the recurrence of many of the abuses in the public-utilities field impossible. Of course, the Securities Act covers only the issuance of securities. Other abuses, such as excessive profits on intercompany transactions, not arrived at by virtue of arm's length bargaining, will be eradicated under the bill as it passed the House, which is probably the most drastic regulatory bill which has ever passed the House of Representatives.

The correspondence is as follows:

JULY 12, 1935.

MY DEAR MR. PETTENGILL: Your letter of July 10 regarding my communication with Senator WHEELER is at hand.

When Senator WHEELER requested an expression of my views on certain phases of the House bill I purposely refrained from expressing any opinion on the issues of legislative policy between the House and the Senate. Rather did my letter confine itself strictly to the practical problems of administration in three phases of the House bill.

You state that I was entirely inaccurate in saying "the phrase 'public interest' is not defined and the bill furnishes no effective standard." Let me quote you my exact words. Speaking of the Commission's task under section 11 of limiting the operations of holding companies to such numbers of integrated public-utility systems as are in the public interest, I wrote: "The phrase 'public interest' is not defined in the House bill. Thus this bill furnishes no effective standard to guide the Commission in the momentous decisions it must make as to which of the holding-company systems are to be broken up and how such process is to be effected."

After a very careful reconsideration of the House bill in the light of your letter, I am bound to adhere to my original conclusion.

In support of your contention that my statement was incorrect, you rely upon the provisions of section 1, particularly sections 1 (a) and 1 (b) and 1 (c) (referred to in your letter as subsection (6)). Let me deal with these seriatim.

(1) I am unable to comprehend in what respect section 1 (a) can be held to define "public interest" so as to furnish a standard for administering section 11. Section 1 (a) merely discloses that public-utility holding companies and their subsidiaries are affected with a national public interest because, among other things, their securities are widely distributed and their service and other contracts are performed through the mails and instrumentalities of interstate commerce and their practices affect interstate commerce and make effective State regulation impossible. It is hardly sensible to urge that a congressional declaration that a business is affected with a public interest is equivalent to a definition of the public interest which should guide the Commission in permitting or prohibiting the continuing of existent holding-company systems.

(2) Section 1 (b) declares that in view of the disclosures in the investigations conducted by the Federal Trade Commission and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the national public interest and the interest of investors and consumers may be adversely affected by abuses of the holding-company systems as set forth in five subparagraphs. This recital of abuses will be helpful in determining the nature and scope of the rules and regulations which the Commission is authorized to make in order to correct abuses within limited and specified fields. But no definition of "public interest" can be drawn from these abuses which will afford to the Commission any effective standard for determining the fundamental economic policy as to the number of integrated systems a holding company should be allowed to retain.

(3) Section 1 (c) declares that when the abuses enumerated in 1 (b) become widespread the holding company, unless regulated, becomes injurious to investors, consumers and the general public. A general policy is stated interpreting the whole act to prevent these adverse effects and to eliminate the abuses of public-utility holding-company systems. But this declaration gives the Commission no practical assistance in deciding the particular problems under section 11. There is nothing in the language to which you have referred me or, for that matter, in the whole House bill which can guide the Commission in determining whether the public interest requires that a given holding-company system should embrace 1 or 10 public-utility systems.

Because of the above considerations and your failure to point out that the bill furnishes an effective standard or a definition of "public interest" for the application of section 11, I must insist, sir, that my statements to Senator WHEELER were entirely accurate.

In view of the publicity you have given your letter I assume, of course, you will be good enough to read my reply in the House.

Respectfully yours,

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY, Chairman.

Hon. SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

JULY 15, 1935.

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY,
Chairman Securities and Exchange Commission,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. KENNEDY: I have your letter of July 12 written in response to my letter to you of July 10, with reference to your letter to Senator WHEELER criticizing the public-utility bill as passed by the House.

I have such a high regard for you and the splendid job you are doing that it is unpleasant for me to differ with you on this matter. I do so only in justice to our committee, who worked so tirelessly with a complex and difficult problem, and to the Members of the House who approved and ratified our work.

The issues are of great importance to the country. It is only to make more clear the differences that exist between the House and the Senate bills that justifies my writing you again.

You say the House bill furnishes "no effective standard to guide the Commission", etc. In my letter of the 10th I say that if "better standards can be defined I would welcome them."

If the emphasis is only on the adjective "effective" there does not seem much to warrant a reply from me on this point, for it is readily admitted that you have a perfect right to your opinion as to the "effectiveness" of the standard.

But when you go to the country with the flat statement that "the phrase 'public interest' is not defined in the House bill" and therefore express your "vehement" opinion that section 11 is "most unfortunate", I am bound to disagree. Section 1 (b), together with subsection (c) of the same section, is clearly in substance and legal effect a definition of the public interest. This definition may not fill your specifications of what it should be, but that there is "no" definition is, I repeat again, "entirely inaccurate."

Surely you do not require some copybook clause as, "The term 'public interest' is defined to mean," etc., or insist that a definition is only a definition if it appears in the section bearing the caption "Definitions."

Nor do I assume that you would require such standards for administrative action as the legislative fiat, "All holding companies shall be liquidated and the Commission shall execute this mandate", or "all holding companies beyond the first degree shall surrender their charters", or "Company ABC shall keep subsidiary companies D and E and sell companies F and G", or "Company MNO shall be dissolved and Company XYZ shall not be dissolved."

Such legislative standards would be "effective", but they would not be intelligent. One holding-company system in the second degree might be operated honestly and efficiently in the public interest, yet be decreed to die; and another company in the first degree be commuted for life, however dishonest and inefficient.

"Off with their heads" might be a boon to commissions, but death to investors, consumers, and employees.

The question is really whether Congress is capable of setting up definitions and standards of intelligent discrimination between what serves the public and what exploits the public.

So let us explore the bill once more for definitions and standards of the public interest.

It is an axiom of the law that courts and administrative agencies will examine the "four corners" of an act to ascertain the legislative will. For example, Chief Justice Hughes recently said, "We examine the context to ascertain if it furnishes a declaration of policy or a standard of action which can be deemed to relate to (a certain section) and thus to imply what is not there expressed." And in the same case Justice Cardozo wrote: "I deny that such a standard is lacking * * * where the act with all its reasonable implications is considered as a whole." (Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan, 293 U. S. 388, the "hot oil" case). Laws are interpreted in the light of the evils sought to be remedied.

In the original draft, in the Senate redraft, and in the House redraft the phrase "necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the interest of investors or consumers" appears with almost wave-length frequency. Yet definitions are not attached to each of these phrases whenever they appear, whether in section 11 or elsewhere, nor do I suppose you require that to be done.

So what is the "public interest"? It is to be found by reading the entire bill, the legislative hearings and report, the hearings and report of the Federal Trade Commission, etc., and particularly by reading section 1 of the House bill, to which I have already referred. Of that section, subsection (b), (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), and subsection (c) are most important.

So that those who may care to read our correspondence may follow this discussion more intelligently, I am attaching these sections as a postscript.

Let us now examine your letter in the light of these provisions of the House bill.

You say with respect to these provisions, "This recital of abuses will be helpful in determining the nature and scope of the rules and regulations which the Commission is authorized to make in order to correct abuses within limited and specified fields."

It is clear to me that in saying this you admit that you are wrong in stating "the phrase 'public interest' is not defined in the House bill", because your statement is an admission that the "public interest" is defined for the purposes of the provisions under authority of which the rules and regulations to which you refer are to be made. And by reason of section 1 (c), if it is defined for those provisions it is defined for section 11.

It may be that you intended to say that the legislative policy thus declared would be "helpful" to the Commission in determining the rules and regulations to be prescribed with respect to the dozens of cases where the term "in the public interest" appears, but would not be "helpful" in section 11 where the term "in the public interest" also appears.

But, if so, is your position tenable?

Does not section 11 (b) of the House bill, the provision in question, operate in a limited and specified field, even though the problems are admittedly difficult? The field apparently is limited and specific enough so that those who wrote section 11 of the Senate bill felt able to determine that a holding-company system should be limited to some geographically and economically integrated public-utility system, and it seems reasonable to suppose that a competent administrator, like yourself, could form an intelligent judgment on the problems involved when guided by principles laid down by Congress.

Section 11 makes it the duty of the Commission after notice and hearing (a day in court to act on the merits of each case rather than an arbitrary sentence of death irrespective of the merits) to "limit the operations of the holding-company system. * * * to a single integrated public-utility system" (which is carefully defined in sec. 2) "except that if the Commission finds that it is not necessary in the public interest to so limit the operations of such holding-company system" the Commission shall take such action as it finds necessary "consistently with the public interest", etc.

Admitting that the problem involved in section 11 in any case may be difficult, nevertheless, in determining what is in the public interest, it seems to me that it would be at least "helpful" to the Commission to go back to the legislative policy set forth in section I (b) and read again such phrases as refer to the difficulty to appraise earning power, absence of uniform standard accounts, issuance of securities on fictitious values, paper profits from intercompany transactions, excessive charges, absence of arm's length bargaining, absence of free competition, difficulty in allocating charges, difficulty of effective State regulation, control through disproportionately small investments (pyramiding), absence of economies in management, adequacy of service, etc.

It is very much to be regretted that the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee did not have the benefit of your valued criticisms until the House bill was before the Senate for action.

As you have now, however, at the invitation of Senator WHEELER, criticized the House bill "vehemently", I make you a sporting and good-faith invitation to act constructively in the matter.

Assuming that the "off with their heads" doctrine is not to prevail, will you be good enough, with the help of your counsel, to prepare a definition of the "public interest" and declaration of "effective" standards which, in your judgment, should be incorporated in the bill, and send copies to the conferees?

As I said in my first letter to you, "if better definitions of the public interest can be drawn and better standards can be defined, I would welcome them."

It is easy to criticize; hard to construct. In your reply you offer nothing constructive.

I now invite you to do so. I do so in justice to our committee and the House of Representatives.

With the highest personal regards, I am,

Very respectfully yours,

SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL,
Member of Congress.

Postscript: Section 1. (b) Upon the basis of facts disclosed by the reports of the Federal Trade Commission made pursuant to Senate Resolution 83 (70th Cong., 1st sess.), the reports of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, made pursuant to House Resolution 59 (72d Cong., 1st sess.) and House Joint Resolution 572 (72d Cong., 2d sess.) and otherwise disclosed and ascertained, it is hereby declared that the national public interest, the interest of investors in the securities of holding companies and their subsidiary companies and affiliates, and the interest of consumers of electric energy and natural and manufactured gas, are or may be adversely affected—

(1) when such investors cannot obtain the information necessary to appraise the financial position or earning power of the issuers, because of the absence of uniform standard accounts, when such securities are issued without the approval or consent of the States having jurisdiction over subsidiary public-utility companies; when such securities are issued upon the basis of fictitious or unsound asset values and of paper profits from intercompany transactions, or in anticipation of excessive revenues from subsidiary public-utility companies; when such securities are issued by a subsidiary public-utility company under circumstances which subject such company to the burden of supporting an overcapitalized structure and tend to prevent voluntary rate reductions;

(2) when subsidiary public-utility companies are subjected to excessive charges for services, construction work, equipment, and materials, or enter into transactions in which evils result from an absence of arm's length bargaining or from restraint of free and independent competition; when service, management, construction, and other contracts involve the allocation of charges among subsidiary public-utility companies in different States so as to present problems of regulation which cannot be dealt with effectively by the States;

(3) when control of subsidiary public-utility companies affects the accounting practices and rate, dividend, and other policies of such companies so as to complicate and obstruct State regulation of such companies, or when control of such companies is exerted through disproportionately small investment;

(4) when the growth and extension of holding companies bear no relation to economy of management and operation or the integration and coordination of related operating properties; or

(5) when in any other respect there is lack of economy of management and operation of public-utility companies or lack of efficiency and adequacy of service rendered by such companies, or lack of effective public regulation, or lack of economies in the raising of capital.

(c) When abuses of the character above enumerated become persistent and wide-spread the holding company becomes an agency which, unless regulated, is injurious to investors, consumers, and the general public; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of this title, in accordance with which policy all the provisions of this title shall be interpreted, to prevent the adverse effect upon the public interest and the interest of investors and consumers referred to in subsection (b), and to meet the problems and to eliminate the abuses connected with public-utility holding-company systems.

THE LOBBY INVESTIGATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, when I was testifying before the Rules Committee this morning on the lobby investigation one of the members of the committee asked me if I had any suggestions as to how they should proceed with the investigation.

Since this will probably be one of the most important investigations ever made by a committee of either the House or the Senate, and fraught with the most far-reaching consequences, I am going to suggest here a line of procedure that should be followed by both the House and the Senate investigating committees.

First. Every Member of the House and of the Senate should be invited or summoned to appear and testify on oath on the following points:

(a) As to whether or not he has been approached by any utility lobbyist or lobbyists, and if so, he should give the name or names of said lobbyists.

(b) He should be compelled to tell how much stock he or members of his immediate family own in any of these utilities, including holding companies of all kinds.

(c) Whether or not he represents any of these utilities as agent or attorney, or is a member of a firm that represents any of them, in any capacity; whether or not any member of his immediate family represents any utilities in any capacity.

(d) Whether or not he has been employed, within the last 2 years, to represent any of these utilities as agent or attorney, or has received pay from them for making speeches on the radio or elsewhere.

(e) Whether or not any utilities have written any speeches for him or her, or furnished material from which speeches have been prepared.

(f) And to furnish the committee with such evidence as he or she may have of any fraud, corruption, coercion, or other misconduct on the part of utility companies or holding companies to effect legislation pending before Congress.

Members of the House and Senate should not object to giving this information, if they are in the clear. If they are not in the clear, Congress and the country ought to know about it.

Second. The committee should subpena the utility companies shown to be involved in this lobby and compel them to produce their records, in order to ascertain just what moneys have been spent and what influences have been exerted to try to influence pending legislation; and should, if necessary, subpena telegraph companies and compel them to show who paid for the hundreds of thousands of telegrams that poured into the offices of Members of the House and Senate, who signed those telegrams, and by what authority. They should also summon the officials of these utilities, put them on the stand, and make them testify under oath as to the moneys expended and other influences exerted in order to try to influence pending legislation.

They should be required to testify and to submit their records to show the amount of money spent on newspapers, magazines, and other publications, as well as radio addresses and platform speeches.

In my opinion, they will in this way uncover the greatest slush fund, as well as the greatest saturnalia of fraud, corruption, and deceit ever known in a campaign of this kind.

Third. They should send a questionnaire to every newspaper and magazine in the country, and require the owner or editor to state on oath exactly who owns the publication, and whether or not any utility or any officer or director, attorney or agent, of any of these utilities own any interest in said newspaper or magazine.

They should also be compelled to state on oath how much stock, if any, the editor, manager, or any officer or director of said newspaper or magazine owns in any utility company, or what interest the members of their families own in any utility company. They should also be required to show on oath, what moneys have been received from any utility company for advertising or for other purposes within the last 2 years, by whom that money was paid, and for what purpose it was paid.

We ask for and demand a free press in this country, and yet the Power Trust owns or controls some newspapers in every State in the Union, some of which deliberately distort the news, deceive the public with misleading headlines or with editorials written by or at the request of these utilities. The honest newspaper or magazine publisher who is in the clear will be glad to give this information, and the others should be compelled to do so, in order that their readers may know whom those publishers serve.

Every advertising agency that assisted in this campaign of propaganda should be thoroughly investigated.

Mr. Speaker, this is the battle of the century.

It is one that affects every human being in America. The ultimate consumers of electric lights and power are being overcharged approximately $1,000,000,000 a year to feed this enormous octopus known as the "Power Trust."

Thousands of innocent investors, old men and old women whose earning days have passed, helpless widows and orphans, trusting and unsuspecting citizens who had managed to save up a few dollars—these people have been robbed and plundered by the sale of these watered stocks in the most cruel, conscienceless, and inhuman manner.

Officials have been corrupted, elections bought or stolen, legislatures have been dominated, Governors have been controlled, Senators have been influenced, Congressmen intimidated, and the President threatened by this consciousless, corrupt supergovernment, this insatiable octopus that is reaching into every State of the Union, into every county, into every municipality, and into every home, and sucking the economic lifeblood from the American people, in order that it may carry on its damnable practices and go unwhipped of justice.

The American people, by the millions, are looking to Congress with outstretched hands, appealing to us for relief. We have it in our power to give that relief, and it will be given if the members of these committees do their duty in making a thorough, full, and complete investigation.

We must not fail!

WHEAT

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, the wheat-growing sections of the United States face a rather serious situation. They have an estimated crop of 731,000,000 bushels, a domestic consumption of six hundred and some million bushels, and an expected surplus of over 100,000,000 bushels.

An attack is being made upon efforts of the Government to bring the price to the farmer of wheat to parity. The processing tax may be set aside. We have pending in the Senate a House provision to appropriate $100,000,000 to assist in the disposition of surplus farm products. The price of wheat under the pressure of the present surplus is going down. The purchasing power of the farmer is still 20 percent below what it ought to be, and it may go lower. This is a situation that should challenge our most thoughtful consideration. If the farmer loses his purchasing power, the city factories cannot operate. Wheat is the chief cash-money crop of many farmers. Our problem is to see that these wheat producers get a fair return for their crop.

A number of Virginia newspapers carried a statement from me in their issue of July 15 urging Virginia wheat growers to sign wheat contracts and stating that the deadline was July 17. Investigation at the Department of Agriculture discloses that this deadline, which was announced by compliance agents in at least one Virginia county was arbitrarily fixed by them. The matter involved merely the completion of contracts entered into for the 1933, 1934, and 1935 crops. The Government is now ready to send out benefit checks to those who have complied with that contract with respect to the crop to be harvested in 1935, but before the Government can forward a benefit payment to a wheat grower he must sign what is called a "compliance contract", which is what its name indicates, a paper showing that he has complied with his agreement with the Government. Evidently compliance agents in the county in question gave to the paper published in that county a statement that July 17 was the deadline to urge contract wheat growers of the county to complete the transaction so that checks could be delivered; or else there was a misunderstanding on the part of the local compliance agents. The Department of Agriculture has fixed no deadline, but the fact remains that the sooner a contract wheat grower signs the compliance agreement the sooner he can receive his benefit payment.

The Chief of the Wheat Allotment Section of the Department of Agriculture advises me today that the Government estimates the 1935 crop at 731,000,000 bushels and domestic consumption at 625,000,000 bushels. The same agency estimates a 1935 export market for from 35,000,000 to 40,000,000 bushels. No estimate has been attempted as to the probable size of the crop to be harvested in 1936, nor the probable export market during that calendar year, but as I stated in the interview given to the Associated Press, the Department indicates that there are no present factors to indicate that the domestic price for 1936 will be above parity.

The Department, notwithstanding pending litigation over the processing tax, is proceeding with plans for the control program for the crop to be harvested in 1936. This contract has not yet been prepared, and its terms will not be announced until August. Wheat growers will probably be given until February 1936 to sign control contracts. The present Department of Agriculture plans do not contemplate any radical changes in previous wheat contracts. The minor changes now being contemplated will probably put some additional restrictions upon the big wheat-producing areas of the West and Middle West and be more liberal to the smaller wheat growers of the East.

In order that a Virginia wheat grower may determine for himself the pros and cons of a compliance contract, let us assume, for the sake of argument, that he is able to produce for the 1936 market 1,000 bushels of wheat. If he could succeed in marketing his full crop at $1.12, it would not be to his interest to sign a contract to reduce his potential crop. But if, on the other hand, after exporting 35,000,000 bushels of the 1935 crop, the United States carries over, above domestic needs, a surplus of 71,000,000 bushels, to which is added in 1936 an additional surplus of equal or greater amount, the effect undoubtedly will be to depress the domestic market. Therefore, for the sake of argument again, let us assume that the domestic price in 1936 is 65 cents per bushel. The farmer in that year who produces 1,000 bushels of wheat under a control contract will receive 65 cents per bushel plus 47 cents on his domestic allotment of 540 bushels to bring that to the parity price of $1.12. That would net him a benefit payment of $253.80.

I have supported the wheat-control plan because it gave promise of conferring benefits upon the wheat grower on a voluntary basis. No wheat grower is compelled to sign a control contract, and, as a matter of fact, while the average sign-up in the United States was 85 percent, the sign-up in Virginia on the 1933–34–35 contract was only 30 percent. On the other hand, no wheat grower can receive the special benefit offered by the Government unless he does sign and comply with the terms of his contract. Production in Virginia in 1935 is considerably above that of 1934, and we see what has happened to the price. I fear we will see the same thing happen not only in Virginia but in the Nation at large in 1936 if we continue to increase production without increasing opportunities for export.

While we have a tariff of 42 cents a bushel on wheat imported for human consumption and a 10-percent ad valorem tariff on wheat imported for livestock feed, that tariff is no real protection when the United States produces a supply above domestic requirements. The component parts of farm machinery and tools which the farmer must buy are produced and sold in the United States under a protective tariff that frequently exceeds 100 percent. As an evidence of the effectiveness of the tariff on machinery and tools, a farmer has but to compare their present price with their pre-war price, and likewise to note the value of various classes of imports during 1934. During that year our imports were as follows:

Animals and animal products	$158,530,000
Vegetable food products and beverages	467,886,000
Rubber and rubber manufactures	104,991,000
Tobacco and tobacco manufactures	28,529,000
Cotton and cotton manufactures	41,362,000
Wood and paper	181,454,000
Textiles except silk and cotton	119,678,000
Other inedible vegetable products	47,216,000
Nonmetallic minerals	86,444,000
Metals and manufactures except machinery	129,744,000
Machinery and vehicles	11,799,000
Chemicals and related products	65,126,000

It will be noted from the foregoing list, embracing hundreds of millions of dollars, the import of machinery and vehicles constituted an item of only $11,799,000.

Since, therefore, a 42-cent per bushel import tariff afforded no protection to the American wheat producer, the Government imposed upon the American consumer a processing tax of 30 cents per bushel, which, of course, is nothing more or less than a tariff to that extent for the benefit of the American farmer. It amounts to subsidizing the domestic production of wheat to the extent of over $100,000,000 a year. If the American farmer does not want that benefit, he does not have to take it, and is perfectly free to produce and sell if, as, and when he can.

I have never claimed that the present wheat-control program is either a perfect or permanent solution of our problem. The permanent solution is a restoration of foreign trade, but with all the major nations of the world except the United States—a total of 25 in number—now subsidizing the production and export of farm products, and with but a small dent having been made in foreign tariff walls, quotas, and embargoes by reciprocal trade agreements, he is more optimistic than I who believes in any quick restoration of normal foreign markets for our agricultural products.

We are, therefore, facing a fact and not a theory. The fact is that the American farmer is still 20 percent below parity in his purchasing power, with prospects of further reduction. Some help can be given a wheat grower by the present control plan, but that plan may break down in the face of a 250,000,000-bushel surplus in 1936. If the Senate concurs in the House appropriation in the A. A. A. amendment bill of approximately $100,000,000 to be expended in facilitating the export of domestic farm products, some help may be afforded in that way, unless it results in a dumping program, in which event we would be promptly met by retaliatory measures of foreign nations affected.

It should be apparent to all that our farm situation is a difficult and complicated one, but the fact remains that the present administration is making a more serious and determined effort to aid the American farmer than any previous administration in the history of the Nation.

The Republican Party, in the passage of the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill, started an international trade war from which American agriculture will not recover for many, many years.

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

THE FISH DISCHARGE PETITION

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, there is pending before the Committee on Appropriations House Joint Resolution No. 300, which provides that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay the World War veterans their adjusted-service certificates according to the plan laid down in the so-called "Vinson bill" with money that has been appropriated for public works. The resolution states—

Out of the appropriation of $4,000,000,000 and the unexpended balance of appropriations made by the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses for public works.

This resolution was filed on May 23, 1935, by Representative FISH, of New York. On July 8, 1935, Representative FISH filed a motion to discharge the Committee on Appropriations from further consideration of the resolution in order that it might be brought before the House for immediate consideration if 218 signatures can be obtained.

MONEY ALREADY ALLOTTED

I have in my hand a statement from the Treasury of the United States dated July 12, 1935. This statement is about the same as the one of July 8, 1935, and the $4,000,000,000 referred to has been allotted except $1,990,000,000. This is all the money that is remaining, unallotted, out of the $4,000,000,000 for public works.

Of the unexpended balance appropriated in 1933 for public works, referred to in the gentleman's petition, there is left only $4,000,000 unallotted. There is remaining in the other appropriation of 1934, referred to in the resolution, only $4,000,000. Therefore there is less than $2,000,000,000 remaining, unallotted, out of the $4,800,000,000 for public works.

INSUFFICIENT AMOUNT REMAINING FOR VETERANS

It will require about $2,250,000,000 to pay the veterans. It is true that the veterans will only get about $2,000,000,000, but it will require about two billion and a quarter dollars to make all the payments to the banks and to the government holding these certificates as loans. Therefore, the resolution could not be effective because there is not sufficient money remaining, unallocated, to pay the adjusted-service certificates. There is only one way that this payment can be made as proposed by Representative FISH, and that is to cause the Government to violate its promises to the people and to the cities and States where this money has been promised, and pay it to the veterans.

METHOD OF PAYMENT SECONDARY

I want to pay the veterans their certificates—it makes no difference what method you use, the method with me is secondary and always has been, but I am not going to ask that the payment be made in a way that will bring the veterans into disrepute.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. No; I am sorry, I cannot yield—I will yield to the gentleman from New York if in any way I misquote him or make an incorrect statement, but I will not yield to anybody else.

STEERING COMMITTEE TURNED PLAN DOWN

Our steering committee for the passage of H. R. 1 had a meeting about June 1, 1935, and we took up this very question of the money being paid to the veterans out of the Public Works fund, and we decided that it would bring the veterans into disrepute because every citizen or every representative of a city or State who could not get a project approved would say that it was because the veterans have the money. Every needy citizen who could not get on the relief roll would say that the veterans got the money, and every needy citizen who is not getting sufficient money on relief would say that he would be getting more if the money had not gone to the veterans. Every unemployed man who could not find a job would say that he would have had a job if it was not for the fact that the veterans had taken the relief and Public Works money.

Therefore, we would be bringing the veterans into disrepute, and I am not going to ask for the payment of this debt in any way that will bring the veterans' cause into disrepute before the American people. [Applause.]

What are the $4,000,000,000 for? It is to give three and a half million men an opportunity to work, and, therefore, if you take two and one-fourth billion and pay it to the veterans you could not give men work, and you will have to contine them on the dole.

If I wanted to continue the dole, I would not mind taking the money away and giving it to the veterans, because then the dole would have to be continued. But if I want to discontinue the dole and get the people of the country employed, who are anxious and willing to get into pay jobs I would want that $4,000,000,000 to remain intact so that the people might get the jobs.

I have here a copy of this morning's Washington Herald of Tuesday, July 16, 1935. The headline of one item is, "Delay Keeping 3,500 Men on the Dole List Here." This refers to the District of Columbia only. It is as follows:

DELAY KEEPING 3,500 MEN ON DOLE LIST HERE—NONAPPROVAL OF WORKS PROJECTS PUZZLES ALLEN; 2,780 GET JOBS HERE DURING JUNE

Delay in approval of District works projects by the Works Progress Administration and the Treasury Procurement Office is keeping 3,500 men on relief rolls here.

This disclosure came yesterday as the Department of Public Welfare announced a reduction of 2,780—720 less than the number waiting for work on submitted projects—in the District's June relief rolls.

ALLEN IN DARK

Commissioner George E. Allen, Works Progress Administrator for the District, has submitted projects totaling $2,000,000 and promising work for 2,500 relief beneficiaries. The intervening weeks have brought no word to him of the status of these projects. He said yesterday:

"I don't know what has happened to them. I have had no official information about them."

Approval would mean immediate employment of the 3,500, he said.

There is complaint made that this money is not being spent more rapidly, in order that 3,500 men here in the District might be taken off the dole and be given jobs. All right. This same newspaper is advocating paying the veterans out of Public Works, as proposed by Representative FISH. Therefore, they are advocating keeping these 3,500 men on the dole in the District, because they could not be given jobs if the veterans are given the money.

REPRESENTATIVE FISH OPPOSED TO FULL PAYMENT

I would not mind signing a petition or cooperating with my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. FISH], simply because he belongs to another political party. It makes no difference with me, but I do think that if I am going off to cooperate with someone in the payment of these certificates, which many of us here have been waging a fight to have paid for 6 years, I want to cooperate with somebody whose every heart beat and pulse throb I know is in the interest of the payment of the adjusted-service certificates. Representative FISH is just as much entitled to his views as I am to mine. He is as honest in his conviction as I am, and I would not impugn his motives or question his sincerity, but I am going to show you that Congressman FISH has not been for the payment of the adjusted-service certificates in the past, and for that reason I am reluctant to follow such a new convert, knowing how he feels.

DEBATED WITH REPRESENTATIVE FISH

When I started this fight 6 years ago, along with other Members of this House, who was it that I was debating with all over this country? I was debating with Representative FISH. I was for the payment and he was against it. I debated with him many times in this country. He was against the payment and I was for it.

CONGRESS REFUSED FIRST FISH COMPROMISE

In 1924, when the Adjusted Service Certificate Act came up, Representative FISH appeared before the committee, and he said that he wanted to offer a compromise, the Fish compromise, which would have meant giving the veterans at that time instead of $1,000 average certificate, an $800 average certificate, reducing them $200. That was the Fish compromise. He was overridden, and Congress went ahead and passed the $1,000 certificate law.

THE SECOND FISH COMPROMISE

Then in 1931, when we got up a petition here to force consideration of the bill to pay the certificates in full and we had about the required number of signatures and they promised us a 50-percent loan on every certificate, Representative FISH came in and in effect said, "Don't let them have 50 percent, let them have 47 percent, if they will make the right kind of a pauper's oath in order to get it", and offered that as the Fish compromise plan. But his plan was overriden and we got the 50 percent for the veterans.

THE THIRD FISH COMPROMISE

In 1932 we had a petition again asking for the payment of the adjusted-service certificates and to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means. Just before the bill was to come up Representative FISH introduced a bill to reduce the interest rate from 4½ percent to 3 percent on loans, and he called it the "Fish compromise." Do not pay them all of it, just reduce the interest to 3 percent, he, in effect, said. The bill for full payment, my bill, passed the House by a majority at that time of 211 to 176, and he voted gainst it.

THE FOURTH FISH COMPROMISE

In 1934 the full-payment bill came up again, and what happened? The discharge rule was applied, it is true. On February 6, 1934, and just before the bill came up on March 12, 1934, Representative FISH offered another compromise, known as the "Fish compromise." "Don't pay them all, just reduce the interest rate to 2 percent, and that will be all right", he said by the introduction of this bill. Very well. That was in 1934. We went ahead and passed the bill, the Patman bill, in the House by a majority of 295 for to 125 against, and he voted against it. In fact, he had charge of the time in opposition to the bill and I had charge of the time in favor of it.

HE VOTED AGAINST THE 1935 BILL

In 1935 the bill comes up again and does he vote for it? No. He has never voted for it, he has always said that he was against it, and he has always said the debt is not due until 1945, and that he would never vote for this payment until the Budget is balanced. So he voted against it in 1935.

HIS PAUPER'S OATH AND DOLLAR A DAY BILL—THE FIFTH FISH COMPROMISE BILL

He has always voted against it, but there was one bill he said he would be for. This is his latest bill on this subject. If I were to start with Mr. FISH on this plan and he would want to compromise it in some way, I presume he would be in favor of the bill that he has introduced. He introduced the bill H. R. 14439 on January 26, 1933, when there was a revival of interest in favor of full payment, and it was to be known as the "Fish compromise." It is for full payment—the first time he intimated he would favor full payment—and here is the way he wants to pay it: He wants the veteran to get $30 a month of the remainder due him if he is married and has dependents and $15 a month if he is single, provided, first, that he must show that he has borrowed the limit on his certificate; second, that he has remained continuously unemployed for 180 days or that he has not made more than $1 a day during that period of time. Then he must also swear, make a pauper's oath, in which he sets forth his unemployment, his income, his assets, his dependents and so forth, and he must swear that he does not possess more than $300 worth of both real and personal property; and if he will get his neighbors, not his relatives, disinterested parties, to swear to that, then the veteran will get $15 of his money if he is single, and the married one $30 of his money—that is, a month—for the next 6 months.

NEW PAUPER'S OATH EVERY 6 MONTHS

At the end of 6 months he will have to file a new affidavit. That affidavit must show that during the last 6 months he has not made over a dollar a day. The married veteran, if he has collected a dollar a day on his certificate, at the end of 6 months, if he has made one red cent during the preceding 6 months, he will be disqualified from drawing the money during the next 6 months. And for a single veteran who has received $15 a month, if he receives as much as 50 cents a day on an average throughout that period, he will be disqualified for the next 6 months. That is the Representative's bill that he offered as another compromise.

THE SPECIFIC PROVISIONS OF BILL

I am inserting herewith the specific provisions of Representative FISH's bill referred to:

SEC. 510. Payments of the face value as provided in section 509 of this act shall be made in monthly installments on the 15th day of each month, the first installment to fall due on the 15th day of the month in which application is filed in the Veterans' Administration, although the due date may antedate the date of application. Monthly installments shall be at the rate of $30 per month to married veterans or those with dependents and at the rate of $15 per month to all others: Provided, That no part of said money shall be paid to any veteran except where the following conditions have been complied with:

(a) That the applicant has already borrowed on his certificate so that his total indebtedness to the Government, including principal and interest, is at least 50 percent of the face value of his certificate.

(b) That the applicant shall have been continuously unemployed for a period not less than 180 days immediately preceding the date the application under section 509 hereof was filed in the Veterans' Administration or that his income from all sources during the same period has not averaged more than $1 per day.

(c) That the applicant does not have an interest in real or personal property in an amount in excess of $300: Provided further, That the administrator is hereby authorized and directed to accept the affidavits of two disinterested persons as sufficient proof of the veteran's sworn statement concerning employment, income, assets, marital status, and dependents, and all decisions of the administrator or employee duly authorized by him of questions of fact and law affecting any claimant to the benefits of sections 509, 510, and 511 of this act shall be final and conclusive.

SEC. 511. The maturity date under the provisions of sections 509 and 510 and this section shall be the date application is filed with the Veterans' Administration: Provided, That after six such installments have been paid the installments shall be discontinued and shall not be renewed except upon new application filed with the Veterans' Administration with supporting evidence as required for original applications in sections 509 and 510 hereof. Should no new application be filed or where because of change of financial status no further installments could be authorized under a new application, any unpaid balance of the face value as provided in sections 509 and 510 hereof shall be held by the Veterans' Administrations to the credit of the veteran and upon his death or upon the maturity date of the surrendered certificate such balance shall be paid to the estate of the veteran.

I presume he is still in favor of it. That is the second time he has brought up the pauper's oath for veterans. He brought it up in 1931 when we were trying to get them the whole amount. He said, "Give them 47 percent if they will make a pauper's oath." Now he again wants them to make a pauper's oath, and their friends and disinterested parties must swear to it, swear that they did not make over a dollar a day and have not made it for the last 6 months or they cannot draw a dime of their money. I am not in favor of legislation like that. I want to pay this money. It makes no difference to me the method of payment, but I want the money paid to the veterans in a way that it will not bring the veteran's cause into disrepute and in a way that the veterans can honorably collect their own money.

IF PART OF $4,000,000,000 TAKEN

Suppose we were to take this relief money that is remaining unallocated, where would it come from? It would come from highways and grade crossing eliminations $300,000,000; $325,000,000 would come from loans to cities. We would have to take it away from them on self-liquidating projects. We would have to take $400,000,000 away from rural rehabilitation, relief in stricken agricultural areas, irrigation and reclamation, and so forth. We would have to take $264,000,000 away from the Federal housing. We would have to take $300,000,000 away from the appropriation to take care of the white-collar workers in this country, the ones we are expecting to give jobs to take them off of the dole. The city of New York and the State of New York will profit more from that $300,000,000 than any other city or State in this Nation; yet if this resolution were to become law, all of this money I have mentioned would have to be taken away. The people would not be given an opportunity to work and make a living for themselves and their families, but they would have to remain on the dole.

Amount allocated and amount remaining

Name of project	Amount authorized in $4,000,000,000 bill	Amount allocated
Highways, roads, streets, and grade-crossing elimination	$800,000,000	$500,000,000

WHY RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

I am not going to read his speech of May 24, 1935, the day after he introduced this resolution, as disclosed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, because I do not have time. But he said in this speech, which is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that he wanted it paid that way because billions are being doled out of the Treasury to various groups; because the new-deal administration has repudiated most of its contracts, obligations, and pledges, but insisted on singling out the agreement made with the veterans to keep. I want to say to the gentleman that if his resolution were to become a law he would make this Government violate its contracts with the unemployed and the destitute, the cities, counties, and States that already have this money allocated to them.

WOULD MAKE GOVERNMENT VIOLATE PROMISES

Therefore, instead of carrying out a contract he would be making the Government of the United States violate a contract. He says further that he wants this resolution passed because Rex Tugwell has been allotted a billion dollars of this money to undertake further unsound and socialistic experiments. Very well. I have noticed there are no Democratic names on that petition. Out of about 46 names there are only two or three Democrats. I see why that is now. In order for a Democrat to sign that petition he must say that the administration is wasting this $4,000,000,000 in money. He must say that Dr. Tugwell is engaged in unsound and socialistic experiments, at the request of the President of the United States. He must say that the present administration has violated and repudiated most of its contracts, obligations, and pledges. The Democrats of this House must say that in order to sign this petition and be consistent.

Now, I could tell you what is behind this, but I do not have the time to do it. I wonder if the House would be interested in it? I will ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes as I should like to tell just what is behind it.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to proceed for 10 additional minutes since I only have 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, if we consent to the gentleman from Texas proceeding for 10 additional minutes, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] will, of course, be entitled to 10 additional minutes, and probably several other gentlemen may ask for time on the same subject. For that reason, and in the interest of orderly procedure, and because of considerable complaint that we put in so much time listening to speeches that important business is being neglected, I feel obliged to object.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman reserve that for a moment?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. This House will likely be taking 3-day recesses shortly, and it occurs to me the Members ought to have a right to say something once in a while. They can do it if the leadership will bear with us. Every one of us represents 300,000 people. We are their chosen Representatives. They sent us here. I do not think the leadership of this House should make any effort to stop Members from speaking when they have plenty of time to do it. [Applause.] I say that with all due respect to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], but I think there is too much effort made in this House to stop Members from speaking, when we adjourn sometimes in the middle of the afternoon, over week ends, and 3 days at a time, and then sometimes rush a bill through under the 40-minute rule. I think the gentleman should be very considerate of the Members of the House who desire to make speeches.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let me say to the gentleman, and to the House, that I have been in a friendly way criticized by several Members recently for not performing what they say is the official duty of the majority leader of the House, to prevent so many speeches. I have tried to be as fair and as considerate as possible of the wishes of all the Members. I believe Members are entitled to an opportunity to make a reasonable number of speeches. I think short speeches are helpful and ought to be permitted. But when the House, as the Members did yesterday, cheer to the echo a suggestion that Congress should promptly adjourn, it would seem to indicate their desire to finish the business of this session.

Mr. PATMAN. They did not vote that way, though.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We all know there are very many important matters that we ought to dispose of in a deliberate way before we can in an orderly and appropriate manner adjourn this session. This puts upon me quite a responsibility which I have no intention of evading. I should like to give more time to many gentlemen to express their views. I know they would be instructive and helpful. I would welcome an expression of the House on this matter. Personally, I am perfectly willing to allow a few short speeches every day. We might as well listen to a half dozen 5-minute speeches as to waste 40 minutes on a quorum call. I think long speeches should be deferred until we are substantially through all of the more important measures.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the majority leader that I have heard no criticism of his leadership. So far as he is concerned, we seem to be getting along fine, and in the main we are satisfied with his leadership [applause] with the possible exception of some of the Republican minority.

PAY THE SOLDIERS' ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES IN CURRENCY NOW

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I can conceive of no more important subject than the payment of the soldiers' adjusted-service certificates, and if we spend the rest of this day until the hour we ordinarily adjourn or stay here far into the night, we would not be taking half the time we ought to be spending on this important subject. We want that bonus paid now in good United States currency. It ought not to be paid out of the Public Works or relief appropriations. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let me say further that the order of business today is the consideration of the Private Calendar. There are about 400 bills on that calendar. The omnibus bill has been postponed three times. This may possibly be the last day on which it can be considered before adjournment. A great many Members have bills upon this calendar that are important to them. Therefore, for the purpose of expediting the business of the House, I feel constrained to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I cannot yield; the gentleman objected to my request for additional time, and I only have 1 or 2 minutes. I am sorry.

Mr. Speaker, I do not have time to follow up this discussion. In conclusion, I have no suggestion to make about the method of paying the adjusted-service certificates; I want them paid, for I believe they represent an honest debt and that their payment will increase purchasing power, but I am not going to ask that these certificates be paid in a way that will bring the veterans of this country and their cause into disrepute. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hands are Esau's. The voice is the voice of WRIGHT PATMAN, of Texas, but the hands are the hands of the Democratic organization and very probably the President of the United States.

Ever since this resolution was introduced every effort has been made to see that no single Democrat signed it. The organization has been in fear and trepidation lest the Democratic membership, hearing from home and from the veterans, would go up and sign this resolution, no. 300, now upon the Clerk's desk; so the gentleman from Texas is picked out by the organization to come here and try to persuade, as he says, as a friend of the veteran, the Democratic side at least from not taking the only opportunity they will get in the rest of this session to pay the adjusted-service certificates by signing this petition and bringing out my resolution and passing it.

It must be self-evident to everyone, of course, that it cannot be passed without Democratic votes. I believe most of the Members on the Republican side will sign it. If you want to take the responsibility, which is yours and you have the right to assume it, of blocking this resolution by preventing its coming up on the floor of the House for a vote, if you want to block the payment of the adjusted-service certificates, you on the Democratic side have the right to do it.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No; I cannot yield; the gentleman from Texas did not yield.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose that the gentleman from Texas, or any other Member of the House shall come before you and question my record as a friend of the veteran, a record which goes back long, long before the gentleman from Texas came to this House.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Will not the gentleman yield for a correction?

I did not question his record, I questioned his record on the payment of the adjusted-service certificates.

Mr. FISH. That is what I am talking about, and it goes back long before the gentleman came to Congress.

When President Harding was in the Executive Mansion, I, as a Republican, voted to override his veto on the adjusted service certificate bill. Later I voted again to override the veto of President Coolidge on the so-called "bonus." Still later I voted to override the veto of President Hoover to pay 50 percent of the certificates by way of loans to veterans.

I believe my record is known throughout this country among the veterans; and I do not propose to have the gentleman from Texas, who came here long after I did, get up in the House and try to muddy the waters and make out that I have not fought for the veterans in this House, when on two different occasions in my own congressional district these banker friends of the gentleman from Texas put up candidates against me in the primary because, and only because, on both those occasions I had voted to override a Republican President to put through an adjusted service certificate bill. That is my record and that record stands. (The words following were ordered taken down and on the order of the House were subsequently ordered expunged from the RECORD.)

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman's words be taken down.

Mr. FISH. Would the gentleman prefer——

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman is called to order he must take his seat until the matter is determined.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] will take his seat.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the words of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] be taken down also, to wit:

> The voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hands are the hands of Esau's. The voice is the voice of WRIGHT PATMAN of Texas, but the hands are the hands of the Democratic organization, and very probably the President of the United States, and that the President of the United States and the administration had prevented Democratic Members from signing this petition and that Mr. PATMAN was picked by the administration to advise Democratic Members not to sign it.

I challenge that statement and make a point of order against same, and ask that those words be taken down.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is for the reporter to take down the words and for the Clerk to report them to the House, which will be done.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, a further point of order. I ask that the Well of the House be cleared.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. Certain words uttered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] have been asked to be taken down.

Mr. SNELL. What is wrong with a man expressing an opinion similar to the words uttered by the gentleman from New York, whether it reflects on one Member or another?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will pass on that matter at the proper time. It is not subject to debate, as the gentleman knows.

The Clerk will report the words.

The Clerk read the words objected to and ordered taken down.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, all the words objected to were not read by the Clerk. I asked that the following words used by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] be taken down, to wit:

> The voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hands are the hands of Esau's. The voice is the voice of WRIGHT PATMAN, of Texas, but the hands are the hands of the Democratic organization, and very probably the President of the United States. Ever since this resolution was introduced every effort has been made to see that no single Democrat signed it. The organization has been in fear and trepidation, lest the Democratic membership hearing from home and from the veterans would go up and sign this resolution so that the gentleman from Texas is picked out of the organization to come here and try to persuade the Democrats from signing.

Those are statements I challenged and asked to be taken down.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the request of the gentleman comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Texas is entitled to have the words taken down.

Mr. EKWALL submitted a parliamentary inquiry, which the Chair held to be not in order; and following a demand for the taking down of the words on the order of the House, the language was expunged from the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL] is not in order.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the words of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL] be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the words of the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-three members present, a quorum.

The Clerk will report the further words of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, the voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hands are Esau's. The voice is the voice of WRIGHT PATMAN, of Texas, but the hands are the hands of the Democratic organization and very probably the President of the United States. Ever since this resolution was introduced every effort has been made to see that no single Democrat signed it. The organization has been in fear and trepidation lest the Democratic membership, hearing from home and from the veterans, would go up and sign this resolution, no. 300, now upon the Clerk's desk; so the gentleman from Texas is picked out by the organization to come here and try to persuade, so he says, as a friend of the veteran, the Democratic side at least from not taking the only opportunity they will get in the rest of this session to pay the adjusted-service certificates by signing this bill and bringing it out and passing it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, this is not debatable.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order has already been made, and the Chair is about to make a ruling.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is reported to have made, among other statements, the following statement [reading the words objected to and asked to be taken down by the gentleman from Texas, Mr. PATMAN].

The rules of the House provide that Members of the House shall observe proper decorum in debate. This is the only way in which matters may be discussed in a sound, sensible, sane manner, and a proper conclusion arrived at. Those Members particularly who have been here for years, it seems to the Chair, should be doubly careful to strictly conform to the rule.

The rules provide that when a Member rises to interrupt another he shall address the Chair and do it respectfully and secure the consent of the Member who is talking.

There is a rule of the House which ought to be familiar to every Member of the House, particularly to those who have been here for a number of terms, which reads as follows:

> When any Member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker" and, on being recognized, may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk, and shall confine himself to the question under debate, avoiding personality.

The reason for the adoption of that rule, of course, is perfectly obvious.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] used the word "snoop" in reference to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]. The Chair will read to the House the definition of the word "snoop" as it appears in Webster's New International Dictionary, and I take it this will be accepted as authentic:

> Snoop: To look or pry about or into others' affairs in a sneaking way. One who snoops; a prying sneak.

The Chair thinks it very clear that the use of this word by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] violated the rules of the House and therefore holds the words out of order.

The Clerk will call the first omnibus bill on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a decision by the Chair on the balance of the words taken down.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a decision on the words of the gentleman from Oregon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL] interposed his remarks in the form of a parliamentary inquiry and asked this question [reading the words objected to].

It is not necessary for the Chair or any Member to go to the dictionary to know what "stool pigeon" means, and the Chair thinks that is as clearly out of order, or even more so, than the remarks made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a ruling by the Chair on the other remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] referring to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] which I had taken down and read by the clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, with respect to that part of his remarks, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] was indulging in a little flight of oratory, and while they may have bordered upon a violation of the rules which should govern decorum in debate, the Chair having ruled upon the statement to which the Chair has just alluded, the Chair does not think it necessary to pass on that question, especially as the objection was not raised at the time these words were uttered.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed in order.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may be permitted to conclude his speech in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. HOOK. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to expunge from the RECORD the words referred to.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman's motion apply also to the remarks made by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL]?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were—ayes 151, noes 56.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be allowed to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] asks for the yeas and nays. All those in favor of taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Forty-five Members have risen, a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 247, nays 75, not voting 107, as follows:

Mrs. Norton with Mr. O'Neal.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the gentleman from New York may be permitted to proceed in order.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PATMAN. I make the point of order that the gentleman from New York has the floor and he cannot be taken off his feet.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the House has seen fit to expunge the use of the word "snooper", I want to say to the Speaker and to the House that it is impossible for me to proceed, because that is merely a mild, temperate, insignificant word compared with what I expected to use in the balance of my remarks. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that those words be taken down. It is an affront to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that although the gentleman from New York may have intimated that he has worse remarks to make, he has not actually uttered them. The House has already ruled on what he did say.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I have a preferential motion. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] yield the floor?

Mr. FISH. I have concluded, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were 49 ayes and 172 noes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 58, nays 271, not voting 100, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT OF SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on H. R. 7260, the social-security bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. I object.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EKWALL. I want to know whether it is a question of whose ox is gored when remarks are made on the floor. On July 10 the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] used this language in speaking of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman cannot complain as to what occurred at a previous session of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the point of inquiry.

Mr. RANKIN. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Oregon is out of order at any time during the day until a motion is made permitting him to proceed in order, for the reason that his words were stricken from the RECORD this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon is propounding a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair cannot rule upon it until he indicates what it is.

Mr. EKWALL. I just wanted to state that Mr. O'CONNOR called the gentleman from Mississippi a squirter—used language of that kind.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. In the first place, that is not the language the gentleman used, and in the second place, there was no request then for taking the words down, and in the third place, what the gentleman refers to occurred on July 10.

The SPEAKER. The Chair passed on that question a few moments ago and that ruling stands.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

OMNIBUS BILLS

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8060) for the relief of sundry claimants, and for other purposes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The roll call just taken discloses the presence of a quorum, and the Chair thinks the point of order is dilatory.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I regret to take up any time now because of the loss of much time by the House today, but regardless of what the Speaker's ruling may be, for the preservation of the rights of certain Members who believe as I do, I make the point of order against this new rule amending clause 6 of rule XXIV, and wish to put in the RECORD my reasons for contending that these so-called "omnibus bills" are not authorized by the rules of the House of Representatives.

The simple House resolution passed by the House on March 27, 1935, does not attempt to amend any rule of the House except one single clause of one rule, to wit, clause 6 of rule XXIV. It does not attempt to repeal or set aside any existing rule of the House except clause 6 of rule XXIV, and it is a substitution only for said clause 6 of rule XXIV. I hope the Speaker will keep that in mind in passing on the matter.

I make the point of order that this amended clause 6 of rule XXIV is inoperative and does not authorize omnibus bills, because it is incomplete and does not properly provide for such omnibus bills and is inconsistent with rules still in existence and in conflict with rules that have been the rules of the House, some of them for 140 years. I call attention first to the third paragraph of clause 1 of rule XIII:

> Third. A calendar of the Committee of the Whole House to which shall be referred all bills of a private character—

That is the creation of that Private Calendar. It does not authorize any omnibus bills. Then I call attention to a portion of clause of said rule XIII, because bills on the House Calendar and Union Calendar may be put on the Consent Calendar also—> and if objected to by three or more Members it shall immediately be stricken from the calendar, and shall not thereafter during the same session of the Congress be placed again thereon.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. What was the last reference about striking from the calendar? What rule was that?

Mr. BLANTON. That was clause 3 of rule XIII.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That pertains to the Consent Calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. I will show the connection in just a minute. If the gentleman will let me proceed in my own way I think I will take just about one-third the time I would otherwise be forced to take. I mentioned that part of clause 3 of rule XIII because under said rule, upon application, bills on the House Calendar and bills on the Union Calendar may be transferred to and also appear on the Consent Calendar.

I call attention, Mr. Speaker, to rule XIX concerning amendments:

> When a motion or proposition is under consideration a motion to amend and a motion to amend that amendment shall be in order, and it shall also be in order to offer a further amendment by way of substitute, to which one amendment may be offered, but which shall not be voted on until the original matter is perfected, but either may be withdrawn before amendment or decision is had thereon.

There has been no repeal of that rule. There has been no change of that rule. There has been no amendment of that rule. That rule still stands as a rule of the House of Representatives, adopted and in force in this Congress. Yet procedure under it, and the rights of a Member under said rule XIX, are quite different to those under this new clause 6 of rule XXIV.

Which of them are we to operate under? Are we to operate under rule XIX, which is still in full force and effect, or are we to operate under this entirely different rule, this new clause 6 of rule XXIV?

Now I want to call attention to the following part of rule XX:

> Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

That rule is still the rule of this House. Think of the confusion that will ensue. After we pass one of these omnibus bills, and it is unscrambled by resolving all of the House bills passed in it, into their original forms, and we send them to the Senate and the Senate should amend them by placing an entirely new amendment on a House bill carrying $100,000,000, under rule XX, we would have to consider it in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, but under this new rule—clause 6 of rule XXIV—we could consider it in the House in direct violation of rule XX, which has neither been amended nor repealed.

Now, I want to call attention to the following part of rule XXI, to wit:

> Bills and joint resolutions on their passage shall be read the first time by title and the second time in full, when, if the previous question is ordered, the Speaker shall state the question to be, Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time? and, if decided in the affirmative, it shall be read the third time by title, unless the reading in full is demanded by a Member, and the question shall then be put upon its passage.

That rule is still in full force and effect. But its provisions relating to the engrossment of a House bill could not be followed out with regard to one of these omnibus bills, because you do not engross a bill until just before its final passage, and under clause 6 of rule XXIV these omnibus bills may embrace a number of House bills, and also a number of Senate bills, which have already been engrossed by the Senate, and under rule XXI you could not properly engross such a bill.

I call attention to the following portion of rule XXII, to wit:

> 3. All other bills, memorials, and resolutions may, in like manner, be delivered, endorsed with the names of Members introducing them, to the Speaker, to be by him referred, and the titles and references thereof and of all bills, resolutions, and documents referred under the rules shall be entered on the Journal and printed in the RECORD of the next day, and correction in case of error of reference may be made by the House, without debate, in accordance with rule XI, on any day immediately after the reading of the Journal, by unanimous consent, or on motion of a committee claiming jurisdiction, or on the report of the committee to which the bill has been erroneously referred.

That rule has not been repealed. It has not been amended. It has not been changed in any way. Yet, if you proceed under it, you could not proceed under this new clause 6 of rule XXIV.

I call attention to the following part of clause 3 of rule XXIII, which still stands as a rule of this House, unamended and unrepealed:

> All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, or referring any claim to the Court of Claims, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

That is a standing rule of this House. It has been a rule of this House for many years. It has never been amended. It has never been repealed. It has never been changed by one word, I submit to the Speaker. Yet, if you proceed under it, you certainly could not proceed under this new clause 6 of rule XXIV.

We all know that in the Committee of the Whole there is generous general debate allowed, while under clause 6 of rule XXIV there is no general debate and only a few minutes allowed for amendments.

Now, in a moment I will call attention to another rule that is in direct conflict. I want to call attention first to a bill that is on this calendar, scrambled into an omnibus bill, subject to be called up today under this so-called "clause 6 of rule XXIV." Does it appropriate money? Certainly it does. It is the Minnesota fire bill this House defeated in the last session. If we pass this bill, it will require anywhere from twelve to fifteen million dollars to pay it, so our Government officials have estimated.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order. The gentleman is discussing a bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I am calling attention to a violation of the rule which I have just read.

Mr. PITTENGER. I ask for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. I am calling attention to this rule XXIII, which is unamended, unrepealed, and unchanged, which says that when a bill is a charge on the people, when it appropriates money out of the people's Treasury, it shall go to the Committee of the Whole under general debate. I am showing that one of the provisions in this very bill that is on this calendar, this so-called "omnibus bill", embraces a bill which was old H. R. 3662, known as the "Minnesota fire bill", which if passed would appropriate out of the people's Treasury anywhere from twelve to fifteen million dollars, a bill that this House voted on adversely last year, and by a large majority voted it down, and then killed it.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. BLANTON. That is all I have to say about that $12,000,000 bill, but I want to call attention to the fact that it does appropriate money.

Now, here is another clause of this omnibus bill, on page 7, that seeks to appropriate $331,879.25.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas is not discussing his point of order, but is discussing the bill; and I now ask the Chair to instruct the gentleman from Texas to proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York may not see the relevancy of it, but I am sure the Chair does. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is within his rights in referring to bills contained in this omnibus bill in discussing the point of order.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman is discussing the contents of the bill. I think it is far-fetched.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would throw some light upon the position taken by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this clause of this omnibus bill would appropriate $331,879.25 out of the Public Treasury. Now, turn over to the next page of this omnibus bill. Here is a bill, old H. R. No. 4178, introduced in this Congress by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], which seeks to appropriate $968,748.12, and which, for a number of years, we have prevented from passing.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. The gentleman is not proceeding in order, but persistently violates the rules of the House. I ask that the Speaker instruct the gentleman to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Texas is making the point of order that this bill should be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, rather than in the House, and he bases his argument upon a rule governing the consideration of bills. The gentleman from Texas, as the Chair understands, is seeking to demonstrate that the bill in question does provide for certain appropriations.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; yet the gentleman from Minnesota says I am violating the rules of the House, though the Speaker of the House does not say so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Texas, however, that he has sufficiently demonstrated the fact that the bill does carry appropriations. The Chair, however, does not want to cut the gentleman from Texas off. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to make out my case in the RECORD for the future.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, every clause of this omnibus bill takes money out of the Public Treasury, for this $968,748.12 will come out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that again the gentleman is discussing bills instead of the point of order against this rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for 3 days.

Mr. BLANTON. The Speaker will attend to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will cease interrupting.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Minnesota does not have to render me any assistance.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not yield. I am not addressing myself to the gentleman from Minnesota, but to the Speaker of the House; the Speaker is to determine this question.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not yield to anybody. I am addressing my point of order to the judgment of the Chair, to the unswerving, unwavering, great wisdom of the Chair. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the Chair's attention to the reason why such a rule as rule XXIII was passed by the House many years ago. It was for the protection of our constituents. It is still the rule of the House. It was to protect the taxpayers. It was to save the public money. Why, if this $968,748.12 bill in the omnibus bill should be passed by the House, it provides there could be an attorney's fee of $96,874.81. Is not that a fat-sized attorney's fee, when there has been no trial in court?

This demonstrates why, in its wisdom, the Members of the House of Representatives have put rule XXIII in their manual requiring that such bills shall be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union where they can be properly argued, properly debated, and properly understood by the Membership, and properly amended before they vote such large sums out of the Public Treasury into the private pockets of some individual.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the Chair's attention to another feature, clause 5 of rule XXIII of the House of Representatives, to wit:

> When general debate is closed by order of the House, any Member shall be allowed 5 minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which the Member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak 5 minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate thereon, but the same privilege of debate shall be allowed in favor of and against any amendment that may be offered to an amendment; and neither an amendment nor an amendment to an amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof unless by the unanimous consent of the committee.

This is a standing rule of the House and has been a rule of the House for many years. It has not been changed, it has not been repealed, it has not been amended; and it is in conflict with this so-called "change of one rule, clause 6 of rule XXIV." The rights which it safeguards to Members are curtailed and to a large extent wiped out by this new clause 6 of rule XXIV. Under which are we to operate?

I want to call attention to just a few of the Senate rules relative to Senate bills. This so-called "change of clause 6 of rule XXIV", just one clause of one rule, not only affects House bills, Mr. Speaker, but it materially affects Senate bills that are properly passed by the Senate of the United States and messaged over to the House and properly referred to committees by the Speaker under the rules of this House, and the comity that exists between the House and the Senate, which comity has existed ever since the beginning of the Congress.

Let me first indicate to you all the references to omnibus bills in this clause 6 of rule XXIV, to show how ineffectual they are, how incomplete they are; how it leaves everything to innuendo and guess, making no provision as to how they shall be handled, and leaving everything up in the air, as it were.

Here is the first clause that relates to an omnibus bill in this general chain:

On the third Tuesday of each month, after the disposal of such business on the Speaker's table as requires reference only, the Speaker may direct the Clerk to call the bills and resolutions on the Private Calendar—

This is the first reference—preference to be given to omnibus bills containing bills or resolutions which have previously been objected to on a call of the Private Calendar.

Nowhere in the rules of the House of Representatives is there direct provision or authority to incorporate bills objected to into an omnibus bill, except by reference and innuendo in this clause 6 of rule XXIV.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. When the Chair gets ready to rule, he will exercise his own judgment.

Here is the next reference, Mr. Speaker, to omnibus bills:

Omnibus bills shall be read for amendment by paragraph—

What omnibus bills are referred to? Where has there been provision in the rules of the House creating omnibus bills or authorizing omnibus bills or providing for the way in which they shall be incorporated, how they shall be drawn, how they shall be introduced and how they shall be considered? There is not a rule existing in the House of Representatives that covers those matters. Everything is silent in the rules regarding all of those important matters. Here is the next reference:

Omnibus bills shall be read for amendment by paragraph, and no amendment shall be in order except to strike out or to reduce the amounts of money stated or to provide limitations.

Remember the standing rule of the House of Representatives read by me that every Member who rises to offer a bona fide amendment shall be heard, and that rule has not been repealed. In order to repeal a rule you have to mention that it is repealing a rule, just like it has been mentioned here that this is a substitution for clause 6 of rule XXIV. That must be done before it can take its place or before a single rule of the House of Representatives may be obliterated.

The next reference to omnibus bills is the following:

Upon the passage of any such omnibus bill, said bill shall be resolved into the several bills—

Listen to this—and resolutions of which it is composed, such original bills and resolutions, with any amendments adopted by the House, shall be engrossed, where necessary, and proceedings thereon had as if said bills and resolutions had been passed in the House severally.

Mr. Speaker, we have a standing House rule in reference to engrossing House bills. The rule of the House of Representatives, that is unchanged, unamended, and unrepealed, is that when a House bill has been passed upon and read the second time, the Speaker says: "The question is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read the third time?" That is the rule of the House that is unamended and unchanged. That is the only rule we can go by, because this other proposition is just innuendo and conjecture.

The next reference to an omnibus bill is as follows:

In the consideration of any omnibus bills the proceedings as set forth above shall have the same force and effect as if each Senate and House bill or resolution therein contained or referred to were considered by the House as a separate and distinct bill or resolution.

Mr. Speaker, who is given the authority by a rule of this House to unscramble this omnibus bill? No authority is here given to anyone. Who is going to do the unscrambling if an omnibus bill is passed which contains both Senate and House bills, involving millions of dollars? How are you going to engross them? How are you going to unscramble them? How are you going to resolve them back into their original form? How are you going to resolve this $968,748.12 bill back into the form in which my good friend from New York, Mr. O'CONNOR, first introduced it? How are you going to get it back into its original form? Who is going to do it? Who is given the authority to do it under this so-called "rule"?

Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that under the comity of the two Houses, which has existed for over 140 years, it is provided that when a Senate bill is passed by the United States Senate and messaged to the House, unless there is a House bill of similar import reported by a committee and on the calendar, it cannot be called up at all except under suspension of the rules. Under the comity of the two Houses, unless the condition exists as I mentioned a minute ago, the Speaker is compelled to refer that Senate bill to the proper committee for consideration. Under the comity that exists between the two Houses there is no committee that has the right to scramble a lot of Senate bills into one measure, together with a lot of House bills, and bring a lot of Senate and House bills on the floor and put them into the hopper under a House bill number. That has never been authorized and never will be properly authorized, unless and until it is done by a concurrent resolution which will give the Senate of the United States a right to approve of this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I do not care to use the time of my colleagues any further. They have been patient. I feel that I should extend the balance of my remarks if I am permitted to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I have some Senate rules here, and other data, that I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD in connection with my remarks. If this unanimous-consent request is granted, I do not care to take any more of the time of my colleagues.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. All right; I will read them to the gentleman. I am glad to have him here to listen to them. I am going to teach him some of the rules of the House and Senate.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order in making those last remarks, and I ask that those words be taken down.

Mr. BLANTON. I have said nothing that reflects on the gentleman, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may not interrupt the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman stated a few days ago that he was stating this case for a higher court in the event he was overruled, and the Chair feels that in all fairness he should give the gentleman from Texas an opportunity to present his side of the matter.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remarks made about me be taken down.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw them if they have affronted my colleague.

Mr. SNELL. No; you will not withdraw them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the words be taken down.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not mind that. The Speaker will not hold them out of order.

Mr. SNELL. When the gentleman has been called to order he should take his seat.

Mr. BLANTON. I will ask the Speaker to rule whether or not when I was continually interrupted I had the right to so reply to the gentleman.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman is not going to teach me anything, The gentleman has stated that he is going to teach me the rules of the House about which I knew nothing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think those words are subject to a point of order. The gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in connection with my remarks I be permitted to insert excerpts from several Senate rules.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BLANTON. I refer the Chair to the following portion of rule XXVIII of the United States Senate:

> Messages shall be sent to the House of Representatives by the Secretary, who shall previously certify the determination of the Senate upon all bills, joint resolutions, and other resolutions.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman cannot read from any document or from any other papers.

The SPEAKER. This is for the information of the Chair, and the point of order is overruled. The gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and two Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Can the gentleman from Oregon make a point of order, since his remarks were expunged?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer the inquiry in the absence of a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 130]

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and eighteen Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] may extend his remarks by including therein the citations and references that he has spoken of.

Mr. BLANTON. That is all I care to do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard, and the gentleman from Texas will proceed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, one of these so-called "omnibus bills" introduced under this changed clause 6 of rule XXIV of the House has been introduced as H. R. 8524. It has taken a new calendar number, no. 622, and embraces a number of House bills and Senate bills.

It embraces Senate bill 929, an act for the relief of the Southern Products Co. This Senate bill, S. 929, takes money out of the Treasury. It was passed by the Senate in due form. The bill was duly and regularly passed by the Senate, under the rules of the Senate and in accordance with the rules of the Congress. It was duly messaged over to this House and by the Speaker duly referred to a committee, under the rules of the House. It was regularly called and regularly objected to, and now, forsooth, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Claims, without any authority from the Senate and in violation of the standing rules of the House which have been unchanged and unamended and unrepealed, it is put into this omnibus bill, H. R. 8524,—a Senate bill put into the hopper of the House and it takes a House number, if the Chair please, and to this extent is known as a "House bill", H. R. 8524, and thereby loses its Senate identity and its Senate integrity as a bill. It is now known as "House bill 8524."

I call attention to another House bill, H. R. 8750, introduced in this House on July 2, 1935, which is another one of these so-called "omnibus bills." It has taken House Private Calendar No. 702.

The SPEAKER. How many illustrations of that kind has the gentleman?

Mr. BLANTON. I know the Chair is tired, and I will not put in any further ones, and I shall not call attention to a number of rules I wanted to cite.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no disposition to cut off the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I know the impatience of my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, and this is not in any way dilatory. I am pursuing my judgment as a Member of the House of Representatives who has believed, ever since I have been here, under my oath, in the integrity of the rules of the House, and I want to see those rules upheld with respect to the passage of legislation.

This particular House Calendar No. 702 is now H. R. 8750, embraces Senate bill No. 753, duly passed by the Senate of the United States, duly messaged over to the House, referred to the appropriate committee, duly reported here and put on the calendar, objected to, comes back into the House with a new number on the House Private Calendar, with the Senate identity lost and the Senate number lost, so far as the bill number is concerned, because it is known now as House bill H. R. 8750.

Mr. Speaker, you cannot pass legislation in that way, that takes money out of the Public Treasury. You cannot pass legislation under the rules of the House that have been in vogue for 140 years, since Congress was first created, by a simple House resolution. That is against the Senate rules and against the rules of the House. The law provides that when a bill takes money out of the Public Treasury it must go into the Committee of the Whole House, whether it is a House bill or a Senate bill. If it is a House bill, if it takes money out of the Public Treasury, it must be debated in the Committee of the Whole. If it is a Senate bill and takes money out of the Public Treasury, it must be debated in Committee of the Whole. That is the protection placed by Congress around the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Speaker, you cannot pass a simple House resolution to take any money out of the Treasury except in one way. You can take it out of the contingent fund of the House because that has been put there by legislation approved by the House and Senate and signed by the President. That is the reason you can take it out of the contingent fund.

The Senate has also a contingent fund and can take money out of that fund by a simple Senate resolution, because it was placed there by legislation properly passed by Congress and approved by the President, placing it in the Senate contingent fund.

But the Senate could not bring in a simple Senate resolution taking one penny out of the Public Treasury. The House could not bring in a simple House resolution taking one cent out of the Federal Treasury.

Now, I call attention to a further Senate rule:

Messages shall be sent to the House of Representatives by the Secretary, who shall previously certify the determination of the Senate upon all bills, joint resolutions, and other resolutions which may be communicated to the House, or in which its concurrence may be requested.

That is the way Senate bills reach the House. When the Senate passes a Senate bill it is messaged to the House. It goes on the Speaker's table to be referred. The Senate at any time before that bill is finally passed into law can by resolution ask for the recall of their bill, ask that it be sent back to the Senate for further action before the House takes action.

How could the Senate recall its said bill, S. 753, when it has now been scrambled into and has become House bill H. R. 8750?

How could the Senate recall its bill, S. 929, when it has now been scrambled into and has become House bill H. R. 8524?

How could the Senate recall its bills when they have been broken up and scrambled together with a bunch of House bills and given a House bill number? It could not do it. Such practice would be a violation of the Senate rules and it would be a violation of the House rules.

This is an important matter and in closing I state that I have no personal feeling in it. I have tried to protect the public money in the Treasury. If the House of Representatives wants thus to vote it out, that is its business.

I do not know what the Speaker's ruling is; I imagine that following his former ruling when this rule was passed, he will probably rule against me, but I have made my record on it for the future, and if the Comptroller General rules against any of these bills after they are passed, or if any taxpayer of the United States, and there will be some, ever brings such a bill before the Supreme Court of the United States for revision and contests the legality of its passage, the legality of taking the people's money out of the Treasury in this haphazard way by a simple House resolution, then there will be a chance for the Supreme Court to render a proper decision upon it.

I submit the matter to the Speaker.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on what has been called a "point of order", but which I now brand openly and publicly as nothing more than a filibuster. We have had this filibuster all day, conducted principally by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], both of whom are self-appointed watchdogs of the Treasury, opposed to every private bill except their own.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I gave notice the other day that I would present this point of order. I leave it to the Speaker whether I have done it in sincerity.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I insist that is not a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. When the gentleman charges me with filibustering, it is not true.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, of 100 risings on the floor of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], under the guise of a "point of order", not 1 out of those 100 is a real point of order.

What is the situation here? We have a filibuster here against the consideration of private claims in an omnibus bill, and it is going to succeed.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I want to know whether it is in order to take down the words of the gentleman from Texas when he says, "it is not true"?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, I never asked anybody to take down any words that refer to me.

Mr. FISH. I ask that the words be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entirely too late in making his demand.

Mr. FISH. Exactly the same thing happened in my case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken about that. The gentleman is too late in making his request.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I believe there has grown up in this House a mollycoddle attitude that no one can say "boo" to a Member. I cannot imagine anything that could be said about me that I would emphasize by insisting on the words being taken down. [Applause.] If they were taken down and given publicity, lots of people might agree with what had been said, many people who might not have thought of it before, but when attention was drawn to the characterization of me they might also then agree that the words were correct.

Of course, this filibuster is going to be successful, but other days are coming. As I recall the House has never adjourned in recent years without taking up all the bills on the Private Calendar and on the Consent Calendar; and that should be done. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] referred to a bill introduced by me, and, of course, he did so viciously.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman's words be taken down. The gentleman from New York is Chairman of the Rules Committee, but he cannot get away with that. I did not do so viciously.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the word "viciously."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has withdrawn the remark.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I inherited that bill from my predecessors, and everyone on the Claims Committee, and anywhere else, who has examined the bill believes it is a meritorious measure. It has been repeatedly recommended by the Government, by the Federal Reserve Board, and the Secretary of State. I have never raised one finger or uttered one word in its behalf, and to me personally it means nothing whether it passes or not, except that one of our citizens faces a great injustice at the hands of his own Government.

What does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] really say, if anything, in support of his alleged "point of order"? The crux of his argument is that the Committee on Rules cannot bring in a rule to change the rules of the House, and, further, that we cannot bring in a rule to change a part of a rule. He contends that while we can modify a whole rule, we cannot change a clause or a section of a rule.

The gentleman in his filibuster did not read all the rules of the House, but he might as well have done so, because there was not one section of any rule which he read that had any application whatsoever to the rule in respect to the Private Calendar, which this House, with 332 Members present, adopted by a record vote with only 40 against it, including, of course, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Now, Mr. Speaker, what does the Constitution of the United States provide? Article 1, section 5, provides:

Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings.

So well settled is that right that in United States v. Ballin (144 U. S. 1)—and I read from page 5, the court—Mr. Justice Brewer—said in discussing the validity of a rule of the House which had been attacked in the courts:

Neither do the advantages or disadvantages, the wisdom or folly, of such a rule present any matters for judicial consideration.

If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is laying the foundation for a case for the Supreme Court, on the statement I just read he will not have much chance of success.

Continuing the Court said:

With the courts the question is only one of power. The Constitution empowers each House to determine its rules of proceedings. It may not, by its rules, ignore constitutional restraints or violate fundamental rights, and there should be a reasonable relation between the mode or method of proceedings established by the rule, and the result which is sought to be attained. But within these limitations all matters of method are open to the determination of the House, and it is no impeachment of the rule to say that some other way would be better, more accurate, or even more just. It is no objection to the validity of a rule that a different one has been prescribed and in force for a length of time.

For instance, during these 150 years, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] alleges.

Further the Court said:

The power to make rules is not one which once exercised is exhausted. It is a continuous power, always subject to be exercised by the House, and within the limitations suggested, absolute and beyond the challenge of any other body or tribunal.

Now, that is as it should be. The Supreme Court or any other body cannot make our rules. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] said that the Claims Committee had not consulted another body as to what it would do with bills coming from that other body. Well, I hope the day will never come when they feel they should pay any attention whatever to that other body in proceeding under the rules of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] pretended to raise a "constitutional" question, with which the distinguished Speaker nor any other presiding officer has anything to do.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] referred to clause 3 of rule XIII, but was careful not to say that rule related solely to Consent Calendar. He then referred to rule XIX, which has no application whatever to the question before us. He mentioned rule XX, which also has no application. He read rule XXI, which also has no application whatsoever. He laid stress on rule XXII, clause 3, which likewise has no application whatsoever. He read and reread rule XXIII, clause 3, providing for considering of bills in Committee of the Whole, when the bills appropriate money, but he well knew that every day we here consider bills in the House as in Committee of the Whole, including many bills which appropriate money, and we often bring in rules for such procedure.

He well knew that there never was a private bill appropriating money considered in Committee of the Whole in 25 years.

The Rules Committee can change the rules of this House at any time, providing a majority of the House so votes, which provides that a bill appropriating $4,000,000 or $10,000,000,000 shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. That is one of the many rules of the House which the Rules Committee can change as fast as the Rules Committee can meet and this House will approve its action.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] spoke about one bill included in an omnibus bill allowing attorneys' fees above 10 percent. Of course, that provision can be amended when the bill comes before the House. That is one of the many provisions that can be amended under this omnibus bill rule.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] referred to rule XXIII, clause 5, which has no application whatsoever to what we are discussing. He might just as well have referred to the rule as to the election of the Speaker as to any of the provisions of the rules to which he did refer. None were in any respect applicable.

He referred to Senate bills being included in our omnibus bills. He said incorporating Senate bills objected to here in an omnibus by a rule of the House could not be done. In all his argument he forgets that this rule is a rule of the House, adopted by the House, which changes every other rule which is inconsistent with it and which preceded it. We do not have to specifically repeal a law or a rule. If we subsequently pass a law or rule inconsistent with previous laws or rules, the subsequent rule or law prevails.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] spoke about the engrossment of these bills, and, of course, he referred to House bills, because Senate bills are already engrossed. Of course, when the omnibus bill is broken down, these House bills will be engrossed.

The gentleman spoke about the method and machinery of "unscrambling" the bills. That is obviously a job for the clerks of the House. In the discussion of this rule on March 26 that was thoroughly gone into, and the methods and machinery of handling that matter were specifically pointed out.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] even referred to rule XXVIII of the Senate as though a rule of that body could have any application to the proceedings of this House, when the Constitution says, "Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings." That language, by the way, is the only provision in the Constitution concerning the matter.

When the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] graces that great forum in that new $12,000,000 Supreme Court Building over there across the street, arguing his great constitutional point on this rule, I hope he has a copy of the Constitution with him. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I also call the Speakers' attention to the fact that the rule governing omnibus bills, as the gentleman from New York has well said, is one of simple procedure, and preserves the identity of each Senate bill and resolution when it provides—

> That in the consideration of any omnibus bill the proceedings, as set forth, shall have the same force and effect as if each Senate and House bill or resolution therein contained or referred to, were considered by the House as a separate and distinct bill or resolution.

So that the identity of each Senate bill is preserved. This is a simple procedure to expedite action for the House, to meet a situation that confronts us, and it is clearly within the power of the House, as the gentleman has so ably argued.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The rule permits each Senate bill to be put in these omnibus bills in toto. They can then be amended, and passed, and when the omnibus bill is passed with Senate bills in it, the omnibus bill is resolved or broken down into the individual Senate bills.

This argument advanced here today by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] under the guise of a "point of order" which was really a filibuster, is an offense to the House of Representatives which should not be tolerated. Before we adjourn we should consider not only individual private bills, but I, for one, am willing to stand here against this filibuster or a million filibusters until we consider the omnibus bills. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Last Friday the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] kindly indicated that it was his purpose to make the point of order he has raised today when the House began consideration of the so-called "omnibus private claims bill." The gentleman from Texas has served in the House for many years with distinction and is familiar with the rules of the House, and the Chair has given considerable thought to the point of order since the gentleman indicated on last Friday that it was his purpose again to raise it on this occasion.

The gentleman from Texas, in his argument today, has contended that this rule conflicts with a number of rules to which he has referred. Without passing upon the question of whether or not there is a conflict, the Chair will state that if there is a conflict the rule last adopted would control. The Chair assumes that if this rule should be found to conflict with previous rules, that the House intended, at least by implication, to repeal that portion of the previous rule with which it is in conflict.

The Chair may state that in passing upon this point of order it is not the province of the Chair, nor has the Chair any such intention, to pass upon the question of whether or not this rule is advisable or whether a better one could have been adopted.

The gentleman contends that the House may not, in the exercise of the power conferred upon it by the Constitution "to determine the rules of its proceedings", adopt a rule which has the effect of permitting an omnibus bill to contain one or more separate Senate bills as well as sundry House bills.

The Chair, in passing upon points of order, is limited by the terms of the rule which is applicable to the determination of the point of order. No one seriously questions the fact that the House did on March 27, 1935, by a majority vote adopt a resolution which had for its purpose an amendment to the rules of the House and which upon its adoption became clause 6 of rule XXIV. Although it is not necessary for the determination of the point of order for the Chair to pass upon the question as to whether the House had the power to make such a rule, the Chair will refer but briefly to two decision heretofore made—one by an eminent Speaker and one by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. Speaker Blaine, in the Forty-third Congress, in passing upon a question involving the right of the House to formulate rules, said:

He (the Chair) has several times ruled that the right of each House to determine what shall be its rules is an organic right expressly given by the Constitution of the United States. * * * The House is incapable, by any form of rules, of divesting itself of its inherent constitutional power to exercise its function to determine its own rules.

The Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Brewer in U. S. v. Ballin (144 U. S. 1), said:

Neither do the advantages or disadvantages, the wisdom or folly, of * * * a rule present any matters for judicial consideration. With the courts the question is only one of power. The Constitution empowers each House to determine its rules of proceedings. It may not by its rules ignore constitutional restraints or violate fundamental rights, and there should be a reasonable relation between the mode or method of proceeding established by the rule and the result which is sought to be attained. But within these limitations all matters of method are open to the determination of the House, and it is no impeachment of the rule to say that some other way would be better, more accurate, or even more just.

It is contended now that there is no rule of the House which authorizes a Senate bill to be incorporated in a House omnibus bill. The rule itself refutes that assertion, for in the second paragraph of the rule there is this language:

On the third Tuesday of each month * * * preference (shall) be given to omnibus bills containing bills or resolutions which have previously been objected to on a call of the Private Calendar.

Also, in the fifth paragraph of the rule there is a specific reference to Senate bills that may be included in an omnibus bill. It would seem that the language used in the rule contemplated inclusion of Senate bills as well as House bills if they had been previously objected to on a call of the calendar.

There has been some concern expressed as to whether it is possible to identify the Senate bills incorporated in an omnibus House bill. This concern may be removed by merely glancing at an omnibus bill. We find there that the Senate bills carry their own number and title in a paragraph set off by itself. Inasmuch as the omnibus bill carries each individual bill included therein by its number and title, it does not seem as though too great a difficulty would be encountered for the clerks after the passage of the omnibus bill to resolve the portions thereof into their original form. That is merely a clerical undertaking which does not present any undue difficulty. The Chair would think that after the passage of an omnibus bill the Journal would show the specific action on each individual bill which had been embodied in it. A message would be sent to the Senate stating that the House had passed such and such a bill, if it be a House bill, and requesting the concurrence of the Senate therein. If it be a Senate bill, the message would merely state that the House had passed it with the attestation of the Clerk of the House, which would not be questioned by the Senate.

On March 26, 1935, when the Rules Committee reported this change of the Private Calendar rule to the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] raised a point of order against the resolution, and in passing upon that point of order the Chair said:

In disposing of a point of order it is not within the province of the Chair to consider the effect, or what may be the effect, of the passage of any rule on legislation which may be pending. After all, rules reported by the Committee on Rules must be considered and acted upon by a majority of the House, which action, of course, is controlling.

Following the decision of the Chair which held in order the resolution, there was extensive debate upon the merits of the proposed change in the rule relating to procedure on private bills. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] explained the rule in minute detail. Opposition to the rule was expressed by several Members, but the House, notwithstanding the objections voiced, adopted the rule. It remains now for the Chair to pass solely on the question as to whether the House may parliamentarily proceed to the consideration of the so-called "omnibus bills" under the rule. The Chair reiterates the statement he made on March 26, that it is not within the province of the Chair to consider the effect or what may be the effect of this rule. The Chair may only look to the rule itself and direct the House to proceed in accordance with its terms.

The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas and directs the Clerk to proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was rejected.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LLOYD (at the request of Mr. WALLGREN), for 4 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. GILLETTE (at the request of Mr. JACOBSEN), for one week, on account of important business.

FIRST OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

H. R. 396

For the relief of the Virginia Engineering Co., Inc.

That the claim of the Virginia Engineering Co., Inc., for extra costs incurred in complying with requests of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau incident to the work performed under contract of June 24, 1924, for equipping the Veterans' Bureau Hospital at Aspinwall, Pa., be referred to the Court of Claims with authority to hear and determine the same as the law and equities may require, taking into account the actual out-of-pocket expenses, if any, incurred by said company in complying with such requests as well as the loss of profits, if any, in doing the work, as requested by the Veterans' Administration: Provided, That the claimant shall within 90 days from the enactment hereof file in said court its petition setting forth fully its ground of claim.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 5, strike out all of page 1 and page 2, lines 1 to 9, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Court of Claims of the United States be, and it is hereby, given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of the Virginia Engineering Co., Inc., and to award just compensation for extra costs incurred in complying with requests of the Director of the Veterans' Administration incident to the work performed under contract of June 24, 1924, for equipping the Veterans' Administration Hospital at Aspinwall, Pa., and to enter decree or judgment against the United States for such just compensation, if any, notwithstanding the bars or defense of lapse of time, laches, or any statute of limitation. Suit may be instituted by the claimant at any time within 4 months from the approval of this act. Proceedings in any suit brought in the Court of Claims under this act, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment therein shall be had as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction by virtue of the Judicial Code."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the amendment. At the end of the amendment, insert what is known as the "attorneys' fees proviso", which is found at the bottom of page 3, with the exception of making it applicable to any amount that is found by the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: At the end of the amendment insert the following "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual amendment that is placed in all such bills. When this matter goes to the Court of Claims, if the Court of Claims awards any amount, it is not necessary that there be a larger attorney's fee than 10 percent paid, because the whole matter has been virtually adjudicated by the committee. The evidence has been worked up. The same evidence that has been presented to the committee will be presented to the Court of Claims, and 10 percent of the amount allowed, if any be allowed at all, will be a sufficient attorney's fee for the attorneys. I think the amendment to the amendment should be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the bill or to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that a motion to strike out the last word or a so-called "pro forma" amendment is not in order under the rule.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the entire paragraph.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The paragraph has not been read.

Mr. McFARLANE. I thought the Clerk had finished reading the paragraph.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk started to read the paragraph. If the gentleman will contain himself until that is read, he then may move to strike the paragraph out.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 918

For the relief of Flensburger Dampfercompagnie

That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for payment to the Flensburger Dampfercompagnie, of Flensburg, Germany, for interest on the sum of $24,422, improperly collected from the said company by the United States Government for excess tonnage duties between November 22, 1919, and November 11, 1921, the said duties having been held by the United States Court of Claims to have been wrongfully withheld from the plaintiffs, from November 11, 1921, to August 17, 1932, when the judgment was paid, at the rate of 5 percent per annum, the sum of $13,147.17.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 3, line 5, strike out the words "that there is hereby authorized to be appropriated" and insert in lieu thereof the words "that the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay";

On page 3, line 8, strike out the words "for payment" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in full settlement of all claims against the United States"; and

On page 3, line 18, at the end of the line, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the paragraph just read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out from line 3, page 3, to line 6, page 4.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the paragraph beginning on line 3, page 3, to line 6 on page 4, and is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the payment of the sum of $13,147.17 as interest on $24,422 improperly collected from the claimants. This claim has been heard in a most thorough manner by the Court of Claims, and after an impartial review of the very claim which is embodied in this bill the Court of Claims said that the claimants were entitled to the sum of $24,442. This amount was paid to these claimants on August 17, 1932, by the Government of the United States as payment in full of the amount that the court found to be due.

The court did not say that the claimants were entitled to any interest on this claim. The court thought, and the court held, that these claimants were paid in full and that there should be no interest collected thereon. Yet, today, the bill you are now asked to consider involves an additional payment of $13,147 as interest, and dates back to the year 1919.

This is only a sample of bills that are included in these omnibus bills, bills that have been objected to heretofore by Members of the House on the Republican side as well as on the Democratic side. The Members in this House who have given their time and have made studies of these various bills are convinced that some of the bills, of which this is one, are wholly without merit, that the claimants have been paid in full years ago, and that they have no just claim upon the Federal Treasury today.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. If the gentleman will read the section he will see that this interest is due on a judgment that it took this country 11 years to pay. Now, why does the gentleman say the Government does not owe any interest on this money? Let us be fair in our statements to the House about bills that have been considered by the Claims Committee.

Mr. TRUAX. All right, I will answer the gentleman. If interest had been due and if interest were coming to these claimants, the court would have allowed interest at that time. They were not entitled to any interest. The Court of Claims is an official body set up to function in these very cases. The Members of Congress are not supposed to have the time or to take the time to thoroughly investigate these claims.

I hope the House will vote for my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TRUAX) there were—ayes 40, noes 65.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). Evidently, there is not a quorum present. The call is automatic.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 141, nays 143, answered "present" 2, not voting 143, as follows:

The following Members changed their votes from "aye" to "no": Mr. WHITE, Mr. COX, Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. MAY, Mr. BEITER, Mr. PARSONS, Mr. CROWE, Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky, Mr. VINSON of Kentucky, and Mr. WEAVER.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 18, after the word "of", strike out "$13,147.17."

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is the same thing we have just voted on. It is a dilatory amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no information that it has been voted upon, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, we are just about in this situation whether or not the House is going to vote blindly or whether it is going to vote on the merits of private bills presented to us.

Frankly, I believe from what I have been able to learn, that this bill has no merit in it, because it has not been customary in connection with other private bills to pay interest. Why should we allow interest to go to German claimants where they do not pay their debts to us? [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I challenge that statement.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Minnesota desires to interrupt the gentleman from New York, he will proceed under the rules.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. TABER. I am sorry, but I cannot yield at this time. I have known a great many of these bills reported out here for American claimants without interest. Why the House should go wild and attempt to pay interest on these claims I cannot understand.

Unless this House establishes a practice of considering these bills on their merits, and voting down those that have no merits, it will break down this system which has been established by this rule right at the very start. I hope this amendment will be adopted, and that in that way you will throw out the effects of this bill and get rid of it, so that you will not destroy your rule and destroy the whole procedure. When bills have merit, they ought to be passed, be they private bills or any other, and they ought not to be considered on some wild idea but should be considered on their merits.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. Does not the gentleman believe, in view of the fact that this claim was fully adjudicated by the Court of Claims in 1932 at which time the court refused to allow interest, that this House has no justification for overriding that decision?

Mr. TABER. It has not, in my opinion.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Does not the gentleman draw a distinction between interest on a claim and interest on a judgment rendered by a court and a refusal to pay a judgment?

Mr. TABER. Not under such circumstances.

Mr. COSTELLO. The Court of Claims rendered this judgment on February 18, 1932. The United States paid that judgment on August 19, 1932. All the interest that could be involved would be 6 months.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. This amendment merely strikes out the computation and leaves in the bill "interest at the rate of 5 percent."

Mr. TABER. The amount that is to be paid is the meat of the question.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. But the rate of interest of 5 percent remains in the bill if the gentleman's amendment is adopted.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I hope the House will vote down the amendment. It has voted down the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] to strike out the paragraph. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is, in my opinion, dilatory; it is a repetition of the same thing that we voted on. I do not know of any reason why the Government of the United States should withhold money that belongs to somebody for 11 years without paying interest on it. It had the use of it all that time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from New York tried to drag a red herring across the trail by impugning Germany's standing as a debtor. Will the gentleman tell the House what moneys Germany owes the American Government?

Mr. PITTENGER. I do not know of any.

Mr. KNUTSON. And I do not either.

Mr. COSTELLO. Will the gentleman tell why the Court of Claims refused to grant interest at the same time that they made the award of $24,000?

Mr. PITTENGER. I suppose because there was no authority in the jurisdiction of the court to do it.

Mr. COSTELLO. The fact is that the court did not allow it.

Mr. PITTENGER. It should have.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. What did the United States withhold—money or property?

Mr. PITTENGER. Money due these people.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. What did the Government do with the money during those 11 years?

Mr. PITTENGER. It had the use of it all that time. I should say that this amendment is frivolous and it is without merit. It ought to be voted down and the Claims Committee of this House ought to be backed up by the membership of the House. That is all I have to say.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 76, noes 72.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 18, strike out all of line 18 up to the colon.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, the House has already declared itself as being opposed to paying interest on this claim. The amendment just adopted, offered by the gentleman from New York, only half does the job. It strikes out the total sum of interest but simply allows interest at the rate of 5 percent from November 11, 1921, to August 17, 1932.

If the House wishes to complete the job, you should vote for this amendment which eliminates the words "at the rate of 5 percent", as well as the figure "$13,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 928

To authorize the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claim of the George A. Fuller Co.

That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of the George A. Fuller Co. for an amount not exceeding $29,808.08, as reimbursement of expenditures made and cost of work performed by the said George A. Fuller Co. in the completion, at the request of the National Surety Co., of contract W-6511-qm-621, dated July 9, 1931, with the Supreme Construction Co. for the construction of certain buildings at Fort Jay, Governors Island, N. Y., after the United States had terminated the right of the Supreme Construction Co. to proceed and the work had been taken over by the National Surety Co., as surety on the performance bond, and before said surety company was placed in the hands of a rehabilitator appointed by the Insurance Department of the State of New York. Such allowance as may be made by the Comptroller General as herein provided shall be paid from the appropriation made for the construction of the buildings in question, which are hereby made available therefor, and the payment so made shall be charged to the National Surety Co. in the adjustment of the accounts between said company and the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out, beginning on line 10, page 4, down to and including line 6, on page 5, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of the George A. Fuller Co. in an amount not to exceed $29,808.08 for labor and material furnished and work performed by it in the completion of contract W-6511-qm-21, dated July 9, 1931, with the Supreme Construction Co., for the construction of certain buildings at Fort Jay, Governors Island, N. Y., subject to the requirement that the Supreme Construction Co., and its surety, the National Surety Co., or their receivers and liquidators, file with the Comptroller General of the United States their written consent to such settlement and adjustment, and subject to the further requirement that said claim, if not filed within 60 days after the date of approval of this act, shall not be received and considered by the Comptroller General of the United States. Such allowance as may be made by the Comptroller General as herein provided shall be paid from the appropriation made for the construction of the buildings in question, which is hereby made available therefor, and the payment so made shall be charged to the contractor and to the surety in the adjustment of the accounts between said companies and the United States as if the payments had been made to them."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON to the committee amendment: On page 5, line 10, of the committee amendment, strike out "$29,808.08" and insert in lieu thereof "$808.08."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this George A. Fuller Co. ought to be compelled to pursue its remedies against the company responsible to it under its contract. It has no contract with the United States. It was not employed by the United States. If you will go down the Avenue and around Washington you will see some of the largest buildings built by this Government now under construction by the George A. Fuller Co. They have made hundreds of thousands of dollars from this Government on contracts, and despite that, they come in now with a claim of $29,000 against the Government when it has no contract with the Government and the Government did not employ it, and its claim ought to be against the surety company that employed it.

Now, $29,000 is a small amount for Congress to handle, but after all it is a pretty good sum. If some of you lawyers who practice law when you go home, had a client who was being sued for $29,000 you would fight every step of the way in that court to save him from paying it if he did not owe it. You would see that the proper pleadings were there. You would file your exceptions and demurrers against improper pleadings. You would see that they made proper allegations before they got into court. You would see that an unbiased jury was selected. You would see that no evidence that was not in accordance with the law and procedure was introduced against your client. You would fight every step of the way and probably take 2 or 3 days trying that case involving $29,000.

Yet Congress, without knowing a thing in the world about the case, except from affidavits filed, would pass such a bill in a few minutes. We have a way of trying cases on affidavits here. There is not a judge on earth who would allow an ex parte affidavit to be introduced against your client in a court; affidavits, without any cross-examination by the Government or by anyone on behalf of the people back home whom you represent and I represent, whose tax money pays these claims. I have seen many hundreds of millions of dollars paid out during the years I have been here on affidavits. They have never been paid out with my consent. I have voted to stop them every time they came up. I do not believe this Congress ought to pay the George A. Fuller Co. $29,000 on this claim. I do not think they ought to pay them a cent.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. TABER. The Comptroller General, according to page 20 of the report says "The enactment of this bill would operate to deprive the United States of its right of priority and set-off in this case and would thus be regarded a precedent for like surrender in similar cases."

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, I cannot yield, as I want to use my remaining time to speak against this claim.

I ask the Speaker not to take such interruptions out of my time.

I want to be fair to everybody. If the Government of the United States justly owes anybody money, I want to see the Government pay it. But it does not owe this $29,000. It is not simply $29,000 that is involved here. Just as the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has suggested, your Comptroller General, one of the most valuable men we have in the make-up of this Government, Gen. J. R. McCarl, tells you that if you pass this bill you will cost this Government many times the amount involved in this bill.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry; I cannot. I must use my own time. All that we can do here is to do what we think is right. I do what I think is right. I follow my judgment. I do not follow anybody's judgment but my own, except on administrative matters that are brought here, where the President says that he and his administration need it for the Government—to bring us out of this terrible depression. That is the only time I waive my judgment. But on these matters when they come up I may not vote always with the majority, but I vote my honest sentiments. I vote for what I consider to be the good of the people of the United States whom I, in part, help to represent here. We do not just represent the people of our district. The oath which I took and which you took is to represent the people of the United States in this Congress, people in every district in the 48 States of this Union.

I am not going to vote to allow this sum; I am going to vote against this Fuller bill. I was compelled to offer this pro forma amendment to enable me to speak against the bill.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentleman from Texas is very unfair in this entire proposition. Boiled down to its essence, we have simply the situation where a concern by the name of the Supreme Constructing Co. contracted with the Government to do some building at Fort Jay. A bond was put up by the National Surety Co. The Supreme Construction Co. got into difficulties and could not complete its contract. Under the arrangement the National Surety Co. would be compelled to go forward with the work. The National Surety Co., unfortunately, also got into difficulties after, however, it, with the knowledge of the Government, had contracted with the George Fuller Construction Co. to complete this work. The George Fuller Construction Co. devoted its time and energies and expended $29,808.08 exactly. No interest is asked. This money was spent for labor and material. The company seeks to make no profit whatever in completing this contract.

On a mere technicality the Comptroller General says that the Government has offsets against the National Surety Co. on other bonds of other buildings and other constructions, but which offsets have no relation to the Fort Jay matter or to the claimant. The National Surety Co., unfortunately, is in difficulties; its assets are being liquidated by the superintendent of insurance of the State of New York. Because the Government cannot offset against the National Surety Co. is no reason why the Government should be unjustly enriched to the disadvantage of the George A. Fuller Construction Co. The latter came forward willingly with the knowledge and approval of the Government to complete this work. Along comes the gentleman from Texas and wants to offer an insult to the intelligence of the Membership of this House by suggesting that we give this company for its labor and material—no profit whatsoever—for the completion of this work, a measly $808.08. Perhaps he wants to be smart. I say it would be ridiculous to have this amendment prevail. Certainly this company is entitled to the money it expended in the way of labor and materials even though because of this technicality the Government may lose on its other bonds with the National Surety Co. by way of being unable to offset anything that may be due by the Government through defaults of those insured by the National Surety Co.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Who hired the Fuller Co. to do the work?

Mr. CELLER. The Government hired the Fuller Co. to do the work at the instance of the National Surety Co., or rather the National Surety did the hiring with approval of the Government. The Government cannot deny approval. It stood by and offered no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. COSTELLO. The contract was made by the National Surety Co. with the George A. Fuller Co. The Government did not sign any contract whatsoever with the Fuller Co.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman does not mean to imply that the George A. Fuller Co. could go to Fort Jay, put up its scaffolds, bring in labor from various parts of the country, bring in material with the Government knowing nothing about it. The Government in this way consented to have this work done and the building erected. The Government knew all about it all the time. To say that the Government knew nothing about it would be ridiculous. If the Government should take this position business concerns would not come forward in the future to advance their moneys in the way of labor and material to complete work started by some other concern.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Did the Government contract to have the George A. Fuller Co. do it?

Mr. CELLER. The Government had knowledge of it. It practically consented. Its acceptance is equivalent in justice and equity to an actual contract.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 4, beginning in line 7, strike out all down to and including line 4 on page 6.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Has the committee amendment been passed upon?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understand this is a motion to strike out the committee amendment.

Mr. CELLER. It strikes out all of the committee amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The committee amendment should be passed on; the Members should be given an opportunity to vote on the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The committee amendment undertakes to insert. The gentleman from California moves to strike out all of the committee amendment. The Chair thinks, therefore, that it is a preferential motion.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I think we should clearly understand the facts involved in this case. The Government entered into a contract for the building of a hospital at Fort Jay on Governors Island. The contracting company filed a bond through the National Surety Co. The company failed. The Government went to the National Surety Co. and asked them whether they wished to have the Government take over the completion of the hospital building or whether the National Surety Co. itself would take over the work. The National Surety Co. agreed to take over the work and engaged the services of the George A. Fuller Co.

The Federal Government did not contract with George A. Fuller & Co. at any time in these proceedings. Subsequently the National Surety Co. got into financial difficulties, and as a result the insurance commissioner of the State of New York took over its affairs. Under these circumstances the hospital building was completed, and the sum of $37,467.50 remains in the Treasury to pay off the balance due contractors. Now this bill is going to authorize payment to the George A. Fuller Co. in the sum of $29,808.08 by the Federal Government, before all other claimants. There is no privity of contract between the Fuller Co. and the United States Government. If there is an agreement at all, it lies between the United States Government and the insurance commissioner of the State of New York.

Mr. Speaker, there are five objections to the passage of this bill. First, the United States is by law entitled to priority of payment of its claims where the debtor is insolvent. In this case the surety company owes the United States, however, more than the United States owes the surety company. Secondly, other subcontractors have rights equal to, if not superior to, those of the Fuller Co. Third, by passing this bill we operate to deprive the United States of its right of priority and set-off, which would be used as a precedent for a like surrender of rights in similar cases. In other words, the United States Government has a right to offset the $37,467.50 we owe to the insurance company against the amount which the insurance company owes the Government. If we pass this bill, we waive those rights and establish a precedent which I think would be very bad legislation. Fourth, by passing this bill, it might deprive other creditors of the insurance company, not connected with this hospital construction work at all, of their just pro rata share of such amount as might be found to be due to the surety company.

In other words, this money should be paid to the surety company. There are other claimants besides this contractor who have claims against the surety company. We are not in position to judge of those claims. The claimants are not before us; yet we are going to pay one of the claimants $29,808.08. Fifth, there is some question as to whether the surety company might not still recover the amount which we would pay by this bill to the Fuller Co. when a final adjustment is made between the United States Government and the surety company. In other words, we are not sure but what the insurance company may come back to the Congress, even though we pay the Fuller Co. $29,808.08, and demand payment of that amount of money to the insurance company.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, may I say in answer to what the gentleman has just stated, that there is the moral equivalent privity of contract because you cannot stand idly by and accept the benefits conferred by someone else and then say you are not bound.

At Fort Jay the Army officers superintended this work; they supervised the work. These Army officers are the arms, the agents of the Government. They saw this building erected and completed by this claimant. It does not now lie in the mouth of the Government, as it would not lie in the mouth of any other contender, now that it has taken the benefits; to say there is not privity of contract it would be a sort of legalized robbery. The minute the Government consented to have this work done under these circumstances it is bound as though by contract.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. After the contract was made by the Fuller Co. with the insurance company, did the insurance company go into receivership before the contract was completed?

Mr. CELLER. That is correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. Therefore the Fuller Co. did not have to complete the work?

Mr. CELLER. It did not have to do it at all. They only agreed to do this work because the Government officials begged them to complete the work after the surety company hired claimant to do the work.

Mr. McCORMACK. When the insurance company went into the hands of a receiver there was some uncompleted work which the Fuller Co. did not have to complete?

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. And the Fuller Co. went ahead and completed the work at their own expense?

Mr. CELLER. Yes. In fact, further, there was allotted and set aside something like $37,000, which the Government is ready and willing to pay out. It wants the authority from this body to pay this money. The money is there.

Mr. Speaker, there is no danger of double payment. You are conjuring up a fear that cannot exist. I certainly would not vote for a double payment. Should any entity come before us at a subsequent period with a fantastic bill asking us to pay again, certainly we are not going to consent to that, and because of that imaginary fear we should not deprive this company of the money which it expended for labor and material.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I want to vote right on this matter. I should like to have the gentleman explain, if he can, why the Comptroller General recommended that we not pay this claim?

Mr. CELLER. Because of the technicality I referred to in my previous remarks, namely, that the Government would not have an offset against the National Surety Co. But those offsets arise out of probably hundreds of other transactions, hundreds of other buildings, and the guaranteeing of hundreds of other contractors. Just because of that technicality it would be highly unjust to deprive this company of these thousands of dollars which they have advanced. Remember that no profit is asked in connection with this matter. No interest is asked. It is only money advanced for labor and material by this company that came forward out of the goodness of its heart and finished this work.

Mr. Speaker, I want to read this statement made by the committee. The committee states this accurately:

1. The contract has been completed and accepted; the United States has obtained all that it contracted to receive, but it has not paid out the agreed contract price in exchange for labor and material furnished.

2. It is due only to a matter of form that the Government has not disbursed either all or part of the contract balance of $37,467.50 remaining to the credit of this contract. If the Government had completed the contract for the account of the surety, such part of the balance as was necessary to effect completion of the work would have been expended. It is urged, therefore, that it is due to a pure matter of form in that the surety having elected to complete the contract, that the Government is still holding money on account of the contract balance.

Under those circumstances, I again implore the Members of this House not to deprive the Fuller Co. of that which is justly due it, the twenty-nine-odd thousand dollars.

To get the record accurate I insert in my remarks a complete statement prepared for me by the counsel of the claimant, Mr. Leo T. Kessam, a distinguished lawyer, who represented, ably and well, our Judiciary Committee in the receivership investigation:

Under date of July 9, 1931, a contract was executed by the United States of America (contract no. W–6511–qm–621) and the Supreme Construction Co., Inc., a New York corporation, for the construction of a hospital at Fort Jay, Governors Island, N. Y.; the contract price being $331,600, with extras aggregating $31,446.60, making a total contract price to be paid by the Government of $363,046.60. On or about July 10, 1931, the National Surety Co. executed a public contractor's performance bond, standard Government form, in relation to this contract. Under date of January 19, 1933, the Government terminated the contractor's right to proceed, and informing the surety of this default, inquired as to whether the surety wished to proceed with the work or to have the Government complete it for their account. Such notice and inquiry to the surety is contained in a letter dated January 19, 1933, written by Maj. John D. Kilpatrick, Quartermaster Corps, constructing quartermaster, at room 510, 39 Whitehall Street, and is as follows:

"Inclosed herewith for your information, formal notice of default of the Supreme Construction Co., Inc., on their contract with the Government for the construction of one hospital at Fort Jay, Governors Island, N. Y., taking effect as of today.

"Immediate advice is requested as to whether the National Surety Co. elects to proceed with the completion of the work, or agrees to the Government's completing the work for the surety's account."

On January 20, 1933, the surety advised the Government that it elected to exercise its right to complete the work. Thereafter the National Surety Co. made a contract in writing with my client, George A. Fuller Co., for the completion of this contract and accordingly thereafter, and as a result of the work done by my client, the contract was completed and formally accepted by the Government as of June 20, 1933.

By virtue of an order of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, signed by Mr. Justice Edward J. Gavegan, and dated April 29, 1933, the superintendent of insurance of the State of New York was authorized and directed to forthwith take possession of the property of the National Surety Co. and to conduct its business pursuant to the provisions of article XI of the insurance law of the State of New York. The superintendent of insurance, acting by his duly authorized agents, requested the George A. Fuller Co. to continue with the work of completing the hospital pursuant to the terms of their contract with the National Surety Co. and advised the George A. Fuller Co. that the moneys due it under its contract would be paid in full, if they would continue their work, just as soon as the balance of the contract price was paid by the Government to the surety. Thereupon the Fuller Co. continued with the work and subsequently completed it in strict conformity with the original Government specifications and as a result thereof the contract was completed and as before stated, the work formally accepted by the Government.

Upon the completion of the original contract between the Government and the Supreme Construction Co., Inc., a contract balance in the amount of $37,467.50, remained, which is arrived at as follows:

Original contract price	$331,600.00
Approved extras	31,446.60
Total contract price	363,046.60
Paid by Government prior to default	325,579.10
Unpaid balance	37,467.50

Upon the completion of the contract between the Fuller Co. and the surety, the former, which had received certain payments under its contract with the surety, was entitled to receive the sum of $29,808 08. In support of the statement herein that the Superintendent of Insurance agreed to see that the Fuller Co. was paid out of the moneys set aside for this contract by the Government and that the balance due to it is the sum stated herein, reference is made to an original letter from the assistant special deputy superintendent of insurance, Bertram H. Bratney, dated January 29, 1934, which original letter is attached hereto (exhibit "B"), and wherein the assistant special deputy superintendent of insurance in charge of the rehabilitation of the National Surety Co. consents that the Government may pay directly to Fuller this sum of $29,808.08, out of the contract balance remaining to the credit of the original contract in this matter.

We must consider this letter as a claim and demand that the United States pay to the George A. Fuller Co., out of the proceeds in its possession and to the credit of the above-described contract, the sum of $29,808.08. This claim is based as follows:

I. THE CONTRACT BALANCE OF $37,467.50 IS AVAILABLE TO PAY THIS CLAIM

The contract has been completed and accepted; the United States had obtained all that it contracted to receive, but it has not paid out the agreed contract price in exchange for labor and material furnished. The Government has not seen fit to pay the balance of the contract price to the National Surety Co. and it is presumed that this payment is postponed at this time because of certain alleged indebtedness of that surety company to the Government under other bonds. While it is conceded that the Government may exercise the right of set-off it has been held that there is a duty on the part of the Government of establishing the legality of the set-off and the bringing of court proceedings for that purpose, as the validity of the set-off cannot be otherwise determined.

Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. v. McCarl (63 Fed. (2d) 203; 61 App. D. C. 290).

However, up to the present so far as the claimant knows, the Government has not judicially determined any definite amount of set-off as against the National Surety Co. and, accordingly, at the present time and in view of the fact that the National Surety Co., acting by authorized agents of the superintendent of insurance (exhibit B), have consented that this payment be made to this claimant, there is presently no legal objection to the payment.

II. AS A MATTER OF FAIRNESS AND EQUITY THIS CLAIM SHOULD BE PAID

(a) It is only due to a matter of form that the Government has not disbursed either all or part of the contract balance, $37,467.50, in payment of the cost of completing this work, after the default of the original contractor. The Government, through its contracting officer, Maj. John D. Kilpatrick, gave to the surety an option to determine whether it, the surety, should complete the work, or whether the surety preferred to have the Government complete the work for the account of the surety. (See Major Kilpatrick's letter quoted already.) No one will dispute the fact that if the Government had completed the work as it had a legal right to do, it would have long before this disbursed such part of the contract balance as represented the cost of completion. Consequently, it may be urged that due to a pure matter of form, in that the surety elected to complete the contract, that the Government is still holding this contract balance and, in fact, had the Government contracted with this claimant instead of the surety for doing the very same thing, viz., completing this defaulted contract, the Government would now already have paid the claim asserted herein.

(b) As is indicated by the present laws, it will be conceded that the Government is anxious to protect persons or corporations who have furnished labor or materials used in the construction or repair of any public buildings or public work. Surely it may be properly urged here, that every known equity must be in favor of this claimant who has furnished labor and material to the Government for which it has not been paid and for which, through no fault of its own, it cannot be paid except through redress to the funds available and in possession of the Government for this particular purpose.

III. THE COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES HAS THE AUTHORITY TO PAY THIS CLAIM

(a) As a matter of law: As set forth in point I this payment may be properly made as a matter of law because "there is no present judicial determination as to set-off which would as a matter of law perhaps prohibit payment.

(b) As a Matter of Equity: Chapter 334, of the Laws of 1928, approved April 10, 1928, and contained in vol. 45 of the United States Statutes at page 413, provides as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That when there is filed in the General Accounting Office a claim or demand against the United States that may not lawfully be adjusted by the use of an appropriation heretofore made, but which claim or demand, in the judgment of the Comptroller General of the United States, contains such elements of legal liability or equity as to be deserving of the consideration of the Congress, he shall submit the same to the Congress by a special report containing the material facts and his recommendation thereon."

Under this statute, surely, if the Comptroller General shall find that the claim of the George A. Fuller Co., as herein set forth may not lawfully be adjusted, certainly if he shall find deserving elements of legal liability or equity, then through the medium of this statute, he has the opportunity of assisting this claimant.

Because of this unusual situation in which the claimant finds itself and because of the fact that the Government has had the advantage of the labor and material furnished by the claimant, and because the claimant is in this position due to no fault of its own and without other remedy, it is sincerely and respectfully urged that this claim be given careful consideration and attention and it is further respectfully urged that this claim be allowed as stated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CELLER) there were—ayes 79, noes 43.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 298. An act for the relief of Jack Page; and

H. R. 617. An act for the relief of Lake B. Morrison.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 156. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the city of Perth Amboy, N. J.;

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I repeat the announcement that my colleague the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] is absent on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7506) to provide for a stenographic grade in the offices of Chief Clerk and Superintendent in the Railway Mail Service, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 884) for the relief of Lt. Comdr. G. C. Manning, and it was signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate papers in the nature of petitions from several citizens of Gaithersburg, Md., praying for the enactment of House bill 6990, providing a 40-hour week in the Postal Service, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of the "Needy Veterans' Bonus Army", signed by Royal W. Robertson, commander, California; James J. McGrath, lieutenant commander, Pennsylvania, and other citizens, praying for the prompt enactment of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 300) authorizing and directing the payment of the adjusted-service certificates to the World War veterans out of the appropriations for public works, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. POPE presented the following joint memorials of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

A joint memorial to the distinguished President of the United States and Hon. Harry Hopkins, Federal Works Progress Director for the United States, and the Honorable J. L. Hood, works progress director for the State of Idaho

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas many of the irrigated sections of Idaho have become overrun with noxious weeds, such as wild morning glory and Canadian thistle; and

Whereas due to the economic conditions of our country during the last few years, it has been impossible to furnish State or Federal aid to assist in the eradication of such noxious weeds; and

Whereas the noxious-weed menace is the most serious menace confronting Idaho agriculture today, it having severely impaired, and, in many cases, actually destroyed our farms; and

Whereas this menace has achieved such proportions that the farmers, the counties, and the State of Idaho seem helpless in the face of it: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Idaho (the senate concurring), That we respectfully urge upon the President of the United States, the Honorable Harry Hopkins, in his official capacity, and the Honorable J. L. Hood, works progress director for Idaho, that they seriously consider the making of an allocation from the Works Progress Administration for the purpose of putting men to work combating the noxious-weed menace that now threatens to destroy much of the valuable farm lands of the State of Idaho; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho be authorized, and he is hereby directed, to immediately forward certified copies of this memorial to the Honorable President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, to the Honorable Harry Hopkins, and the Honorable J. L. Hood, Public Works director for Idaho, Congressman D. Worth Clark, Congressman Compton I. White, Senator James P. Pope, and Senator William E. Borah.

Joint memorial

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Idaho, in legislative session, duly and regularly assembled, most respectfully present the following preamble and resolution, to wit:

Whereas there have heretofore been available certain emergency funds for the retirement of submarginal farm land and the development of this poor land for a better economic and social use; and

Whereas the administrative program and policy of the Government has recently been changed so that insufficient funds are at present available for the further purchase and development of such submarginal lands; and

Whereas the conditions within the State of Idaho are such that the retirement of such poor farm lands from cultivation is necessary for the permanent rehabilitation of stranded farm families, the adequate administration of the Taylor Grazing Act, the consolidation of scattered holdings of Federal, State, and county lands, the reduction of the costs of public services, and the rational development of land resources: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Idaho (the house of representatives concurring), That we most respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States that the Congress make sufficient appropriation for the continuance and necessary expansion of the purchase and better economic development of submarginal lands.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS AFFECTING MANGANESE

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD a release of correspondence from the American Manganese Producers' Association bearing on the subject of the proposed or existing reciprocal trade agreement between this country and Russia.

I also ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD an article from the Washington Times of July 15 bearing on the same subject, under the caption "Steel Imports Blamed in United States Labor Loss."

There being no objection, the matters were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN MANGANESE PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., July 15.

"The back-door methods of the State Department in negotiating foreign-trade pacts, to the destruction of American industry, must be stopped", J. Carson Adkerson, president of the American Manganese Producers Association, declared today.

The United States trade pacts with Russia and Brazil will mean a loss to the United States Government of $2,500,000 collectible as duty on manganese ore imported during the last 3 years and now piled in the bonded warehouse yards of the steel companies in the United States. It will mean an additional loss of approximately $2,500,000 per year in revenue on ore to be imported.

The Russian trade pact will serve no purpose in foreign trade. Imported manganese ore will sell at the same price f. o. b. Atlantic ports with or without the duty. The only difference will be the loss of the duty to the United States and the destruction of the growing domestic manganese industry, essential in our national defense, and will deny employment to from 5,000 to 7,000 men at a time when this employment is sorely needed.

[From the Washington Times of July 15, 1935]

STEEL IMPORTS BLAMED IN UNITED STATES LABOR LOSS

NEW YORK, July 15.—More than 3,900 American workmen have been deprived of full-time jobs during the first 5 months of this year because of the increase in imports of foreign steel, the American Iron and Steel Institute announced today.

Government figures on imports and a recent report of the United States Department of Labor on the number of man-hours required to produce steel products were used as the basis of the computations.

STATISTICS QUOTED

The Iron and Steel Institute found that tonnage of steel imports from January to May was 65 percent above the volume of the corresponding period last year. Domestic production during the same period was less than 3.5 percent above the first 5 months of 1934.

The report of the Iron and Steel Institute says:

"Of the jobs lost to American workmen through the importation of foreign-made steel about 2,640 would have been available in the steel mills, according to calculations based on the Department of Labor figures, while mining the ore, coal, and limestone necessary to produce the steel in this country would have employed 570 more men.

TARIFF CHANGES

"Another 590 men would have been required to transport by rail and water the 6 tons of raw materials entered into each ton of steel and finally to transport the finished steel itself to market.

"Manufacture of coke for use in blast furnaces would have given employment to 110 more men."

The Iron and Steel Institute points out that under the reciprocal trade agreements already in force or proposed between the United States and other countries duties are being lowered on many types of steel entering American markets from abroad.

BRITISH AGREEMENTS

Great Britain, on the other hand, recently raised its tariffs on iron and steel from 33⅓ to 50 percent above former levels.

Under threat of securing still higher barriers to protect themselves against the inroads of foreign competition, British steel producers have reached agreements with Continental producers to limit imports after the first year of these pacts to a tonnage below the total imports of 1933—the lowest in many years.

REVISION OF COPYRIGHT ACT

Mr. WAGNER presented several telegrams relating to a revision of the Copyright Act, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 22, 1935.

Senator WAGNER:

I sincerely hope you will oppose copyright bill, S. 3047. The bill gives foreign authors basic copyright without formality, but denies it to American authors. The bill seems to protect chiefly the commercial enterprises which live on the authors.

JOHN ERSKINE.

HOLLYWOOD, CALIF., July 16, 1935.

Senator WAGNER,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The phraseology of the current copyright amendment bill known as the "Duffy bill" bewildered me, because I am not very familiar with such documents. However, what did seep through my mind left me in utter amazement. How can anyone vote for such an un-American document? It is obvious that it deprives the struggling author and composer of every vestige of defense against infringement. It does not take a legal specialized mind to understand that behind this bill are sponsors who are attempting to take away rights by amending the present Copyright Act. I beg of you, honorable sir, that you consider carefully and justly, and when you do I am positive you must vote "nay." In my talks with fellow craftsmen everyone voiced indignant fear at even the possibility of this bill being enacted. I hope my plea, while humble in argument, will have force, because it is sincere and has the little fellow at heart.

LEW BROWN,

(Formerly De Sylva, Brown, and Henderson).

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 16, 1935.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

As a song writer of 40 years' standing, I am unalterably opposed to the Duffy bill pending before Senate. The American Society of Authors, Composers, and Publishers is a lifesaver and greatest protection for writers. Congratulations for the wonderful work you are doing. Best wishes and regards.

GUS EDWARDS.

HOLLYWOOD, CALIF., July 16, 1935.

Senator WAGNER:

After studying the Duffy bill, no. S. 3047, carefully, I must register my objections to same most emphatically. At the outset this amendment to the copyright bill grants to foreign authors and composers rights which are denied American authors. In my opinion this is too big a price to pay for our entry into the Berne convention. The subsection which removes the minimum damage provision embodied in the existing law works a hardship on the so-called "little fellow", because the possibility of recovering nominal damages would make it unprofitable to defray the expense of a copyright suit. The statutory damages provided for in the present copyright law has certainly acted as a block against legalized piracy. This proposed bill certainly takes away rights from the creators and destroys initiative. Furthermore it will tend to encourage more usage of foreign works when American writers are in urgent need of every encouragement possible. This bill would enable broadcasters and other users of music for profit to help themselves to works without any worry of penalty for infringement. Please believe me, I have given this careful thought, and it is only because of my interest in 90 percent of American composers, authors, novelists, and writers who can barely make a living. I have always held a great regard for your sense of justice, and I am confident you will not fail to recognize the injustice which this bill would do to members of the creative arts.

IRVING BERLIN.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 3086) to provide for the striking of medals, in lieu of coins, for commemorative purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1130) thereon.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS ON SEATING OF SENATOR HOLT

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Printing, reported a resolution (S. Res. 171), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing the proceedings of the Senate in the seating of RUSH D. HOLT as Senator from West Virginia, together with the petitions and the briefs filed with the Committee on Privileges and Elections respecting said seating, be printed as a Senate document.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 3271) providing for the deductibility of charitable and other contributions by corporations for the purposes of income tax; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3272) authorizing the Snake or Piute Tribe of Indians of the former Malheur Indian Reservation of Oregon to sue in the Court of Claims; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BACHMAN:

A bill (S. 3273) for the relief of Oswald Orlando; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DUFFY:

A bill (S. 3274) for the relief of Mary Hobart; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 3275) for the relief of Thomas Ernest Warren; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE (by request):

A bill (S. 3276) to provide for payment of hospital care in lieu of hospitalization or domiciliary care in certain cases, and to limit the reduction of compensation in such blind cases; to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 7506) to provide for a stenographic grade in the offices of Chief Clerk and Superintendent in the Railway Mail Service was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. SHEPPARD, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3226) for the relief of Gertrude Hunter, and it was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

INCREASE OF TAXATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to file, for appropriate reference and printing, an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the tax bill when it shall come from the House of Representatives. The amendment proposes an excess-profits tax.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be received, printed, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

THE BANKING SYSTEM—AMENDMENTS

Mr. FLETCHER submitted four amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide for the sound, effective, and uninterrupted operation of the banking system, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

RELIEF OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS—AMENDMENT

Mr. WHEELER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3123) to provide for the relief of public-school districts and other public-school authorities, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO GRAZING ACT—BAD LANDS NATIONAL MONUMENT

Mr. NORBECK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3019) to amend sections 1,

3, and 15 of "An act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes", approved June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

COMPENSATION FOR THE TAKING OF CERTAIN PROPERTY—AMENDMENT

Mr. CLARK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3252) to provide for recovery of compensation for taking property, and for damage to the same from overflow, water seepage, water percolation, or interference with drainage, and for interference with the sewer, drainage, or flood-protection system of any municipality, and to any legally organized drainage or levee district, by the construction, maintenance, or operation of any dam, structure, or other improvement by the United States in or along navigable streams and inland waterways for the improvement of navigation thereon, and to provide for the prosecution of claims against the United States therefor and payment of judgments, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

RICE LAKE AND CONTIGUOUS LANDS IN MINNESOTA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2532) to amend an act entitled "An act setting aside Rice Lake and contiguous lands in Minnesota for the exclusive use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota" approved June 23, 1926, and for other purposes, which was, on page 3, line 19, after the word "lakes", to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, however, That there shall be and hereby is excluded from said reserves any and all areas, whether of land or water, necessary or useful for the development to the maximum of water power or the improvement of navigation in the Pigeon River, an international boundary stream, and tributary lakes and streams.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SALARIES AND WAGES

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a brief article and the accompanying table appearing in the New Republic for July 10. The article is entitled "Some Salaries and Wages."

There being no objection, the article and table were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New Republic of July 10, 1935]

SOME SALARIES AND WAGES

The table that appears below has been compiled by the New Republic from two sets of official figures in Washington. The figures for officials' salaries are drawn from the records of the Securities Exchange Commission. Those for the wages in the same industries are taken from the "Trend of Employment" compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor.

The individual named in the second column is in most cases the chairman or president of the company. He is usually, but not always, the individual receiving the highest salary. It should be noted that the figures for 1933 and 1934 are not strictly comparable, since the latter covers total compensation, including bonuses, etc.

The weekly wages given for December 1933 and for December 1934 are in each case for the industry in which the major part of the company's business lies.

THE CONSTITUTION AND THE NEW DEAL

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered on July 13 by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson during a debate with Representative James W. Wadsworth, of New York, before the Ninth Annual Session Institute of Public Affairs at the University of Virginia on the subject of The Constitution and the New Deal.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We have no better statesman than Senator WADSWORTH. He has had my admiration for many years. On this partly partisan question of the new deal. I would ever remember that he selflessly stands for what he believes is best. But I would never forget that he is speaking from his tradition and his type—an aristocrat of the pure Hamiltonian strain and the very flower of the flock.

There are foundations—deep and old—for this controversy over the new deal. It goes back to a conflict of opinion at the very birth of our beginnings—a difference in the genius of the two foremost founders of this Nation. Even if its outward semblance often shifts from party to party, the basis of that difference has remained for a century and a half. It was not fundamentally a question of State rights or Federal power. That was only one aspect of the real underlying conflict which was simply and forever this: "Shall our political and economic policy be what the people want, or shall it be what some guiding group may think is best for them?"

Whether you call one side Federalists, Tories, or Republicans, and the other side anti-Federalists, Whigs, or Democrats—that difference remains—the difference between a disorganized mob and an organized appetite—the difference between run-of-the-mill humanity and its privileged crust—the difference between some approach to equality and a frankly designed unbalance.

There was logic for the old Bourbon formula in the days of our beginnings. Then, few but the wealthy were learned and so equipped to govern. America was a howling wilderness rich in raw resource but with scarcely a mill wheel turning. Wealth in great groups was needed quickly to develop and improve it. Thus—for both a political and an economic reason—there was much to be argued for this idea.

Of the underprivileged, it seemed sufficient to say: "Of the plenty which, by this policy, will rapidly appear, more will trickle down to the poor in a year, than they could expect in a decade of slower development under too pure a democracy."

There was a robust dissent to this doctrine of privilege, and this very ground upon which we stand was the pit from whence was digged its foremost champion, Thomas Jefferson. But this was the frank and outspoken policy of Alexander Hamilton. He acted upon it with vigor. It took its first form under his hand in the protective tariff, which was clearly recognized by the Constitutional Convention to be an outright device to subsidize the infant industries of the eight northern industrial States at the expense of the five southern agricultural States—an open and avowed policy of privilege, the design and the effect of which was to create a power of wealth in favored groups, in favored territorial sections, and in a favored industry against an exploited agriculture. It was conceded by the South as a sacrifice to build a nation. But it was a rule of social inequality, and it bore so heavily that in half a century its vast discrimination brought revolt, first in the South Carolina nullification, and eventually in civil war. That bloody struggle left triumphant the essential doctrine of unbalance, of great groupings of wealth, and of the subsidized industrialization of America. It carried us into the unspeakable era of reconstruction, when one-third of our country was exploited as a conquered province and the clock of its progress set back by half a hundred years. It brought an unparalleled era of corruption in both politics and business from the malodorous administration of Grant straight through the nineteenth century and beyond. Before we talk about the powers of government now being used unthriftily to help the poor we should remember the unchecked period of their prostitution from the Civil War to the late nineties for the magnification of the rich, and for that almost alone. Those were the days when the Government built the railroads and the favored grabbed them; when, under the guise of tariffs and the device of trusts and monopolies, our business baronies of unheard-of concentration of power and wealth had their foundations laid, and when, by dropping all barriers to immigration, we strove to create an industrial empire in export and domestic trade based on the products of imported and sweated labor.

The rollicking sea robbers of the High Barbary and the Spanish Main were just pikers compared to the pelf pilferers of this period, who ran riot on a scale so grand as to make merely a poor pirate blush like a peony.

The Congress and most State legislatures were keyboards on which the favored could play—as on a piano—almost any time their greed might fancy. Government was the tail to the dog of privilege run to rabies.

Nobody suffered very much, because in days of depression there was always a new horizon. The busted citizen could load his family and his belongings into a covered wagon and go to some new place for a new beginning. Land was cheap or free. There was some kind of market for everything. In that more primitive life, a family was not much good if it could not take care of itself in almost any surroundings. Even that way of escape from ruin was rugged individualism.

That period of legalized piracy was the era of pioneering. It was the hey-day of the rugged ones—whether a wolf of Wall Street, a Pittsburgh iron-monger, a copper king, a forty-niner, or the more homely conquerors of the great West—they were a breed that asked help of nobody and of God, approval only, and sometimes not even that. We needed that breed to build a nation.

Now all this is not to be too cavalierly condemned. It was exploitation in the grand manner, but it did people a continent, fashion the strongest industrial and commercial unit in history, and create the wealthiest and most powerful Nation on which the sun ever shone. Its champions point to this bright record of accomplishment and say it could not have been made on any other plan.

Perhaps that is right. But it is a tale that is told. The policy of privilege did some good, but it prepared great harm. Because it has become a pestilence, it had to be remodeled and the new deal did it.

At the turn of the century a new era began and lasted until the great depression. Industrialization, mechanization, and concentration were about to go to unheard of extremes. Even before 1900 this process had become so alarming that Congress began its futile antitrust legislation. It was just a gesture. In 1912 the old Bourbon rule was broken for a moment by the election of Wilson. He tried to make the gesture effective by the Federal Trade Commission and the Federal Reserve Board. It was not enough. They did not stop—they did not even check—the break-neck centripetal pace in which our vast corporations assumed their present stature, the field for industrial jobs was narrowed, agriculture was ruined, and small individual enterprises, in practically every line of human endeavor, were being snuffed out like candles at curfew in a sleepy town.

In the early part of that period there was, roughly, 1 small manufacturing enterprise to every 400 of our population. Toward the end of it there was 1 to 900, which was a reduction by more than half of that field for rugged individualism. In the same period million-dollar concerns more than doubled their piece of the whole business pie at the expense of little fellows. By increasing the use of automatic machines, industrial output per worker was almost doubled (85-percent increase), thus nearly cutting that field for individual effort in two. By 1929 the 200 largest corporations controlled about half of our total corporate wealth—rugged individualism was getting to be a joke.

The era of mergers began. In manufacture, commerce, and finance groupings of wealth and power, already of stupendous size, were rushed together to form new groupings of monstrous proportions—the collectivism of wealth, economic soviets for private gain, a communism of privilege which was rapidly threatening to control the very means of life of the whole population.

At the rate of concentration of control of all human effort and of the elimination of all small enterprise—including jobs—(before it was interrupted by the new deal), it is no exaggeration to say that it would have been a matter of only years until, with one exception, there would have been few, if any, people in this country not dependent upon some monster corporation for wages, salary, income, or pension, and not at their complete mercy in the question of price.

The exception would have been agriculture—which is the stepchild of the old Bourbon formula—and agriculture was rapidly rushing toward a status of pure peonage.

There cannot be honest argument that exactly this state of affairs was not both the purpose and effect of the same Tory policy that was first stated by Alexander Hamilton, that moved to victory at Appomattox, that degraded the South for a generation, plundered our natural resources, seized our facilities for transportation and power, and concentrated in great groups the substantial control of our manufacture, finance, and commerce.

There is no doubt that great benefits came from this system to a large part of our people for a good many years. Mass production enabled these great industrial and financial groupings to make large profits, but it also paid better wages, created a higher type of employment, and resulted in a magically low price for such facilities as automobiles, electrical equipment, and many of the necessities and luxuries of life.

These benefits are also a proper pride to those of the old Bourbon faith whenever the subject comes up for discussion. Some benefits did trickle through grasping fingers to the grass roots. But greed was greater than prudence. They did not have sense enough to let enough trickle to keep the system going. They rubbed out the individual opportunity of so many people and they concentrated so much of the produce of the plan they had created in so few hands and so few places that there were not enough consumers left to take the products of their plants.

The wreckage and the ruin of this hour are proof positive that we have come to the end of an area and that the old Bourbon formula of government of, by, and for the wise, the good, and the beneficent has got to be modified if our political and economic systems are to continue to exist. That modification is the new deal—but again that is ahead of our story.

The war found us just entering a third stage in the industrialization and mechanization and concentration of this country. In early 1914 the red flags of warning were already flying over the system. Prosperity was lagging for lack of customers with the power to buy, when suddenly, in Europe, there appeared the most demanding customer this country ever served—war, whose capacious maw takes all that farms and factories can produce at any price and cries for more.

Every factory went into high speed. The index of all prices went up to about 260 percent of the pre-war level. After we got into the war and withdrew altogether nearly 7,000,000 individuals for military or auxiliary service there was an overwhelming demand for labor which increased the total of wages to astronomical figures. The prices of farm products might have gone to unprecedented levels if, after our entry into the war, Mr. Hoover had not, contrary to the specific promise of the administration, held them down by the unauthorized and illegal use of the sanctions of the Lever Act.

Despite the short depression of 1921 and 1922, the seeds of a vast future prosperity for the United States had been sown, but with those seeds were also sown the tares and thistles of future grief.

Industry in the war had learned the lesson of cooperation. Under war legislation we had literally reorganized our economic structure, eliminated waste, and integrated production within separate areas, but, above all, industrial management had learned the lesson of higher wages.

It is literally true that the dissemination of purchasing power among farmers and wage earners due to a practical revolution of the theory of wages and fair farm prices increased the post-war consuming power of the domestic market for industrial products by more than 40 percent in a period of a few years.

Therein lies the secret of our future. Our task is to enrich this domestic market of ours for the products of farms and factories. The way to do that is not concentration of opportunity but distribution of opportunities. Open the fields for small individual enterprise; stop wiping them out; raise wages; shorten hours; see to it that we have neither favored nor underprivileged classes. Cease our idolatry for mere bigness and restore our agriculture to parity with industry.

That is the new deal. If we can only do that, we shall see the greatest prosperity this country has ever known.

Although the war period must be acknowledged as abortive, at least it was one of those rare eras in our history since the Civil War when the organized appetite of the old Bourbon aristocracy of wealth had passed out of power and the disorganized mob of the democracy was piloting the ship of state. The 12 years of the return of the Bourbons, when Woodrow Wilson surrendered his stewardship to Warren Gamaliel Harding, are worthy of remark.

At the beginning of that period the gold of the world was in our vaults or destined to them. From the position of the greatest debtor in the world we had moved to the front as the greatest creditor in creation. To replace the submarine sinkings, which at one time threatened to wipe the British mercantile fleet out of existence, we had increased our shipbuilding capacity 10 times in 10 months, until it was the greatest in the world, and for the first time since the destruction of the American merchant marine in the Civil War ocean commerce under the Stars and Stripes had advanced to the foremost position on the seven seas.

We had financed and fought a world conflict without scandal, fraud, or politics, an unparalleled record in war government. Our machinery for production was intact and the starved demand of a shattered world reached out to it.

The gallantry of our soldiers and the devotion of our people bespoke the spirit of a great crusade. We were still looked upon as the saviors of allied victory. We alone had come to the peace conference "with malice toward none and charity for all." We stood at such a peak of economic strength, of domestic righteousness, and of international leadership as had never been occupied by any nation. That was the contribution of the same philosophy of the new deal to the science of government in America. With this shining heritage, the material and spiritual fate of this country, and of the whole world, passed back under the Bourbon yoke in 1921.

Let us smother our distaste and review hastily the sordid chain of immediate events—the breach of highest public trust in naval oil reserves, in funds for crippled veterans, and custody of alien property. Induced by examples of notorious corruption in the shadow of the Capitol, a fog of civic evil seemed to rise throughout the land. In 2 years it had stifled the clear moral atmosphere of the war period and smirched our high repute. Government was at once in contact with all that is worst in big business, and indeed with all that is worst in our national life. From that contact sprang a brood of bad beginnings. Politically planned by Bourbon leadership to "give the wets their liquor and the drys their law", the new organization for prohibition enforcement now came to corrupt public office, to debase Federal courts, to degrade all law, to destroy most of the great guaranties of our Bill of Rights, and to create fierce popular dissension which flared forth in 1928 in response to furtive acts of campaign management which stirred up shameful bigotry and intolerance throughout the country.

It gave our language and our people new and hateful words and institutions—"racketeering", "hi-jacking", "bootlegging", and systematized murder. These new practices financed and created a vast undercover criminal organization which affronted our whole country with its audacity and power and remained until, under the new deal, it has been driven like the Gadarene swine of evil spirits down the precipice to destruction. We shall never know whether effective enforcement was ever possible. We can only be certain what dead-sea fruits it bore in the ruin of an "experiment noble in motive" at the hands of experimenters noble in nothing.

Within 2 years whatever of honor and faith and sure intent our Government had assumed had been smirched and tattered beyond recognition.

In the field of economics, released from the scrutiny of any eye watching over the public interest, and the restraint of any hand imposed for the public good, old tendencies of rapacity, ravishment, and greed came back in tenfold strength in banking, in the stock and commodity markets, and in the whole field of industry and commerce.

Men played for high stakes with other people's money, gambling at fearful odds and seemingly in no sense of fiduciary responsibility whatever. Pity was piffle, greed was a virtue, and business honor was little more than a word in a schoolboy's copy book.

With the savings of the people so freely to be used and with so little account ability under the law, money was available in boundless floods to speed up the scarcely arrested concentration of industrialization, mechanization, and monopoly of great groupings in every field of human effort.

Anticipating a never-ending flow of this easy magic of fake prosperity, the facilities for production by monstrous corporate groupings were multiplied beyond any possibility of normal use. Miraculous profits were created on a constantly increasing inflation of both production and demand, financed by the mortgaging, first, of every element of value in the country—next, of every prospect of increased value—and finally, of every future hope.

It was a Bourbon paradise, the all-time high of the Hamiltonian dream, but it was rotten to its very core.

It had proceeded with the degradation of agriculture to a point where farm buying power was rapidly approaching the vanishing point and this traced squarely back to the very foundation stone of the original Bourbon policy.

It had substituted machines for men at such a destructive rate that, at the height of that fake fantasy of prosperity, there were no less than 3,000,000 employables without jobs.

It had permitted such an extravagant concentration of the profits of a vast production—in the hands of a wealthy few, in swollen corporate surpluses, and above all, in a vast multiplication of all facilities for production and luxurious living—that there was not enough left to keep distributed among the more than 100,000,000 producers the means whereby to consume and enjoy the things they produced. While it created a Frankenstein of productive facility, by that very act it literally strangled and destroyed the domestic market on which alone that producing monster could continue to survive.

By pressing too hard and too rapidly its self-created powers and privileges, the old Hamiltonian theory had become the author of its own destruction.

In 1928 all this was still within the limits of control, but signs of approaching madness were everywhere apparent. We should not forget that summer. It was a season of high-pressure selling, lavish spending, headlong increment of debt—a heyday of promoters, sloganeers, and mushroom fortunes, a time of opportunism, persistence in any course, however unsound, if, for the moment, it promised to get by. Into this feverish atmosphere was launched the 1928 campaign. But in the cool detachment of a Dakota camp, a canny little New England President had typed on slender slips of paper, "I do not choose to run."

The successful candidate could see the dangers clearly, and he stated them obscurely. At Boston, toward the close of his campaign, Herbert Hoover warned the industry of this country that its productive capacity had far outrun any possible power of the domestic market to consume.

Standing there he wrote his prescription for the people, in which he said he saw no disaster, because by continuing our policy of lending billions to backward and crippled countries we could abolish poverty by capturing the markets of the world and selling all that we could produce regardless of the exhausted capacity of our people to consume.

At that very moment the fat was in the fire. The storm that rumbled threats through the next 12 months had been brewing for 25 years. It was the old deal, the climax of the ancient Bourbon philosophy, in a complete concentration of wealth, producing power and arbitrary control of all economic forces in the hands of too few people for the purpose of private gain.

The dizzy dream of the abolition of poverty did not come to an abrupt end. During the year following the election every device was used to postpone the evil day. The zigzag curve of the stock market became the chart of the Ship of State. Whenever it showed any sign of lagging some act of the Government or some word of an official was used to spur it upward. This country will never forget the speculative frenzy of early 1929.

The "great engineer" had a rapidly running bear by the tail. He could not turn it loose. If he allowed it to slow down, it would eat him up. The only thing he could do was to punch it in the rump to make it run faster, and this he did with all the governmental power at his command.

The crash of 1929 was inevitable. The culmination of Bourbon policies had left this country defenseless against collapse. The people had nothing with which to resist. They had only an overwhelming burden of debt. The banks in which their savings were held had devoted them to destruction. There was no help in agriculture, because it, too, was ruined. There was no buying power among workers to sustain production, because everything they had accumulated was swept away.

The most tragic effect of Bourbon bigness and industrialization was suddenly revealed. These great industrial monsters which had become the source of 70 percent of all factory employment had specialized our people. They had become cogs in a machine. When the machine flew apart, they were just scrap metal.

No longer was the trail to the West an open road to high adventure. There was no more free cheap land; and if there had been, these people would have starved to death upon it. The tragedy of unemployment could no longer be avoided by referring these specialists to their rugged individualism. The old Bourbon plan had plowed that under. There is little individualism left for natural persons. The only individualism now is the ruggedness of vast corporate groups. They howl against collectivism, but they have created collectivism on a scale which even Karl Marx never dreamed, and left it on our doorstep.

The struggle is not overcollectivism but overcontrol of collectivism. Shall the masters of these great groups control it for their private gain as Alexander Hamilton proposed, or shall the people retain the last word in the economic government of their daily lives? That is the essential question of the new deal.

The full depth of the collapse of 1929 was not known until March 1933. The record of that catastrophe is too recent to recount. Every bank in the country had to be closed. Agriculture was completely prostrate. The buying power of factory pay rolls was literally at the lowest point in this century and relatively at the lowest point in our history. In desperate competition for the small remaining business, wages had been cut so far and hours extended so long that, at its worst, unemployment was probably not less than 15,000,000 people. Failures of small business enterprise mounted to fantastic heights. Only the strong survived. It is no exaggeration to say that in that terrible month of March 75 percent of our people could not look forward to the summer with any confidence that they would have a roof over their head or food for their bodies.

The great leaders of industry simply abdicated. I know, because I was in the midst of it. The cry was "All is lost save honor." They flocked to Washington with every kind of proposal for the new administration to step in and save them. Not the least extreme of these was the prayer of the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce that industry be turned over to the President of the United States with practically dictatorial powers.

For N. R. A., the leading industries of this country stood on the doorstep of Government and begged for it, or for something much more drastic. Respecting A. A. A., there was no opposition worth the name. It is true that some lobbying associations of industry sought changes in the drafts of bills to mold them nearer to their heart's desire. In the main, N. R. A. had the approval of industry in all except one troublesome clause affecting labor. What is now said of these recovery measures? Let me quote from the press some words attributed to a "chairman" here: "Arbitrary political action in defiance of economic science and the advice of competent authority * * * forced upon the country in violation of individual rights."

The author of those words either does not know what he is talking about or he would not recognize the Goddess of Truth if he saw her stalking naked through the streets. As far as N. R. A. is concerned, his general indictment, "hastily drawn, arbitrarily passed, and all of which has discouraged enterprise and retarded recovery", is another unconscionable—well, it is subject to the same remark.

N. R. A. was based on a plan first proposed in December 1918 on the experience of the War Industries Board, and thoroughly and completely discussed at frequent intervals throughout all the intervening years. The National Recovery Act, in both its titles, had been studied, charted, and projected for nearly a year. Title II of that act, which was the only part of it that was intended to cost the Government any great sum, was a project for public works based on a policy proposed—among many others—by the great engineer himself and a very important group of economists—if economists are ever very important—which principle has been adopted by practically every great nation during the world depression.

It said that N. R. A. was coercive. That is not the truth. On the call of the President within 4 months after the law had passed more than 95 percent of employers who were affected by the act had voluntarily signed the President's reemployment agreement and by actual census count created 2,785,000 jobs. If ever in this country there was a spontaneous, voluntary effort at Nation-wide cooperation that was it, and if it was attended by any element of coercion or violation of individual rights I have never heard asserted what it was. There was not a code in the category that was imposed.

N. R. A. is for the moment gone, but there is not an industry—surely there are few little fellows in business and certainly there is no worker in America—who would not go back to it tomorrow if they could have their way. It has been said that N. R. A. increased prices. That is a stark untruth. From the moment it had effect the N. R. A. group of prices leveled off and have been the most stable of any in the whole price structure. It is said that N. R. A. retarded recovery by reducing real wages. That is equally untrue. From the lowest point of the century N. R. A. increased real wages by 30 percent back to the 1910 level.

It is charged that N. R. A. hurt the little fellow. That is an equal libel. From the highest relative rate in history failures of small business dropped under N. R. A. to the lowest relative point in history—lower even than during the fantasy of fake prosperity. This same critic before you, after deploring "the tone of partisan prejudice and preconceived judgment on both sides", opened his mouth and let out of him the following diatribe on the new deal, "unscientific, wasteful, extravagant, tainted with political motive, hastily drawn, and arbitrarily passed."

As an economist he says, "* * * I reject and condemn the entire recovery program as unsound in principle, impractical in operation, and harmful in result." There, I submit, you have one of the most impartial, unprejudiced, finely reasoned, logical, and incontrovertible dissertations that have recently fallen from lips of men.

I come to you from a new job that has to do with the destitution, utter and complete, of about one and one-half million human beings in the city of New York.

We are employing there in a professional and administrative capacity all kind of executive and professional people who have seen better days, whose duty it is to plan the further employment of people of all walks of life, all at wages barely sufficient to keep out hunger, thirst, and cold. I see these people daily, talk to them, and receive letters from them by the thousands. They constitute about 20 percent of the population of our greatest and richest city.

You go home after a day of that utterly sunk. I have had jobs, big and little, in my life—as wide a variety as any man I know—but none I ever had remotely compares in its power to take the heart out of you, with this daily immersion in the despairing grief, destitution, and growing hopelessness of more than a million people. Their chief remaining comfort is that the new deal pledges that no one will be allowed to starve or freeze. My God! think of that as a limit for the bright promise of this land of ours. There are 20,000,000 people in that slough of despond in this country.

I know something about the agricultural problem, too. On trips through a large part of the Nation I have made it my business to ride out in the country and talk to farmers on farms.

Before the new deal came they were nearly as hopeless there. It is an even greater tragedy for a farmer to lose his farm than for a worker to lose his job. It is his home, his chosen way of life, sometimes the tomb of his ancestors, and always it is of the very clay with which he was compounded. The new deal has saved agriculture.

In every walk of life the rise from that day of wrath in March 1933, when the President moved in like a rescuer, seized the banks, and preserved all that was left of savings from destruction, has been tremendous. When I remember the blackness of that moment in everybody's heart and mind, I wonder if any man in history ever salvaged so much of hope and courage or did so much to open the road to happiness to so many millions of desperate people.

With such thoughts in my mind, I read again what this patronizing critic says: "As an economist, I reject and condemn the entire recovery program as unsound in principle, impractical in operation, and harmful in result."

Not as a person, but as a type of condescending professor become pedant through years of academic wisecracking down from a dais to immature minds, I should like to take that economist by the scruff of the neck and baptize him three times daily in this pool of misery, this sea of despair, this ocean of hopelessness from which I have just come. Perhaps—though I doubt it—he would not be so glib in rejecting or even condemning the entire recovery program, either "as an economist" or as anything else. I doubt it because I note that he otherwise speaks as a "citizen who urgently prays for an end of the distress and privation of our people."

It is one thing urgently to pray for other people and it is another thing to spit in your hands, roll up your sleeves, and get down to doing something about it.

Perhaps if, "as an economist", he had stood in Washington in March 1933, when the whole economic structure of the Nation was tottering, and this distress of which I speak was 10 times more poignant and acute than it is now, and the great captains of industry became skulking corporals for the nonce, crying for Government to bail them out, he might then also have said that "as an economist" he rejected and condemned everything that was proposed or done; but I doubt that, too, because if he had said that, some of those industrial breast beaters would have bent a short section of lead gas pipe over the base of his medulla oblongata and dumped him into the Potomac River.

It makes me sick to hear a lot of people who in no crisis at any time ever did anything but talk now stand sneering at the work of other men's hands in the relief of the suffering of millions of human beings, and with professorial ponderosity assert that they, as economists, reject and condemn it as unsound in principle and all the rest of that pseudo-scientific tosh.

I would not have the nerve to stand here and try to defend the whole of the new deal. There is a lot of it in which I do not believe. I have stated quite frankly the grounds of my disbelief. I have criticized where I thought that the criticism was constructive. Like every other kibitzing commentator, I have advanced my own plans as better than some of the plans that were put into execution. It is a peculiarly American privilege to pan and to plan, and I claim the rights of my heritage.

But that is not the point. The point is that at the most dangerous crisis in our history, responsibility was bravely taken. Something was done and promptly done. The point is that nobody has gone hungry, or cold, or with any feeling that at the last extremity there is not some help. The point is that there has been no blood flowing in the streets, no riots against the peace of the community, no uprising against constitutional authority, notwithstanding that the policy of the old Bourbons, sustained under that Constitution, had left this country in such wreck and ruin that no less than 1 out of 5 of us in this good day, in the sixth year of the same thing, does not for certain know where his next meal is coming from and is still deprived of the sorry right of every man to live under the curse of Adam—"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread."

So much for the purely emergency aspects of the new deal. They were necessary. They did the trick. They might have been done better, but that hindsight criticism is a contemptible reason for now asserting that they ought not to have been done at all.

The relief of suffering is costing this Nation five billions a year, and with my own eyes I have seen how pitifully little that is when spread over 22,000,000 sufferers—about 30 cents a day to keep a human being alive. It is a shocking thing—wasteful, extravagant, unsound in principle, and tainted with political motive.

Well, suppose you tried to cut it off. The Bourbons wouldn't dare, and this cost of mopping up their mess is not one tithe of the cost of the mess itself. Five billion dollars in a year. Why, in a few days in 1929 forty billions of value, more than the whole cost of the war, vanished like a drop of water on a red-hot stove. A treasure equal to the value of the British Isles was wiped out in a year. National income was cut by their blundering by no less than $40,000,000,000 every year, and national wealth by $200,000,000,000—and they talk about $5,000,000,000 a year to keep the 22,000,000 victims of their blundering from stark starvation.

Another thing, the billions spent by the organized mob of democracy during the war were handled without one hint of graft peculation or even political advantage, and these multiplied billions are as free from those taints. But you never heard of Bourbon millions trickling through without somewhere, somehow a canny result in political advantage and not a little greasing of outstretched palms.

The so-called "reform measures" are a somewhat different matter—but to say that they should be deferred or omitted is to miss the whole point of the last two elections.

The people elected Franklin Roosevelt in 1932 under an overwhelming mandate to reverse the Bourbon policies of his predecessors. In 1934, with an even greater unanimity, they endorsed what he had done and they demanded that he continue.

In his campaign he laid down a program as clearly as words could state it. The basis of that program was, at every point of application, the essential philosophy of Thomas Jefferson as opposed to the essential philosophy of Alexander Hamilton. He was going to reverse those principles of government which had resulted in too much concentration of wealth, industrial and commercial power, and monopoly control of productive facilities. He was to attempt not so much to level down the peaks in our saw-tooth economic structure as to raise the valleys. He promised to bring a better day to the depressed segments of our population—to elevate agriculture from its quarter century of degradation; to wipe out, and, for the future, prevent, those extortionate abuses we all know existed in banking and in the stock and commodity exchanges. He proposed to see to it that the power of a few over the rights of the many to enjoy the products of their own labors should be lessened. He undertook to reverse the idea of government concentrated solely in the hands of the good, the just, and the beneficent. He promised to break the grip of privilege on public utilities. He repudiated the theory that it is better for all that the benefits of the country strain through a few funnels before they get to the grass roots, and he swore to substitute for that old Bourbon fallacy, the original doctrine of Thomas Jefferson, that it is in the direct and equal spread of individual opportunity that the strength of a nation lies. There is absolutely nothing new in this conflict of the fundamentals of the new deal with the Hamiltonian doctrines, whose history I have briefly outlined, to the point of their extreme application and partial ruin of this country under a succession of Presidents from the Hero of Appomattox to the Great Engineer. In spite of all the recent turmoil, he is a fool who indulges in the belief that by a sophistry the people of this country can be persuaded back to the principles of Hooverism, which are just the Hamiltonian principles running riot.

Who is it that complained of N. R. A.? Not the 20,000,000 workers affected or the millions of little fellows whom it saved from the rapacity of monopolies and chains. Who howls about A. A. A.—not the 40 percent of our population which is rural? Who objects to the regulation of banking and the exchanges? Not the tens of millions of consumers. Who groans under the security legislation? Not the 85 percent of us who dread old age as a period of dependency. And of all these things, little do consumers as a class complain.

Those are the essentials of the new deal, and who is it that stands in opposition? Why, those who sit at the receipt of customs. Small privileged groups of wealth and power, the beneficiaries of Boubonism, the architects of our ruin, and the authors of all this distress. It is they whose paid propaganda has been so successful that we are actually here in a serious round-table discussion exactly as though there were anything of merit to discuss.

I will amend that—there is something to discuss; but it is not fundamental to the new deal. I thoroughly agree that there is going to be no appreciable return to prosperity, employment, and tranquility of mind in this country until business returns to a more normal pace. It seems very clear to me that no amount of Government spending can make an appreciable contribution to a permanent solution of unemployment or to any revival of business. I concur with the critics of the new deal that the constant threat to any kind of economic adventure for profit is retarding recovery. I pray as earnestly as any for a definition of plan and a cessation of new magic.

I am as firmly convinced as they that the fiscal policy of the United States must—at all events and immediately—be headed back toward the promise of our platform and the performance of early 1933—a balance between revenue and expenditure, and that income taxation should be based on a rule of maximum revenue and diminishing returns rather than on any social theory. I am aware that until the threat of monetary inflation by way of the printing presses is absolutely abolished, there can be no sound recovery. I know by personal experience that there is not sufficient coordination of the rapidly expanding activities of government and I hope as eagerly as any for the cessation of experimentation.

These ends I believe can be attained without the slightest impairment of the fundamental aims announced in the Democratic platform or the preelection promises of the President. Those promises, if carried out as here discussed, would not retard prosperity. By a vast enrichment of a balanced domestic market it would give us such prosperity as we have never known. Ninety percent of those promises have been fulfilled or are in process of fulfillment. Some of the departures from them were absolutely forced by circumstance. Others—it might as well frankly be admitted—were mistakes.

As to this penumbra of evils—this froth of errors—while I concede that it is still offsetting benefits from new-deal fundamentals, it is not, I take it, the main subject which you are here to discuss.

The great question for this conference and for the country is whether, having soon proved by the greatest economic catastrophe in history, the fallacy of the old Bourbon doctrine in its application to this new age, we are going to continue in the direction of a better balanced economy, under the general principles of the new deal or whether—because we have become impatient over the lack of any easy magic to end our present distress—we propose to return to the cause of that catastrophe and merit the cynical comment of Proverbs, "As a dog returneth to his vomit, so a fool returneth to his folly."

That I think we shall never do.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, yesterday evening I objected to a proposal for a limitation on debate offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] because I desired further to study the matter. At this time I am willing to enter into the proposal which was made yesterday afternoon.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the Senator from Oregon. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that hereafter debate be limited so that no Senator may speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the bill, or longer than 15 minutes on any amendment.

This is a slight modification of the request which I made yesterday, in that it is now proposed, while limiting the time of any Senator to 15 minutes on an amendment, to permit him to have a division of that time. I make the modification at the request of Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am very glad the modification has been suggested. When I objected yesterday to the proposal for a limitation of debate, the Senator from Idaho made the suggestion which is now covered by the request of the Senator from Arkansas. I think the modification will clearly meet the views of the Senator from Idaho.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the request of the Senator from Arkansas to be that each Senator may have 15 minutes on an amendment and that the 15 minutes may be divided?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think it had better be stated the other way, namely, that each Senator shall have 30 minutes on the bill and 15 minutes on any amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And only one speech?

Mr. ROBINSON. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the point the Chair did not understand.

Mr. ROBINSON. I tried to make plain that as to the bill there would be only one speech, but as to amendments each Senator may divide his time if he chooses to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 38, line 1, to insert the following new paragraph:

"SPECIFIC TAX RATE—FLOOR STOCKS—FLAXSEED AND BARLEY

"(5) If at any time prior to December 31, 1937, any tax with respect to flaxseed or barley becomes effective pursuant to proclamation as provided in subsection (a) of this section, such tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid during the period from the date upon which such tax becomes effective to December 31, 1937, both inclusive, in the case of flaxseed at the rate of 35 cents per bushel of 56 pounds, and in the case of barley at the rate of 25 cents per bushel of 48 pounds. The provisions of section 16 of this title shall not apply in the case of flaxseed and barley.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. I assume the Senator is going to attack this particular amendment. I have an amendment to the amendment which I desire to present, and I think the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] has an amendment which he desires to offer. Would it not be well to perfect the amendment before we enter into the argument in regard to the amendment itself?

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. I shall not take the floor at this time under the circumstances.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, to the committee amendment I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment it is proposed, on page 38, after line 13, to add the following sentence:

During such time as the production of flaxseed in the United States is less than the domestic consumption thereof, there shall be no reduction of or limitation upon the acreage devoted to or to be hereafter devoted to the production of flaxseed or upon the quantity produced or to be hereafter produced within the United States, and no grower of flaxseed shall be denied participation in benefit payments by reason of the fact that such grower had not engaged in growing flaxseed in any preceding year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah desire to discuss the amendment of the Senator from California?

Mr. KING. I desire to ask the Senator from California what is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON. The design of the amendment primarily is to permit those States which have not what is termed by the Agricultural Department a history of 10 years in respect to the benefits which may be allotted, to participate in reality in those benefits for such flaxseed as they may have cultivated or raised. It is to put on a parity the States which would now be denied any participation in the benefits to be derived under the amendment with those which have a longer history of flaxseed production. If the Senator wishes the statistics, I can give them.

Mr. KING. No. If I understand the amendment, as I think I now do, it rather is an expansion than a limitation. It is rather a protection to the flaxseed producers who in the past have not produced this crop, rather than an inhibition against them.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. KING. It is not intended to legalize any efforts heretofore made by the Department of Agriculture with respect to the control of flaxseed production or the limitation of prices or anything of that kind.

Mr. JOHNSON. No. For instance, the design is, in States where flaxseed has been raised for a period of 2 or 3 or 4 years, to give them the benefits of the amendment as well as States where flaxseed has been raised for 10 years, the 10-year limitation being the one which is now used by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KING. I am in sympathy with the amendment, but should be glad to see the whole procedure eliminated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from California would be willing to withhold his amendment until my colleague [Mr. FRAZIER] reaches the Chamber? He is now on his way here and desires to say something with reference to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am willing to do so, of course. I submitted the amendment to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. I was under the impression I had submitted it to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], although I may not have done so.

Mr. NYE. My thought is that under the amendment which the Senator from California has offered, the way is broken for a larger production of flaxseed than during the limited years when the plan has been operative as to flax.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think that is undoubtedly true.

Mr. NYE. I am sure my colleague is prepared to speak upon the amendment and that he will desire to be heard. I hope the Senator will withhold his amendment for the time being.

Mr. JOHNSON. Of course, if it is requested, I shall give the opportunity to any Senator to present such argument as he may desire.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the clerk be good enough to state the amendment again? I did not understand it clearly when it was first read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will again state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed on page 38, line 13, to add the following sentence:

During such time as the production of flaxseed in the United States is less than the domestic consumption thereof, there shall be no reduction of or limitation upon the acreage devoted to or to be hereafter devoted to the production of flaxseed or upon the quantity produced or to be hereafter produced within the United States, and no grower of flaxseed shall be denied participation in benefit payments by reason of the fact that such grower had not engaged in growing flaxseed in any preceding year.

Mr. McNARY. It would appear to me that the major design of the amendment is to grant benefits up to the point where there is a surplus produced in this country and that thereafter the amendment shall not be operative. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; that is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. I agreed to withhold the amendment until the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] may reach the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well. The amendment is temporarily withheld.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment reported by the committee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment it is proposed, on page 38, line 13, after the word "barley", to insert the following:

In the case of flaxseed the first marketing year shall be considered to be the period commencing October 1, 1935, and ending April 30, 1936. Subsequent marketing years shall commence on May 1 and end on April 30 of the succeeding year.

There shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid (during any period after the date of the adoption of this amendment when a processing tax is in effect with respect to flaxseed) (a) a processing tax on the first domestic processing of perilla seed at the rate equal to the per pound rate of the processing tax which is then in effect on flaxseed, and (b) a processing tax on the first domestic processing of hempseed at the rate of 84 percent of the per-pound rate of the processing tax which is then in effect on flaxseed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, from the reading of the amendment I do not understand it. Probably I would not anyway. I wish the Senator from Minnesota would explain definitely what he seeks to accomplish.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, as I understand the bill, its purpose is to give a parity price to American agricultural products and to make the parity effective. That is the only reason I can find for supporting any part of the bill—to make the American farmer a part of the economic system placed upon us by the high tariff. I did not vote for the Hawley-Smoot tariff, but if that is to be the policy—and it is the policy—the only excuse I can find for the bill is to put the farmer within the tariff system.

The parity price of flax is $2.25 a bushel. We import 70 percent of the material for which flaxseed is used. The price of flax is $1.52, while the parity price the farmer ought to receive is $2.25.

The competitors of flaxseed, from which linseed oil is made, are particularly perilla oil and hempseed oil, imported products, which are admitted free of duty. Imports from 1930 to 1935 of perilla oil and seed have increased from 8,750,000 pounds to 34,800,000 pounds, something like 500 percent. The importation of hempseed oil, another competitor which comes in free and is sold against the American farmers' production of flaxseed, has increased 1,200 percent. The reason why the tariff on flax is not effective is because of the competition of these products which come in free. The amendment of the committee is worthless without the adoption of this perfecting amendment proposing to put a compensatory tax on the competitors of flaxseed and linseed oil, just as a compensatory tax is placed upon the competitors of soybeans and the other products which are included in this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator undoubtedly is aware of the fact that linseed oil is indispensable in the manufacture of paints, and paints are indispensable to farmers. They must paint their houses and their barns.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. KING. It is an indispensable commodity in their economic life. Perilla oil is used extensively, as I recall, in the dressing and protection of various forms of leather used in the manufacture of shoes and boots, and so forth; and the other oils to which the Senator has referred, and which are coming into the United States, are used extensively in the manufacture of various commodities which enter into the lives not only of the farmers but of all classes of people.

If the amendment which the Senator has offered shall prevail, obviously it will materially increase the price of linseed oil, to the disadvantage of the farmers and the disadvantage of those who are now seeking, under the great housing drive, to build homes and to improve their homes. It will materially increase the price of leather to those who manufacture harnesses and shoes and all forms of leather goods, so that the prices to the American people will be substantially increased by reason of the adoption of this amendment.

Personally, if we are to enact legislation of this character, I should prefer to vote a direct subsidy to flaxseed producers and thus save the American people millions of dollars in the form of increased prices which would result from the triumph of the plan suggested by the able Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am glad to have the Senator's views. I have been familiar with his views for some time. However, both the Republican Party and the Democratic Party as such put over the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill. The argument which the Senator advances against the increase in cost of paint is well taken. That is the argument always used in arguing against the tariff.

I do not find people feeling sorry for the farmers who have to pay high prices for machinery because of the tariff on steel, and the additional tariff in the way of increased railroad transportation they have to pay. It is part of the system.

Here is a commodity which the American farmer raises. He desires, in self-defense, to get within the system under which he has been suffering ever since the Civil War; and I expect Senators who hold different views from those I entertain to be as consistent as I am. I make no apologies for putting the farmer into the system which has been forced upon him.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to propound an inquiry to the Senator. I share his view that since industry enjoys protection, and the farmer does not, he is entitled to compensation in order to equalize his economic situation.

The Senator has taken the view that the processing-tax is in the nature of a protective-tariff tax, has he not?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Indirectly, I should consider it so.

Mr. BAILEY. Let us see if it is indirectly or directly. The processing tax is a tax on the produce of the farmers of America.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. A tariff tax is a tax on the produce of the foreigner sold over here.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is true.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to have the Senator reconcile his statements in view of that fact.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It is a tax on what?

Mr. BAILEY. The protective tariff is a tax on the product of the foreigner, on goods sold here.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; for the protection of the American industrialist.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes. The processing tax is a tax on the product of the American farmer.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Wherein is there any analogy whatever between the protective-tariff tax and the processing tax? That is my question.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Because both are a tax on the consumer, and the consumer pays both. The objective in one case is achieved in one manner, and in the other case it is achieved in another manner. The objective of getting a better price for articles of domestic manufacture is achieved by taxing imports, but paid by consumer in higher prices. The objective of getting a better price for farm products is achieved by a tax upon the consumer for the benefit of the American producer.

Mr. BAILEY. Upon the domestic product; and it is not necessarily a tax upon the consumer. It may be a tax upon the produce of the farmer. It may be passed forward, and it may be passed backward. Is not that true?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Of course, that may be true. I do not care to argue that matter with the Senator. When the original Agricultural Adjustment Act was passed, it was decided by the Senate that the tax would be passed on to the consumer, just as the protective tariff tax is passed on to the consumer. So far as I can see, that was the only excuse for the legislation. This is only an incident in the legislation; and I hold that it is absolutely consistent with the legislation originally passed, and with the amendments which are proposed.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly the protective tariff enables the American to sell his product in America as against the foreign competitor.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. At a higher price.

Mr. BAILEY. Is there anything in this measure which will enable the American producer to sell his goods in America by way of protection as against any foreign competition? Is it not more proper to say that this is a bounty derived from the processing of the farmer's goods and returned to the farmer at the expense of the consumer, if possible? There is a question as to how, and how long, and under what circumstances it can be done; but is there an analogy? In other words does the processing tax in any way justify a protective tariff?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is altogether another question. I hold that the processing tax and the benefit payments are a bounty to the American farmer in the same sense that the protective tariff is a bounty to the American industrialist. If we are going to have parity—and an essential of government is equality before the law—if we pass a law giving bounty to the American industrialist we must give a bounty to the American producer of the raw material, the food which feeds the people who work for the industrialist.

The farmer has fed this country for less than the cost of production. He has been exploited. Here is a product among many others which he has been forced to produce for less than cost of production and for less than a parity price; and if the rest of the legislation is justified, this is justified. If the protective tariff is justified, this form of legislation is justified—I mean, as to its objective.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator is now saying the processing tax is a bounty. My point is, can it be said that it is in the nature of a tariff? Does it have any analogy whatever with the protective tariff? That is my question. I will agree that it is a bounty, and it is a bounty derived from the product of the farmer, if we wish to give a bounty in that way.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It is a bounty assessed upon the consumer.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In just a moment.

The farmer, under our protective-tariff system, has been in the position of a man selling cheap and buying dear. It is inevitable that he must sell cheap, because he is an exporter. He must sell on the world market. He must meet the competition of the world, and therefore he must sell cheap. When he pays a protective tariff on practically everything he buys, he buys dear, and he pays a penalty for the benefit of the industrialist. I fail to see how there is anything inconsistent between a benefit payment to the farmer taxed upon the consumer and a benefit payment collected by the industrialist and taxed upon the consumer.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not arguing the question of inconsistency; but I was very much struck by the Senator's statement that there is an analogy between the processing tax and the protective tariff. I cannot see the analogy between a tax on goods produced in Europe by others and shipped in here and a processing tax on produce grown by Americans and sold in America. I cannot see where the protection comes in. I can see where there is a bounty.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. They are both bounties. The protective tariff is nothing but a bounty, and this is a bounty, too.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. Is it not true that a protective tariff imposes a tax, at least indirectly, upon the consuming public which constitutes a bounty to be paid to the manufacturer, and that the processing tax, if we call it that, also imposes a tax upon the consuming public for the benefit of the farmer, and that the two in operation are exactly the same, regardless of the names by which they are called? If we did not have a protective tariff, would there be any necessity for a processing tax such as we are discussing?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not think so.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the only way to equalize the condition of the farmer in the necessity to which he is put in dealing with manufacturers who are protected and receive a bounty. Is not that true?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. There is no other justification for it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I can see no other justification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] to the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if he construes his amendment as continuing the provisions of the bill, so far as flaxseed is concerned, for an indefinite time. It mentions the fact that it is for the year beginning at a certain period and ending in 1936, and each succeeding year. Does he construe that as a declaration by Congress that the provision respecting flaxseed shall continue indefinitely until repealed by Congress? Or is it so intertwined with the A. A. A. act, which, as I understand, ceases to operate only when the President says the emergency has ended, that when he declared there was no emergency it would also affect the amendment which the Senator has offered, and terminate the benefits, if any benefits are to be derived under the amendment?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. As I understand it, the pending bill is an amendment to the original act, and the original act provides for its termination; so I assume that carries with it all the amendments, and on the termination of the act all the amendments to it will likewise cease to exist. At least that is my belief.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, inasmuch as the amendment I offered a few moments ago, which was a perfecting amendment, from our standpoint, has gone over, I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota go over in the same fashion, so that the whole subject matter may be taken up at one time. I am now ready to proceed with my amendment, and proceed with the Senator's amendment as well, but I do not want one amendment adopted and another amendment left in the air. I want to know what the perfected amendment of the Senate is going to be in order to determine the action which ultimately shall be taken upon it. So I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that his amendment lie over in the same fashion as the one I presented.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I think that is fair. Unless the amendment of the committee remains in the bill the Senator's amendment would be unnecessary. However, I am willing to withhold the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to the Senator's amendment, but I want to perfect the Senate committee amendment so that we may know exactly what it is, and then proceed with it as a whole.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] is now present, and inasmuch as we delayed consideration of my amendment until his arrival, perhaps we may proceed with it. May I suggest, too, that the pending amendment is a Senate amendment, and the bill will have to go to conference upon the particular amendment, if upon nothing else, so the amendments to the amendment might be accepted with the understanding that in conference it will be taken up and the matters involved there considered.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, following the suggestion of the Senator from California, I, too, have an amendment which I should like to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The parliamentary situation is that there is pending an amendment to the committee amendment. The Chair is not yet advised as to what action the Senator from Minnesota desires to have taken. In the meantime, there is an amendment presented by the Senator from New Jersey, which will take the same course, as the Chair understands, as that taken by the pending amendment of the Senator from Minnesota and the amendment of the Senator from California, which was passed over.

Mr. COPELAND. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. My plea was going to be to strike out the entire amendments, but now I assume that if the perfecting amendments are to have justice done them, there should not be any argument in favor of striking out all the language. It is only fair that the amendments to the amendment should first be presented.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does not an amendment to perfect have precedence over a motion to strike?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. If I may ask the Chair a question, I suppose that my amendment would be in order only after the amendments to the amendment have been disposed of, if by unanimous consent it is agreed to have the amendments considered?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from New York?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, the motion of the Senator from New York is to strike out the committee amendment. That is entirely unnecessary. The question will come on the adoption of the committee amendment, so there will be a vote on that anyway. Before we vote on that we must take up the amendments to the amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. I think I will wait until the amendments to the amendment shall have been considered.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, has the question on my amendment been put to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota withdraw his amendment for the purpose of allowing the amendment of the Senator from California to be considered?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from California to the committee amendment will be stated. The clerk at the desk advises the Chair that the amendment is not at the desk.

Mr. JOHNSON. The amendment was taken from the desk, I may say to the Presiding Officer, by one of the experts here, and I do not know what has been done with it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, someone handed the amendment to one of the experts, and it will be brought to the Senate in just a moment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, to come at the end of the section, which will not, I will say to the Senator from California and to the Senator from Minnesota, interfere, I think, with the amendments which they are proposing. I should like to have the amendment considered, unless we are ready to proceed with the amendment of the Senator from California.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from California has now been handed to the clerk, and it will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the committee amendment on page 38, line 13, it is proposed to add the following sentence:

During such time as the production of flaxseed in the United States is less than the domestic consumption thereof, there shall be no reduction of or limitation upon the acreage devoted to or to be hereafter devoted to the production of flaxseed or upon the quantity produced or to be hereafter produced within the United States, and no grower of flaxseed shall be denied participation in benefit payments by reason of the fact that such grower had not engaged in growing flaxseed in any preceding year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this is an amendment to the committee amendment on page 38, and has to do with flaxseed.

During the last session of Congress I succeeded in having adopted an amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act to include flaxseed, barley, and rye as basic commodities, but no action was taken by the Department to give the farmers producing those grains any benefit. In order to encourage the Department to take some action, and in order to get them started on it, I suggested this amendment in the committee, and I had included in it rye, along with barley and flax. I found from those representing the department before our Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that they had a paragraph prepared to cover rye, which appears on page 37, so rye was left out, but barley and flaxseed were included in this amendment.

The amendment simply authorizes a processing tax of 35 cents per bushel on flaxseed and 25 cents per bushel on barley. It seems to me the Senator from California is unduly worried over this matter, and I cannot see how it would affect the flax growers of his State. I know a considerable amount of flax has been raised in California during the past few years, and it was not my intention at all, in offering the amendment, to curtail those farmers in California in the least.

Ordinarily, during the past several years, until the drought struck us 3 or 4 years ago, North Dakota had produced more flaxseed than any other State of the Union, and the other States around North Dakota—Minnesota, Montana, and South Dakota particularly—have produced a considerable amount of flaxseed.

For years we have been selling our flax at prices below cost of production. We need some assistance. In the local market at Bismarck, N. Dak., on July 13 the price of no. 1 flax was $1.24. The parity price, figured under the pending bill, is something over $2; I have forgotten just the exact amount, but $1.24 is away below the cost of production of flaxseed.

The farmers feel that if we are to have this agricultural adjustment program the ones who produce flax and barley and rye are entitled to some benefits, along with those who produce wheat and cotton and other farm products, and that is why I secured the adoption of an amendment to the original act to include them as basic commodities. They are important commodities, and we believe we are entitled to some benefit on them.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota for his judgment on one phase of the matter. I find that at the present time flaxseed is being imported in greater degree from abroad than at any previous time. What I desire to ask the Senator is, if by the addition of a processing tax to the price of flaxseed we increase the attractiveness of our flaxseed market will we not be overrun by still larger importations except as this proposal be offset by increased tariff protection?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not understand what the Senator from Michigan means by an attractive market.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What I mean is that as our domestic price on flaxseed goes up, does that not make our market progressively more attractive to imports, and will it not multiply the import of flaxseed?

Mr. FRAZIER. The processing tax of 35 cents a bushel provided for in the committee amendment would be paid on all imports of flax before the flax is processed. All imports coming into this country for processing must pay the processing tax, and that would mean an additional 35 cents a bushel duty or tax.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is what I inquired about.

Mr. FRAZIER. Instead of making the market attractive, that would make it less attractive to importers, because they would have to pay additional duties.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In view of the additional duties?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I was inquiring about the additional duty, which is almost absolutely necessary.

Mr. FRAZIER. No; I do not think we understand each other as yet.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Pardon me; I think we do. I am using the word "duty" and the word "tax" interchangeably.

Mr. FRAZIER. The processing tax of 35 cents a bushel, of course, would be paid on all imported flax.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am in entire sympathy with what the Senator is trying to do by the amendment to the committee amendment, but, getting down to the exact question now before the Senate, what possible objection could there be to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]? I do not see any objection to it if we assume, to begin with, that we want the committee amendment. I can see how a man would be opposed to this whole scheme and be against the committee amendment; but, speaking as one who expects to vote for the committee amendment, I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota, or any other Senator for that matter, and I am doing it for information, what possible objection is there to the amendment which is offered by the Senator from California?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not called upon to answer that question, but I wholly agree with the Senator from Nebraska. I cannot see why there should be any objection on the part of anyone to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

Mr. NORRIS. Neither can I. If there is any possible objection I should like to hear it stated.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, perhaps I can answer that question. The objection is that it would give a monopoly of the product to a couple of States. Perhaps we believe in such monopolies. If so, why not grant the monopoly?

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President; I believe the amendment of the Senator from California relieves the bill of having any monopolistic tendency.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Chamber is in disorder. There are some of us on this side of the aisle who are anxious to hear the debate. I raise the point of order that the Chamber is in disorder.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may not the Senators who occupy seats on the floor preserve some order? I share the views of the Senator from New York. I am very much interested in what the Senator from Nebraska has said, and the reply of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have not heard a word of the debate on this particular subject this morning. It has been impossible to hear.

Mr. FRAZIER. In reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska I will say that personally I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from California. I think, however, it would mean that the Department of Agriculture would take no action whatever in putting a processing tax on flax, or giving us any allotment payments, and for this reason: Since the amendment was adopted at the last session of Congress making flaxseed a basic commodity I have tried repeatedly to get the Department of Agriculture to take some action on the subject. Others from the Middle and Northwestern States, and especially representatives of the Farmers Union, who are interested in the production of flaxseed, have repeatedly tried to get the Department of Agriculture to take some action. The Department has not been able to work out any specific plan, or to take any action at least, but during the past winter, after several conferences, a representative of the Department of Agriculture, who had with him a draft of a proposed bill to take care of flaxseed, came to some of our offices and said that the only justification the Department had under the Agricultural Adjustment Act to put on a processing tax and pay a benefit payment was because of an adjustment which might be made in the production of that particular product. The Department had a bill worked out for flaxseed, which provided that the tariff should be reduced 50 percent approximately—cut from 65 cents down to about half of that amount—and that a 35-cent processing tax be put on flaxseed. The explanation was made that because we only produce about half of the amount of flax which we consume in this country, the 35-cent processing tax would more than offset the reduction in the tariff by making it possible for the Department to make a benefit payment of about 60 or 70 cents, and thus benefit the farmers who produced flaxseed. The Agricultural Adjustment Administration was to pay an allotment on flax based on the acreage of past years in the flax-producing States. Some sort of an agreement was to be signed up between the farmers and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration containing the provision that the farmers would not increase their acreage over what was termed a normal acreage during the past several years, and that if that agreement was signed, then the processing tax would be put on, and the benefit payments would be made.

The Senator from California thinks because California has only produced flax for the last 3 or 4 years that the farmers of California would not be included in this benefit payment. I do not know as to that. I do not think they would receive such payment under the bill which was introduced during the early part of the present session, but the provision now before us has nothing at all to do with that other bill. The pending provision simply sets the amount of the processing tax at 35 cents, and authorizes that amount. Then it would be up to the Secretary of Agriculture to say whether it would be placed into operation or not. According to the explanations made by representatives of the Department of Agriculture, if this amendment should be adopted, there would be no chance of the flax growers, either in California or any place else, getting any benefit payments.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, that, of course, may be true, but I am not able to see any reason whatever for it. We produce scarcely half of the flax which we consume. As I understand, if the production of flax should be expanded, it might be a good thing; but the person engaged in expanding it ought to be treated in the same way as the man who is now in the business. That would not hurt anyone. It would be a good thing if the production of flax were expanded.

Mr. President, I cannot understand the objection which is being raised. The Senator from North Dakota may be right about it, of course. I have never talked with the Department of Agriculture about the matter, but I cannot see any reason why they should refuse to take action on this basic commodity on account of what the Senator from California proposes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There can be no objection on the part of the farmers of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota to having more farmers produce more flax so long as there is no surplus.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. This amendment provides that there shall be no reduction in acreage until the domestic production shall have risen sufficiently high to take care of domestic consumption. When that time arrives then allocation for acreage will be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from North Dakota on the amendment has expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, then I will speak on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized. He has 30 minutes on the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FRAZIER. Does the 30 minutes have to be taken all at one time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, one speech of not to exceed 30 minutes is allowed on the bill, and not to exceed 15 minutes is allowed on each amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from North Dakota a question in my time. I am now speaking on the amendment. May I ask the Senator if this is not the crux of the situation, so far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned? They have a theory, or some officials of the Department have, that there should be a specific limitation upon certain crops which they call either "expensive" or "inefficient"—I have forgotten the exact word. It is precisely the same philosophy with which they have dealt with the production of sugar beets. They say, "this is an inefficient crop from an American production standpoint, and, therefore, although we are not on a surplus basis, and although we are raising only a quarter of our consumption, there should be a sharp limitation, and there should be no further domestic production." Now, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota, in my own time, if that is a comparable situation respecting their philosophy as to flax?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I think flax is one of the so-called "inefficient" farm products produced here as to which it is desired to make international trade agreements with foreign countries and not to increase their production here in the United States. I think that is the situation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then, if we are defeating that sort of dictation by the Department of Agriculture by including this amendment in the amendment, it seems to me that is what we should do. Why is it not a good thing? The Senator from North Dakota does not believe in that philosophy of the Department of Agriculture, does he?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. FRAZIER. I surely do not believe in that policy at all.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then why not defeat it in this bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from California.

When the tariff bill was up, I tried to secure on flaxseed a tariff of 72 cents a bushel; but it was cut down to 65 cents on the ground that we only produce half the amount of flax consumed here. I felt that there should be a higher price so that we could produce more, for there was plenty of room for expansion in the growing of flaxseed if we could obtain a price based on the cost of production.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That would be precisely my conception. The feature of the amendment offered by the Senator from California which appeals to me is that it asserts on behalf of the Congress that that type of restriction of a non-surplus crop ought at least not to be perpetrated in the present instance.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota does the tariff or the lack of a tariff have anything to do with the production of flax?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I would be very glad to have the Senator from North Dakota answer that question in my time.

Mr. COPELAND. I will repeat the question. Does the Senator from North Dakota believe that the tariff or the lack of a tariff has anything whatever to do with the decreased acreage of flax?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I do not think there is any question but that the price of flaxseed governs, to a great extent, the quantity produced in the United States. The 65-cents-a-bushel tariff, I will admit, has not been effective to the full extent, but it has been effective probably to 60 or 70 percent. There may be some question as to just how much, but the tariff has had a tendency to increase the acreage of flax in normal years.

Mr. COPELAND. The tariff or the lack of it has nothing to do with the grasshoppers; it has nothing to do with the early frost.

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course not.

Mr. COPELAND. The Department of Agriculture states that the reason why there has been a marked decrease in the acreage of flax is because of the grasshoppers and the early frosts in the flax-producing region. It is stated in the report of the Department of Agriculture:

(a) Flax sensitive to heavy frost, which requires late planting, subjecting it to greater hazard from drought.
(b) Susceptible to grasshopper scourge.

So that the farmers, having discovered that, no longer plant flax. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course, drought and grasshoppers would decrease the acreage of flax; there can be no question about that; but if the price can be raised, the acreage will come back very rapidly since the drought has been broken.

Mr. COPELAND. What will the price have to do with grasshoppers and frost?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am not trying to answer that part of the Senator's question. The grasshoppers have nothing to do with the price of flax. Normally one would think the price of flax would rise under a scarcity, but the price has not come up; it is lower now than it has been for years.

Mr. COPELAND. My judgment is, if I may rely at all upon the Department of Agriculture, that there are natural causes responsible for the failure of the flax crop and the profitable raising of flax and that we can do nothing by legislation to improve the situation.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota or some other Senator who can answer the question definitely and specifically, either in my time or in his, whether the term "flax", which has constantly been employed by different Senators, refers to flaxseed only or to fiber flax? These two commodities are absolutely different and distinct. I wish to be clear in my own mind whether or not this reference or any reference is to fiber flax or just to flaxseed. And I want to be sure that other Senators understand this also, particularly those responsible for this phase of this legislation.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If I may answer the Senator in his time, having no more time on this amendment——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Flax is a different thing from flaxseed.

Mr. BARBOUR. I know that very well. That is the very point I want to make clear.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. This amendment refers only to flaxseed; it does not refer to flax as such.

Mr. BARBOUR. Simply to flaxseed?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Simply to flaxseed.

Mr. BARBOUR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggested to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] a moment ago, when he interrogated the Senator from North Dakota as to the reason why there should be any opposition to the amendment offered by the Senator from California, that it was desired to have a monopoly. It appears that two or three States have practically a monopoly of the production of flaxseed, and now, having obtained a high tariff, 65 cents a bushel, and having limited production in the United States, they want to deny to other persons the right to invade the flaxseed field and to produce flaxseed and to obtain a little of the benefits and bounties which will result from this proposed act and which accrue from the tariff. It seems to me if we are to give bounties and subsidies and that sort of thing, that the amendment offered by the Senator from California is one which is entitled to the support of the Senate as against the position of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. President, I recall, as a member of the Finance Committee, the appeals which were made for a tariff upon flaxseed. We granted a tariff of 65 cents a bushel, and the price of flaxseed has risen, as I recollect—I may be in error as to the figures, because I have not examined them for several years—from 20 cents a bushel up to 65 or 70 cents a bushel.

Mr. COPELAND. The price has risen to $1.20 a bushel.

Mr. KING. The price has risen to $1.20 a bushel, I am told; I was somewhat in error. Who is compelled to pay for this enormous increase in the price of flaxseed? The farmers themselves have to pay it in the increased cost of paint and other commodities which they use and which are indispensable and necessary to their activities. The linoleum in their houses is, in part, the product of flaxseed, and there are hundreds of other commodities entering into the lives of the people, farmers as well as the industrialists in the cities, which are affected by the price of flaxseed. From flaxseed are produced oils which are needed in the handling of leather and in preparing it for utilization in the manufacture of shoes and leather goods. It seems to me that this is an example of greed which is not justified.

A tariff of 65 cents a bushel has been levied on flaxseed; there has been an increase in the price perhaps of several hundred percent as the result of the tariff, and now there comes a demand for additional protection in order to prevent others from invading the field.

I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from California; and then, if such a motion shall be made, I will vote to strike out the entire provision. I think it is wholly unjustified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] to the amendment of the committee. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the committee amendment, on page 38, line 13, after the word "barley", it is proposed to insert the following:

In the case of flaxseed the first marketing year shall be considered to be the period commencing October 1, 1935, and ending April 30, 1936. Subsequent marketing years shall commence on May 1 and end on April 30 of the succeeding year.

There shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid (during any period after the date of the adoption of this amendment when a processing tax is in effect with respect to flaxseed) (a) a processing tax on the first domestic processing of perilla seed at the rate equal to the per pound rate of the processing tax which is then in effect on flaxseed, and (b) a processing tax on the first domestic processing of hempseed at the rate of 84 percent of the per pound rate of the processing tax which is then in effect on flaxseed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, is this the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. COPELAND. It sets aside, I presume, the theory of the original act. If I remember the original Agricultural Adjustment Act correctly, a compensatory tax must be levied on products competing with basic commodities. Is that what the Senator has in mind?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There was so much noise in the Senate, I did not hear what the Senator said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let there be order in the Senate so that one Senator may hear another.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Will the Senator please restate his query?

Mr. COPELAND. May I first ask the Senator, in my time, as he has exhausted his, what is he proposing by this amendment—a compensatory tax on the products competing with a basic commodity?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. Is not that the law now? That is the law under the present act, as I understand.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if I may obtrude at this point, let me say that in the original act a compensatory tax was placed on competing articles. At that time no specification was provided as to the amount of the processing tax, but it was based on a given period between 1907 and 1914, known as the "basic period."

In order to overcome the decision in the so-called "chicken case", it is attempted here to have Congress specify the amount of tax on flax; and consequently, to carry out that same parity theory, it is necessary to put a processing tax on the competitive products which are named in the amendment. That is the theory, as I gather it from reading the amendment and having a little knowledge of the original act.

I do not think it changes the theory or the principle at all, in carrying out the purposes of the amendment, in order to get around some of the constitutional objections found to the National Recovery Act, by specifying that Congress shall fix the amount of the tax rather than leaving it to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture. If we provide a yardstick for the domestic production of flax, we must provide a yardstick for the competitive agricultural commodity.

Mr. COPELAND. I know the explanation is correct. But what we are doing is still further to increase the cost of paint in this country, to say nothing of the cost of linoleum and other products. I am assured that if this provision without any amendment were to be adopted the cost of paint would be increased at least 35 cents a gallon. If the other drying oils—tung oil, perilla oil, and other oils—are also given the alleged benefit of further taxes, it would mean that every gallon and every quart of paint spread in America would be materially increased in price.

The question is whether we are willing to have that result, involving everybody, when the total acreage of flax in the country is less than a million acres. With a view to helping the owner of a million acres devoted to flax, we are asked to do a thing which would increase the cost of paints, linoleum, and other products containing these various oils.

Senators must decide. It is not difficult for me to decide, when I know there will be a material decline in the making and sale of paints and increased unemployment by reason thereof.

I suppose Senators from interior States get tired of hearing me talk about unemployment in New York City and in the other cities of my State, but everything we are doing here has a tendency to increase unemployment in my community. We have in New York City the largest group of unemployed in America—2,000,000 in number. A lot of the people now employed in paint factories will be unemployed by reason of this tax, because with the increased cost of paint there will be a decline in demand for it. If any Member of the Senate has had occasion to buy paint, as I have during the past several years, and to note the distinction and difference in the price of paint now and what it was 5 years ago, he knows what added cost means.

This provision must result in a decreased use of paint. Yet in order to help 1,000,000 acres of flax out of the many millions of acres devoted to farm products in the country, we are asked to do a thing which would materially increase the cost of paint and which would affect farmers who have buildings upon their farms which I assume they desire to keep painted.

Here with one hand we are writing a bill to increase taxes upon these various products, and with the other hand, and at the same time, we are making the prices of articles made from them still higher. I think there must come a time when we will stop that sort of thing. Certainly so far as this particular program is concerned, if I am correct in my logic and in the information given me, we are making a great mistake in increasing the cost of essential products and thereby making for more unemployment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, did the Senator vote for the N. R. A. Act?

Mr. COPELAND. I think I did.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The N. R. A. increased the costs which he is mentioning.

Mr. COPELAND. I know it; and if I had it to do over again, I should not vote for the N. R. A. There are a lot of such things I am not going to vote for now. I do not care if I am the only Democrat, though I know I am not the only one, I am not going to vote for these various measures which in my judgment are doing much to retard progress in America and which are seeking to set aside all those economic laws which are essential to our well-being as a Nation. We cannot make people good by legislation. Neither can we make them prosperous by legislation.

This is my apology as regards my vote 2 years ago on N. R. A. There are a lot of things I know now that I did not know then, and every citizen in America who is a student of affairs has learned a lot now that he did not know then.

We hoped, through these various legislative acts and by the social program set up by them, that we might improve the welfare of America. We tried to prime the pump; we tried to lift ourselves by our bootstraps; but we failed to do those things. If we continue along paths which have been proven by our experience in the past 2 years to be mistaken paths, we are not using the common sense which God gave us and which in my judgment we should exercise.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, the Senator has made the most excellent argument against protective tariffs and an excellent argument against the N. R. A.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Permit the Chair to remind the Senator from Minnesota that he has made one speech on the amendment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No; I have not taken any time on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Minnesota is pending and he has made one speech on the amendment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I thought I spoke on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think when the Senator from Minnesota had the floor he was speaking on the amendment of the Senator from California. I recall very clearly the Senator from California offered his amendment, and the Senator from Minnesota had his amendment read at the desk, but it was not pending. The rule, therefore, does not apply to him because he was speaking on an entirely different amendment than his own. I submit that statement because I was present and know what occurred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was some misunderstanding about the amendments being considered together. If the Senator from Minnesota thinks he has not discussed his amendment, the Chair will so hold.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Have I some time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 15 minutes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I shall take but 2 minutes. I repeat that the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has made an excellent argument against protective tariffs and an excellent argument against the N. R. A. I am not here to argue this matter, however.

This is the policy which is being formulated. In anticipation that that policy will be formulated in its completeness this amendment of mine is offered. Any man who does not believe in this policy has a right to vote against the final passage of the bill, but in fairness the formulation of the policy should be completed. This is only a part of the picture, a part of the policy, that the commodity, flaxseed, shall be included in order that the farmer may have for his flaxseed a parity price of $2.25 instead of $1.52 as at present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] are worthy of serious consideration. I think the constant increase of prices in this country is one of the things which is retarding recovery and enlarging the number of unemployed. In my judgment, about that there can be no doubt. But I think we ought to make sure that we have located the cause of the increase of prices in this country.

The increase of prices by reason of the increase of farm-product prices is almost infinitesimal by the time it reaches the ultimate consumer. The increase of the price of farm products has had comparatively little effect upon the price the Senator from New York and his constituents have to pay in New York City for agricultural commodities. These prices have been increased by reason of combinations in this country which are fixing prices for the American people.

Yesterday a long debate ensued on the question of the Government fixing prices, in which I do not believe. But I do know that prices are being fixed for a population of 120,000,000 by a comparatively small number of people in the United States. If that is to continue as a permanent policy, then it is better that prices be fixed by the Government. The prices of paints and of meats and of overalls and of practically everything the people must buy are not being fixed by reason of the increase of the price upon the farm, except in a comparatively very small degree, but by those who are in a position to sit around a table and fix the price for the American people. And the Government continues to connive at the great wrong.

Unless we are willing to deal with that question, unless we are willing to handle that proposition, we are not going to lower the price of products in this country; and unless we lower them, unless we prevent the artificial, arbitrary price fixed by arbitrary power, unemployment in this country is going to increase and additional hardship is going to be imposed on the American people. One of the great contributing causes of the depression was this power of a few to extort arbitrary prices from the great body of the people. So long as that power continues and that practice prevails there will be wide-spread poverty and constantly increasing unemployment. There is our problem, and not in the price of farm products.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, apropos of the observations made by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], I desire to read from a letter I have just received from Judge J. A. Howell, one of the distinguished citizens of my State.

It appears that a number of years ago a packing plant was established in the city of Ogden for the purpose of handling the meat products of Idaho, Utah, and the intermountain region. It was known as the American Packing & Provision Co. This plant continued its operations for several years but ultimately ceased its activities—largely due to the depression, as many other organizations did during the period referred to.

The corporation was reorganized by a number of the leading citizens of Ogden, among them Judge Howell. They were desirous of establishing and carrying on a modern packing plant, believing that it would prove of benefit to the State and furnish a market for the livestock industry of Utah and other Western States.

Judge Howell in his letter states:

It looked as if this venture would be one that would pay a reasonable return upon our money, and up until the time of the depression it did have fairly good prospects. Of course it suffered, as did all other business, during the depression; and then along came the floor tax and later the hog-processing tax under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and it is the particular purpose of this letter to state to you what is the effect of that tax upon such a business as this. As I understand it, the purpose of the tax was to secure sufficient funds with which to compensate producers for the limiting of the production, with the ultimate purpose of raising the price of hogs to the producer. It is not the purpose of this letter to argue the economics of such a law, but rather to state the practical results. It was assumed, of course, that this processing tax could be passed along by the producer to the consumer, but this has absolutely not been the result, by reason of the fact that the additional processing tax has caused the price of pork, hams, and other hog products so to increase that the consuming public refuses to purchase them at the price, and the consequence has been that gradually the volume of business of our company has diminished to such an extent that each month the business is running behind at a rate which means that only a limited time can elapse until this business must necessarily close its doors. It may be that ultimately the big packers, even under this law, will be able to survive, but if the experience of the other small packers is similar to ours, and I know of no reason why it should not be, the final result will be to drive all small packers out of the business entirely, and the result right here locally will be, as I have already stated, to close this plant and throw 250 Ogden citizens out of employment, as this tax burden averages between $15,000 and $20,000 a month on this little business.

Now, notwithstanding there are many of us who believe that this sort of a so-called "tax" is but a method of transferring one person's property to another and for other reasons is unconstitutional, it is now proposed by H. R. 8492 to prevent the recovery back of the tax by those who have suffered it, even if it should be declared to be unconstitutional.

Mr. President, in my opinion, some of the legislation which has been enacted during the past few years for the purpose of improving economic and industrial conditions has failed in its purpose. In periods of economic maladjustment, or depression, demands are not infrequently made to enact laws and carry out policies at variance with sound political and economic policies, but justified upon the theory that departures from accepted standards will secure benefits to groups and sections of the population. It is needless to state that grievous disappointments have followed these unsound experiments. Many of the measures which have been urged and adopted to meet periods of depression were enactments and regulations limiting and controlling production, fixing prices, and surrounding producers and distributors, and, indeed, consumers, with drastic and oppressive restrictions.

Under the Agriculture Adjustment Act crops were destroyed, lands condemned to remain fallow, and regulations promulgated and enforced which interfered with the exercise of legitimate rights of individuals and materially retarded economic and industrial rehabilitation.

It is singular that the many lessons of history which emphasized the unwisdom of measures and policies such as I have indicated, should be so unimpressive upon the minds of the people. With hundreds of millions of people denied the necessities of life, and millions in our own country without employment, without adequate food and clothing and shelter, we have put into effect policies that made it more difficult to defeat the forces of depression, revive business, and restore prosperity to the people.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is now urging that important products be brought under the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and subjected to the oppressive and restrictive regulations that have proven, in my opinion, so disadvantageous in respect to other commodities. He insists that perilla oil, tung oil, as well as other oils, shall be subjected to the terms of the A. A. Act, as amended. He concedes, as all familiar with these oils will concede, that they are important in promoting and developing industries in our country. It is conceded that the inclusion of these products as well as others mentioned in the bill before us, will increase the prices of these commodities which must be borne by the consumers. It is conceded that the purpose of this bill and the purpose of the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is to add to the costs of many commodities and to that extent increase the burdens which the people will have to bear.

Already there are complaints heard in various parts of our country against rising prices and particularly against the cost, by many, of the necessities of life. Doubtless it is true that the prices of some commodities are controlled, in part at least, by what might be denominated monopolies or combinations in restraint of trade. In such cases the antitrust laws should be invoked and rigorously applied. Monopoly is hateful, and the monopolistic control of things indispensable to the welfare of the people cannot and should not be permitted. The antitrust laws are broad and comprehensive, and violations should bring punishment to offenders.

Mr. President, there is a fallacy indulged in by many that legislation can cure all of the ills to which humanity is subject. Demands are being made for more laws, more restrictive legislation, the application of policies which experience has demonstrated to be unwise; and it is hoped, if not believed, that important benefits will result therefrom. I think it is recognized that some of these demands do not rest upon the theory of equal and exact justice to all, but rather contemplate that benefits, bounties, and advantages to one group or class shall be paid for by other groups or classes.

Undoubtedly there are economic and political tendencies toward the centralization of authority in the Federal Government, thus weakening the States and interfering with the legitimate exercise of individual rights. In my opinion, if the interpretation placed upon the commerce clause of the Constitution by many is accepted as a guide for congressional and national policies, then the rights of individuals as well as the States will be impaired and the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution will be changed. I have said upon a number of occasions that there are movements on foot to increase the authority of the Federal Government far beyond the limits of the Constitution as it came from the fathers and as it was interpreted by them. Under this misinterpretation of the commerce clause substantially all transactions and activities would fall into the category of interstate, and the Federal Government would have the power to control the lives and conduct and activities of the people.

I confess to entertaining serious misgivings as to the future of our form of government if the currents of socialism and paternalism, which are so rampant today, shall continue unabated.

Attempts are being made to overload the Federal Government, to increase its power, and to give to it authority to assume responsibilities belonging to individuals, communities, and States. In the end, if such attempts are successful, the States will be but shadows and the machinery of the Federal Government dominant in every phase and branch of our political, economic, and industrial life.

Senators are familiar with the statement of John Fiske, who said:

If the day should ever arrive (which God forbid) when the people of the different parts of our country shall allow their local affairs to be administered by prefects sent from Washington, and when the self-government of the States shall have been so far lost as that of the departments of France, or even so closely limited as that of the counties of England—on that day the political career of the American people will have been robbed of its most interesting and valuable features, and the usefulness of this Nation will be lamentably impaired.

He adds:

Too much centralization is our danger today, as the weakness of the Federal tie was our danger a century ago.

Mr. President, an important decision was rendered yesterday by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the First Circuit, in the case of William M. Butler et al. against United States of America. It relates to the A. A. Act and holds that certain of its provisions are unconstitutional. In the light of this decision, as well as other decisions by Federal courts, Congress should hesitate to give its approval to the pending measure because the infirmities of the A. A. Act are found in the pending bill. Indeed, it is believed by some that the measure before us has greater infirmities than the original act.

I desire to read a few excerpts from the opinion:

The power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce does not authorize it to do so by taking products, either of agriculture or industry, before they enter interstate commerce, or otherwise to control their production merely because their production may indirectly affect interstate commerce.

* * * * * * *

It is clear, we think, that under the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Schechter Poultry Corporation case decided on May 27, 1935, that Congress at the outset has attempted to invade a field over which it has no control, since its obvious purpose, viz, to control or regulate the production of agricultural products in the several States by the methods adopted in this act, is beyond the power of Congress.

* * * * * * *

The issue is not, as the Government contends, whether Congress can appropriate funds raised by general taxation for any purpose deemed by Congress in furtherance of the "general welfare" but whether Congress has any power to control or regulate matters left to the States and lay a special tax for that purpose.

* * * * * * *

The Federal Government is a government of enumerated powers and Congress cannot delegate legislative powers to the executive department.

I may add, in passing, that that is sought to be done in the bill which is under consideration.

While the courts have always shown a desire to sustain, if possible, acts of Congress, they have recognized the limitations imposed on Congress in this respect under the Constitution.

* * * * * * *

The power to determine what the law shall be, what property shall be affected by taxation or regulations, and what standards shall govern the administrative officers in administering acts of Congress, has never been held to be an administrative function.

* * * * * * *

The power to impose a tax and to determine what property shall bear the tax can only be determined by the legislative department of the Government.

* * * * * * *

The Secretary made no finding of facts as to why he selected the first list of basic commodities for reducing acreage or production and was not required to do so.

* * * * * * *

It cannot be said that the Secretary's judgment that his acts will tend to effectuate the general policy laid down by Congress can be called a finding, as his judgment merely involves his opinion as to the general effect of the agreements he executes, to equalize the purchasing power of the commodity in question with that of the 5-year pre-war period.

I may add in passing that greater discretion and latitude are permitted to the Secretary and to his assistants under the present bill than under the other act, and therefore this measure will be challenged with greater hope of success than the original A. A. A. Act itself.

If Congress can take over the control of any intrastate business by a declaration of an economic emergency and a public interest in its regulation, it would be difficult to define the limits of the powers of Congress, or to foretell the future limitations of local self-government.

I ask permission to have the entire opinion of the circuit court of appeals inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Without objection, the opinion will be inserted in the RECORD.

The opinion is as follows:

[From the New York Times of July 17, 1935]

Following is the text of the Federal circuit court of appeals decision holding the A. A. A. processing and floor taxes illegal:

William M. Butler et al., receivers of Hoosac Mills Corporation, appellants, v. United States of America, claimant, appellee. Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts. Before Bingham, Wilson, and Morris, JJ.

OPINION OF THE COURT

JULY 13, 1935.

Wilson, J.:

This is an appeal from a decree of the District Court of Massachusetts in the conduct of receivership proceedings against the Hoosac Mills Corporation, a Massachusetts corporation. The United States filed a claim with the receivers for processing and floor taxes levied under sections 9 and 16 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, chapter 25 (48 Stat. 31) (hereinafter referred to as the act), amounting in the aggregate to $81,694.28, of which $44,057.64 represented processing taxes and interest, and $37,636.64 represented floor taxes and interest.

The receivers in their report to the district court recommended that the claims for these taxes be disallowed. The district court, however, found that the claims were valid and entered a decree ordering the claims to be paid.

COMPLAINTS OF ERROR PUT IN THREE GROUPS

The receivers appealed from the decree and filed numerous assignments of error, which may be grouped under three heads:

(1) The taxes imposed are not warranted under the Federal Constitution in that they were imposed for the unlawful purpose of regulating and restricting the production of cotton in the several States, which is an unwarranted interference with matters solely within the control of the respective States and is violative of the powers reserved to the States under the tenth amendment, and, therefore, does not constitute an exercise of any authority or power of taxation granted to Congress under section 8 of the Constitution.

(2) The delegation of the powers under sections 8 and 9 of the act to the Secretary of Agriculture to determine by agreement with the producers which of the basic commodities enumerated under section 11 of the act as amended shall be restricted as to production, to what extent the acreage devoted to the production of any of such basic commodities shall be limited to bring about the result sought to be gained by the act, to determine when rental or benefit payments shall be made and the amount, and the investing of power in the Secretary to determine when and what competing commodities should be taxed and to what extent, and to determine when such processing tax shall become effective or shall cease to be imposed, is an unwarranted delegation of the legislative power granted exclusively to Congress.

(3) That the processing and floor taxes imposed are direct taxes and are not apportioned as required under section 8 of the Constitution, or, if excise taxes, are not uniform throughout the United States and are therefore not authorized under the Constitution.

RULING INTERPRETS AIMS OF CONGRESS

We are not unmindful of the rules of construction that a presumption exists as to the validity of an act of Congress, or that if an act is susceptible of two interpretations that should be accepted which will uphold its validity.

It is clearly apparent, however, from the provisions of the act that the main purpose of Congress in its enactment was not to raise revenue but to control and regulate the production of what is termed the "basic products of agriculture", in order to establish and maintain a balance between the production and consumption of such commodities, which Congress realized could not in any event be accomplished by compulsory regulation of the production of agricultural products, and it sought to avoid the objection that it was interfering with matters solely within the control of the States themselves by making the restriction of production voluntary by basing the act on the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, on its power to tax to provide for the general welfare of the United States, and by declaring that in the acute economic emergency that exists transactions in agricultural commodities have become affected with a public interest.

Title I of the act opens with the following:

"Declaration of emergency: That the present acute economic emergency being in part the consequence of a severe and increasing disparity between the prices of agricultural and other commodities, which disparity has largely destroyed the purchasing power of the farmers for industrial products, has broken down the orderly exchange of commodities, and has seriously impaired the agricultural assets supporting the national credit structure, it is hereby declared that these conditions in the basic industry of agriculture have affected transactions in agricultural commodities with a national public interest, have burdened and obstructed the normal currents of commerce in such commodities, and render imperative the immediate enactment of title I of this act."

NEW CONGRESS POWERS ARE DENIED BY COURT

According to recent pronouncements of the Supreme Court, however, such a declaration grants no new powers to Congress, nor does a declaration by Congress that under certain conditions the industry of agriculture is affected with a public interest, or burdens and obstructs the normal flow of commerce, necessarily give to Congress the absolute power to control or regulate it by legislation.

The assignments of error are based on the provisions of the following sections:

"SEC. 2. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress—

"(1) To establish and maintain such balance between the production and consumption of agricultural commodities, and such marketing conditions therefor, as will reestablish prices to farmers at a level that will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power, with respect to articles that farmers buy, equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the base period. The base period in the case of all agricultural commodities except tobacco shall be the pre-war period August 1909–July 1914.

"In the case of tobacco, the base period shall be the post-war period August 1919–July 1929.

"(2) To approach such equality of purchasing power by gradual correction of the present inequalities therein at as rapid a rate as is deemed feasible in view of the current consumptive demands in domestic and foreign markets.

"(3) To protect the consumers' interest by readjusting farm production at such level as will not increase the percentage of the consumers' retail expenditures for agricultural commodities, or products derived therefrom, which is returned to the farmer, above the percentage which was returned to the farmer in the pre-war period, August 1909–July 1914."

"SEC. 8. In order to effectuate the declared policy the Secretary of Agriculture shall have power—

"(1) To provide for reduction in the acreage or reduction in the production for market, or both, of any basic agricultural commodity, through agreements with producers or by other voluntary methods, and to provide for rental or benefit payments in connection therewith or upon that part of the production of any basic agricultural commodity required for domestic consumption, in such amounts as the Secretary deems fair and reasonable, to be paid out of any moneys available for such payments.

"Under regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture requiring adequate facilities for the storage of any nonperishable agricultural commodity on the farm, inspection and measurement of any such commodity so stored, and the locking and sealing thereof, and such other regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the protection of such commodity and for the marketing thereof, a reasonable percentage of any benefit payment may be advanced on any such commodity so stored.

"In any such case such deduction may be made from the amount of the benefit payment as the Secretary of Agriculture determines will reasonably compensate for the cost of inspection and sealing, but no deduction may be made for interest."

PROVISIONS OF ACT FOR COLLECTIONS QUOTED

"SEC. 9 (A). To obtain revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of the national economic emergency there shall be levied processing taxes as hereinafter provided. When the Secretary of Agriculture determines that rental or benefit payments are to be made with respect to any basic agricultural commodity he shall proclaim such determination, and a processing tax shall be in effect with respect to such commodity from the beginning of the marketing year therefor next following the date of such proclamation.

"The processing tax shall be levied, assessed, and collected upon the first domestic processing of the commodity, whether of domestic production or imported, and shall be paid by the processor. The rate of tax shall conform to the requirements of subsection (B). Such rate shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture as of the date the tax first takes effect, and the rate so determined shall, at such intervals as the Secretary finds necessary to effectuate the declared policy, be adjusted by him to conform to such requirements.

"The processing tax shall terminate at the end of the marketing year current at the time the Secretary proclaims that rental or benefit payments are to be discontinued with respect to such commodity. The marketing year for each commodity shall be ascertained and prescribed by regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That upon any article upon which a manufacturers' sales tax is levied under the authority of the Revenue Act of 1932 and which manufacturers' sales tax is computed on the basis of weight, such manufacturers' sales tax shall be computed on the basis of the weight of said finished article less the weight of the processed cotton contained therein on which a processing tax has been paid.

RATE OF THE TAX AS PROVIDED BY ACT

"(B) The processing tax shall be at such rate as equals the difference between the current average farm price for the commodity and the fair exchange value of the commodity; except that if the Secretary has reason to believe that the tax at such rate will cause such reduction in the quantity of the commodity or products thereof domestically consumed as to result in the accumulation of surplus stocks of the commodity or products thereof or in the depression of the farm price of the commodity, then he shall cause an appropriate investigation to be made and afford due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties.

"If thereupon the Secretary finds that such result will occur, then the processing tax shall be at such rate as will prevent such accumulations of surplus stocks and depression of the farm prices of the commodity. In computing the current average farm price in the case of wheat, premiums paid producers for protein content shall not be taken into account.

"(C) For the purposes of part 2 of this title, the fair exchange value of a commodity shall be the price therefor that will give the commodity the same purchasing power, with respect to articles farmers buy, as such commodity had during the base period specified in section 2; and the current average farm price and the fair exchange value shall be ascertained by the Secretary of Agriculture from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture."

REGULATIONS GET STATUS AND EFFECT OF LAW

"SEC. 10. (c) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, with the approval of the President, to make such regulations with the force and effect of law as may be necessary to carry out the powers vested in him by this title, including regulations establishing conversion factors for any commodity and article processed therefrom, to determine the amount of tax imposed or refunds to be made with respect thereto. Any violation of any regulation shall be subject to such penalty, not in excess of $100, as may be provided therein."

As originally enacted, section 11 read as follows:

"SEC. 11. As used in this title, the term 'basic agricultural commodity' means wheat, cotton, field corn, hogs, rice, tobacco, and milk and its products, and any regional or market classification, type, or grade thereof; but the Secretary of Agriculture shall exclude from the operation of the provisions of this title, during any period, any such commodity or classification, type, or grade thereof if he finds, upon investigation at any time and after due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties, that the conditions of production, marketing, and consumption are such that during such period this title cannot be effectively administered to the end of effectuating the declared policy with respect to such commodity or classification, type, or grade thereof.

"SEC. 12. (a) There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000,000, to be available to the Secretary of Agriculture for administrative expenses under this title and for rental and benefit payments made with respect to reduction in acreage or reduction in production for market under part 2 of this title. Such sum shall remain available until expended.

ACT FIXES THE USES OF SUCH TAX INCOME

"(b) In addition to the foregoing, the proceeds derived from all taxes imposed under this title are hereby appropriated to be available to the Secretary of Agriculture for expansion or markets and removal of surplus agricultural products, and the following purposes under part 2 of this title: Administrative expenses, rental and benefit payments, and refunds on taxes.

"The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury shall jointly estimate from time to time the amounts, in addition to any money available under subsection (a), currently required for such purposes; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, advance to the Secretary of Agriculture the amounts so estimated.

"The amount of any such advance shall be deducted from such tax proceeds as shall subsequently become available under this subsection."

"SEC. 15 (a). If the Secretary of Agriculture finds, upon investigation at any time and after due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties, that any class of products of any commodity is of such low value, compared with the quantity of the commodity used for their manufacture, that the imposition of the processing tax would prevent in whole or in large part the use of the commodity in the manufacture of such products and thereby substantially reduce consumption and increase the surplus of the commodity, then the Secretary of Agriculture shall so certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall abate or refund any processing tax assessed or paid after the date of such certification with respect to such amount of the commodity as is used in the manufacture of such products."

LAW MAKES PROVISION FOR FIXING OF RATES

"(d) The Secretary of Agriculture shall ascertain from time to time whether the payment of the processing tax upon any basic agricultural commodity is causing or will cause to the processors thereof disadvantages in competition from competing commodities by reason of excessive shifts in consumption between such commodities or products thereof.

"If the Secretary of Agriculture finds, after investigation and due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties, that such disadvantages in competition exist, or will exist, he shall proclaim such finding. The Secretary shall specify in this proclamation the competing commodity and the compensating rate of tax on the processing thereof necessary to prevent such disadvantages in competition. Thereafter there shall be levied, assessed, and collected upon the first domestic processing of such competing commodity a tax, to be paid by the processor, at the rate specified, until such rate is altered pursuant to a further finding under this section, or the tax or rate thereof on the basic agricultural commodity is altered or terminated. In no case shall the tax imposed upon such competing commodity exceed that imposed per equivalent unit, as determined by the Secretary upon the basic agricultural commodity.

"SEC. 16. (a) Upon the sale or other disposition of any article processed wholly or in chief value from any commodity with respect to which a processing tax is to be levied, that on the date the tax first takes effect or wholly terminates with respect to the commodity, is held for sale or other disposition (including articles in transit) by any person, there shall be made a tax adjustment as follows:

"(1) Whenever the processing tax first takes effect there shall be levied, assessed, and collected a tax to be paid by such person equivalent to the amount of the processing tax which would be payable with respect to the commodity from which processed if the processing had occurred on such date.

"(2) Whenever the processing tax is wholly terminated there shall be refunded to such person a sum (or if it has not been paid, the tax shall be abated) in any amount equivalent to the processing tax with respect to the commodity from which processed."

POWER OF CONGRESS OVER PRODUCTION OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

It is clear from the above sections, together with the other sections of the act, that its main purpose is to control and regulate the production of the so-called "basic agricultural commodities" in the several States, through agreements with the producers and in consideration of what is termed "rental" or "benefit" payments, to reduce acreage or production for market sufficient to increase the current average price of such products to that elusive point where the returns to the farmer from the production of such commodities will purchase under present conditions the same amount of industrial products that the returns to the farmer from the same products would buy in the 5-year pre-war period from July 1909 to August 1914.

PURPOSE OF THE TAXES DECLARED OBVIOUS

The "processing" and "floor taxes", though ostensibly imposed for raising funds to meet extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of the national economic emergency, are obviously intended to provide funds for the rental and benefit payments authorized under section 8, as such taxes are not imposed except when the Secretary determines that rental or benefit payments are to be made, and the proceeds are expressly appropriated for the purpose.

It is urged by the receivers, and in a brief filed by one of the amici curiae, that the restriction of the production of agricultural products is entirely within the control of the several States, and Congress cannot control it directly or indirectly through the executive department, however great the emergency; that even if in a great emergency transactions in agricultural products become affected with a public interest, which is not met by concerted action by the States themselves, it does not lie within the power of Congress to regulate their production; that however wide-spread the public interest in a matter solely within the control of the States themselves, Congress has no power to control or regulate it, it being reserved to the States under the tenth amendment.

The power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce does not authorize it to do so by taking products either of agriculture or industry before they enter interstate commerce, or otherwise to control their production merely because their production may indirectly affect interstate commerce.

There is, of course, nothing new in this statement; see Hammer v. Dagenhart (247 U. S. 251); Child Labor Tax Case (259 U. S. 20); Chassaniol v. City of Greenwood (291 U. S. 584); Kidd v. Pearson (128 U. S. 1); Keller v. United States (213 U. S. 138, 145); New York v Miln (11 Pet. 102, 139); United Leather Workers International Union et al. v. Herkert (265 U. S. 457); United Mine Workers et al. v. Coronado Co. (259 U. S 344, 408); Crescent Cotton Oil Co. v. Mississippi (257 U. S. 129); Champlin Refining Co v. Corporation Commission of Oklahoma (286 U. S. 210, 235); United States v. Eason Oil Co. (8 Fed. Sup. 365); United States v. Weirton Steel Co. (10 Fed. Sup. 55).

ESSENTIAL THAT STATES RULE LOCAL MATTERS

In Hammer v. Dagenhart, supra, page 275, the Court said:

"A statute must be judged by its natural and reasonable effect (Collins v. New Hampshire (171 U. S. 30, 33, 34)). The control by Congress over interstate commerce cannot authorize the exercise of authority not entrusted to it by the Constitution (Pipe Line cases (234 U. S. 548, 560)). The maintenance of the authority of the States over matters purely local is as essential to the preservation of our institutions as is the conservation of the supremacy of the Federal powers in all matters entrusted to the Nation by the Federal Constitution.

"In interpreting the Constitution it must never be forgotten that the Nation is made up of States to which are entrusted the powers of local government. And to them and to the people the powers not expressly delegated to the National Government are reserved (Lane County v. Oregon (7 Wall. 71, 76)). The power of the States to regulate their purely internal affairs by such laws as seem wise to the local authority is inherent and has never been surrendered to the General Government (New York v. Miln (11 Pet. 102, 139); Slaughter House cases (16 Wall. 36, 63); Kidd v. Pearson, supra.

"To sustain this statute would not be, in our judgment, a recognition of the lawful exertion of congressional authority over interstate commerce but would sanction an invasion by the Federal power of the control of a matter purely local in its character, and over which no authority has been delegated to Congress in conferring the power to regulate commerce among the States.

"We have neither authority nor disposition to question the motives of Congress in enacting this legislation. The purposes intended must be attained consistently within constitutional limitations and not by an invasion of the powers of the States. This court has no more important function than that which devolves upon it the obligation to preserve inviolate the constitutional limitations upon the exercise of authority, Federal and State, to the end that each may continue to discharge harmoniously with the other the duties entrusted to it by the Constitution."

POINTS TO DECISION IN SCHECHTER CASE

The Government contends that Congress does not seek by the act to interfere with the States' control over agriculture, inasmuch as the reduction of acreage and of production of either of the basic agricultural products depends on voluntary agreements by the producers and the processing and floor taxes depend on the execution of such agreements to reduce production, citing Massachusetts v. Mellon (262 U. S. 447); but it is clear, we think, that under the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Schechter Poultry Corporation case, decided on May 27, 1935, that Congress at the outset has attempted to invade a field over which it has no control, since its obvious purpose, viz, to control or regulate the production of agricultural products in the several States by the methods adopted in this act is beyond the power of Congress (Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46; Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U. S. 107).

The processing and floor taxes are not dependent on the execution of agreements to reduce acreage or production alone, but on the determination by the Secretary, without any foundation other than his own opinion, that the existing economic emergency demands that to accomplish the declared purpose of the act rental or benefit payments shall be made. The imposing of the taxes automatically follows.

The issue is not, as the Government contends, whether Congress can appropriate funds raised by general taxation for any purpose deemed by Congress in furtherance of the general welfare, but whether Congress has any power to control or regulate matters left to the States and lay a special tax for that purpose.

DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWERS

The issue of whether under the act there has been an unauthorized delegation by Congress of its legislative powers is decisive of the case before this court.

Except as a premise for the conclusions which follow, it is unnecessary to restate what has been so often reiterated by the courts, viz, that the Federal Government is a Government of enumerated powers, and Congress cannot delegate legislative powers to the executive department.

The line between grants of legislative powers and the authority to perform a purely administrative function as drawn in the decisions may at first blush appear wavy instead of straight, notwithstanding the rule has been often definitely stated.

The Supreme Court of Ohio in Cincinnati, Wilmington, etc., R. R. v. Commissioners (1 Ohio St. 77, 88), stated the rule in a form which has been approved by the Supreme Court of the United States (Field v. Clark (143 U. S. 649)), and again in the recent case of Panama Refining Co. et al. v. Ryan et al (293 U. S. 388, 426):

"The true distinction, therefore, is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first cannot be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made."

The Supreme Court in the Panama Refining Co. case, supra, also said:

"The Congress manifestly is not permitted to abdicate or to transfer to others the essential legislative functions with which it is thus vested. Undoubtedly legislation must often be adapted to complex conditions involving a host of details with which the National Legislature cannot deal directly. The Constitution has never been regarded as denying to the Congress the necessary resources of flexibility and practicability which will enable it to perform its function in laying down policies and establishing standards while leaving to selected instrumentalities the making of subordinate rules within prescribed limits and the determination of facts to which the policy as declared by the Legislature is to apply. Without capacity to give authorizations of that sort, we should have the anomaly of a legislative power which in many circumstances calling for its exertion would be a futility."

PREVIOUS COURT RULINGS ARE QUOTED IN DECISION

The Court, however, added:

"But the constant recognition of the necessity and validity of such provisions, and the wide range of administrative authority which has been developed by means of them, cannot be allowed to obscure the limitations of the authority to delegate if our constitutional system is to be maintained."

And in the case of Wichita R. R. & Light Co. v. Public Utilities Commission (260 U. S. 48, 59) the Court said:

"In creating such an administrative agency, the legislature, to prevent its being a pure delegation of legislative power, must enjoin upon it a certain course of procedure and certain rules of decision in the performance of its function."

It is the application of this principle to complex situations that sometimes makes it difficult to determine whether there has been a grant of legislative power to an administrative officer or merely administrative functions.

While the courts have always shown a desire to sustain, if possible, acts of Congress, they have recognized the limitations imposed on Congress in this respect under the Constitution.

In the leading case of Field v. Clark, supra, page 692, the court said that the rule "that Congress cannot delegate legislative powers to the President is a principle universally recognized as vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution."

Under stress of circumstances we sometimes forget the reason for the division of our Government into three independent branches, which was expressed in the Constitution of Massachusetts by one of those instrumental in securing the adoption of the Federal Constitution:

"In the government of this Commonwealth, the executive department shall never exercise the legislative and judicial powers, or either of them; the judicial shall never exercise the legislative and executive powers, or either of them, to the end it may be a government of laws and not of men."

PAST COURT ACTIONS ON DELEGATION OF POWER

The extent to which the court has gone in upholding the acts of Congress upon the ground that Congress may select instrumentalities for the purpose of ascertaining the existence of facts upon which the operation of the law depends, and may properly give authority to administrative officers to determine certain facts, and by establishing primary standards devolve on others the duty to carry out the declared legislative policy in accordance therewith is shown in the following cases:

The Brig "Aurora" (7 Cr. 382); Field v. Clark, supra; Buttfield v. Stranahan (192 U. S. 470); Union Bridge Co. v. United States (204 U. S. 364); United States v. Chemical Foundation (272 U. S. 1); Radio Commission v. Nelson Brothers Co. (289 U. S. 266); United States v. Grimaud (220 U. S. 506); Hampton & Co. v. United States (276 U. S. 394); Plymouth Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania (232 U. S. 531); United States v. Shreveport Grain & Elevator Co. (287 U. S. 77); Avent v. United States (266 U. S. 127); Williamsport Wire Rope Co. v. United States (277 U. S. 551); St. Louis & Iron Mountain Southern Railway Co. v. Taylor (210 U. S. 281, 287).

But an examination of these decisions and others of the Supreme Court will also disclose that when an act of Congress of this nature has been sustained, either there has been clear direction to perform an administrative function or to add a tax of the same character to one already imposed by Congress—Milliken v. United States (283 U. S. 15, 24); Patton v. Brady (184 U. S. 608); or to grant relief from an excessive tax already imposed—Williamsport Wire Rope Co. v. United States (277 U. S. 551); Heiner v. Diamond Alkali Co. (288 U. S. 502); or a power to determine, after notice and hearing, certain facts upon which the operation of congressional edicts are made to depend, particularly when the determination of the facts are dependent on data not within the knowledge of Congress, or not readily accessible, and the ultimate facts on which the will of Congress depends can only be determined from evidentiary facts to be proved by evidence, which cannot be fairly weighed except by permanent and specially qualified officials, such as the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the Board of Tax Appeals, the Radio Commission, or the Tariff Commission, and from the findings of which commission judicial review is provided for—Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. (227 U. S. 88).

LAW-FIXING POWERS NOT ADMINISTRATIVE

The power to determine what the law shall be, what property shall be affected by taxation or regulation, and what standards shall govern the administrative officers in administering acts of Congress, has never been held to be an administrative function.

The power to impose a tax and to determine what property shall bear the tax can only be determined by the legislative department of the Government. If Congress undertakes to lay down a guide for an administrative officer to follow in carrying out its mandates, it must be by an intelligible and reasonably definite standard (Adkins v. Children's Hospital, 261 U. S. 525; Hampton & Co. v. United States, supra, p. 409).

The balance between production and consumption of certain commodities, or the equalizing of the purchasing power thereof between certain widely separated periods, alone forms no such standard.

Congress in the National Recovery Act authorized the President to prohibit the transmission of oil in interstate commerce in excess of the amount authorized by a State, which on its face might seem definite, but the Court said in the Panama Refining Co. case, supra, page 415:

"The question whether that transportation shall be prohibited by law is obviously one of legislative policy. Accordingly we look to the statute to see whether the Congress has declared a policy with respect to that subject; whether the Congress has set up a standard for the President's action; whether the Congress has required any finding by the President in the exercise of the authority to enact the prohibition. * * *

"Section 9 (c) does not state whether, or in what circumstances or under what conditions, the President is to prohibit the transportation of the amount of petroleum or petroleum products produced in excess of the State's permission. It establishes no criterion to govern the President's course. It does not require any finding by the President as a condition of his action."

RULING ON THE N. R. A. ALSO IS RECALLED

The Court found no standard in the act by which the President's action was to be governed except a general declaration in section 1 of a policy even broader than that contained in section 2 of this act. The Court said of section 1 of the Recovery Act, page 417:

"This general outline of policy contains nothing as to the circumstances or conditions in which transportation of petroleum or petroleum products should be prohibited—nothing as to the policy of prohibiting or not prohibiting the transportation or production exceeding that the States allow. * * * It is manifest that this broad outline is simply an introduction of the act, leaving the legislative policy as to particular subjects to be declared and defined, if at all, by the subsequent sections."

If Congress has the power to control or regulate the production of agricultural products within the several States and assess a tax on their processing or sale for that purpose, it is obviously legislative in character. Quercy, then, has Congress set up any definite standard for the Secretary's action in making rental or benefit payments to producers and thereby imposing a processing tax?

We find no definite, intelligible standard set up in the act for determining when the Secretary shall pay rental or benefit payments in order to reduce production of any particular commodity except his own judgment as to what will effectuate the purpose of the act.

The declaration of emergency in the Agricultural Adjustment Act contains no such standard for the Secretary of Agriculture to follow in entering into restrictive agreements with producers of agricultural products. It is merely a statement of conditions which in the judgment of Congress warranted legislative action.

Section 2 of the act declaring the policy of Congress in enacting the legislation contains no more than a statement of the objects Congress had in view in passing the act, viz, "To establish and maintain a balance between the consumption and production of agricultural commodities and such marketing conditions therefor as will reestablish prices to farmers at such a level as will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities during the 5-year pre-war period from July 1909 to August 1914."

We can conceive of no goal that can be more elusive and difficult of attainment.

FINDS BENEFIT GRANTS LEFT TO SECRETARY

Without requiring any findings to warrant his action, Congress has empowered him, in conjunction with the producers, to determine when a reduction of acreage or production of any one of the agricultural commodities which it has termed basic, should be resorted to to accomplish the purpose of the act, when rental or benefit payments are to be made and in what amounts, and thereby to determine through the initiation of the benefit payments or rentals the consequent imposition of a tax.

The making of benefit payments, therefore, rests upon, and the consequent imposition of the tax is vested in the discretion of the Secretary, in conjunction, of course, with the producers, governed by no other consideration than the general purpose of Congress to equalize the purchasing power of certain agricultural products.

The carrying out of the policy stated by Congress in section 2 is no more definite as a standard by which the acts of the Secretary are determined than the policy expressed in the National Recovery Act as to transportation of oil and the power vested in the President to prescribe industrial business codes governing the conduct of business.

PRESENT CASE LIKENED TO RULING ON THE N. R. A.

What the Supreme Court said of section 9 (c) of the National Recovery Act in the Panama Refining Co. case may likewise be said of section 2 and section 8 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Neither section 2 nor section 8 of this act states whether or under what circumstances the Secretary shall enter into agreements to limit production of basic agricultural commodities.

Action by the Secretary is not mandatory, and the act establishes no criterion to govern his course of action. It requires no finding by him as a condition of his action, nor is any provision for judicial review provided in the act in case of a finding that such standard in fact exists.

It is true that the facts in this case are different from those in the Panama Refining Co. case and in the Schechter poultry case, but the provisions defining the acts of the Secretary differ from those authorizing the acts of the President in those cases only in the general terms employed. The principle involved is the same.

The indefiniteness of the standard by which the Secretary of Agriculture is to proceed is at once apparent and was recognized by Congress in paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 2, in which it was provided that the approach to such equality of purchasing power must be by a gradual correction of the present inequalities at as rapid a rate as is deemed feasible by the Secretary in view of the current consumptive demand in the domestic and foreign markets, and further by protecting the consumers' interest by readjusting farm production at such a level as will not increase the percentage of the consumers' retail expenditures for agricultural commodities which is returned to the farmer above that returned to him during the 5-year pre-war period.

As originally enacted Congress enumerated in section 11 seven products which it termed basic, and later by amendment added rye, flax, barley, grain, sorghum, sugar beets, sugarcane, peanuts, and rice. Benefit payments under the act have been made with respect to wheat, cotton, tobacco, hogs, field corn, and peanuts, but none with respect to barley, cattle, flax, grain, sorghum, milk, or rye.

Congress has not specifically directed that payments should be made to the producers of any one of them except the producers of sugar, or that the processing of any one of these products should be taxed except rice, but as to each of the other commodities enumerated, has left it to the Secretary of Agriculture to determine by agreements with the producers themselves which ones, if any, should receive benefit or rental payments and in what amounts.

FINDINGS OF FACTS HELD TO BE LACKING

The Secretary made no finding of facts as to why he selected the first list of basic commodities for reducing acreage or production, and was not required to do so. He simply made a proclamation that "rental and/or benefit payments are to be made with respect to cotton", and a processing tax automatically followed.

It cannot be said that the Secretary's judgment that his acts will tend to effectuate the general policy laid down by Congress can be called a finding, as his judgment involves merely his opinion as to the general effect of the agreements he executes to equalize the purchasing power of the commodity in question with that of the 5-year pre-war period.

Only when he undertakes to readjust taxes is he supposed to make findings, but in that case it amounts to no more, as the Court said in the Schechter Poultry Corporation case of the President's code-making powers under the National Recovery Act, than his opinion as to its effect in promoting the general policy outlined by Congress in the act itself.

To quote from the opinion in the Schechter Poultry Corporation case, decided May 27, 1935:

"But would it be seriously contended that Congress could delegate its legislative authority to trade or industrial associations or groups so as to empower them to enact the laws they deem to be wise and beneficent for the rehabilitation and expansion of their trade or industries? Could trade or industrial associations or groups be constituted legislative bodies for that purpose because such associations or groups are familiar with the problems of their enterprises?

"And could an effort of that sort be made valid by such a preface of generalities as to permissible aims as we find in section

1 of title I? The answer is obvious. Such a delegation of legislative power is unknown to our law and is utterly inconsistent with the constitutional prerogatives and duties of Congress."

DENIES CONGRESS MAY GRANT POWERS

Because the proposed reduction of acreage and of production of the so-called "basic agricultural commodities" is to be secured through voluntary agreements, the Government also contends that Congress has not delegated legislative powers to the Secretary; but can Congress, in order to effectuate the general policy expressed in section 2 of the act, lawfully delegate to the Secretary the power to determine whether, in consideration of rental or benefit payments to the producers, the production of any one of such basic agricultural commodities shall be reduced and to what extent reduced, without a finding by the Secretary that facts exist requiring a reduction of the acreage and of production of such agricultural commodity, or without some standard fixed by Congress by which action by the Secretary shall be determined; and further provide that upon his determination to pay such rental or benefit payments a tax shall be automatically imposed on the processing of such commodity for the purpose of providing revenue for such rental or benefit payments? We think not.

While the amount of the reduction of acreage or production of any basic commodity under this act is done by agreements and not by a code, the purpose and result is the same, viz: The control and regulation of a great intrastate industry, and the Secretary, with the approval of the President, is authorized to make regulations for carrying out powers vested in him and imposing a penalty for their violation.

If Congress can take over the control of any intrastate business by a declaration of an economic emergency and a public interest in its regulation, it would be difficult to define the limits of the powers of Congress or to foretell the future limitations of local self-government.

OTHER POWERS FOUND VESTED IN SECRETARY

But these are not the only powers vested in the Secretary under the act. When a tax shall first be imposed on processing of such commodity depends on the joint action of both the Secretary and the producer, but if the Secretary finds or has reason to believe that a tax determined in accordance with the statistics in the Agricultural Department as to the purchasing power of such commodities in the two contrasting periods will cause such a reduction in the quantity of the commodity or products thereof domestically consumed as to result in an accumulation of surplus stocks of the commodity and in the depression of the farm price of the commodity, and if he finds, after hearings, that such result has occurred, he may make a new rate that will prevent an accumulation of such commodity or a depression of farm prices.

In readjusting the rate of tax there is no mathematical formula or standard provided in the act to guide the Secretary except the indefinite one of preventing an accumulation of surplus stock of any of the basic commodities or a depression in farm prices.

A finding or conclusion by the Secretary, after hearing, that the readjustment of the tax would carry out the congressional policy by preventing the accumulation of a surplus of the commodity amounts to no more than an expression of his opinion.

If it could be urged that there is a standard set up in section 9 of the act for determining the amount of the processing tax, viz, the equalizing of the purchasing power of the basic commodities with the pre-war period, it requires readjustments to such an extent as to render the standard so indefinite as to leave it entirely in the discretion of the Secretary what the amount shall be to accomplish that purpose.

He is also given authority to impose what is termed "compensating taxes"; that is, if the Secretary, after notice and hearing, finds that any competing commodity will cause the processors disadvantage from such competition by reason of excessive shifts in consumption between such commodities or the products thereof, he may specify the competing commodity and a compensating processing tax on the competing commodity necessary to prevent such disadvantage.

No standard or guide is here laid down to determine how the compensating tax shall be fixed or what elements shall be taken into consideration in determining the amount, except that it shall be determined by the amount necessary to prevent such disadvantage in competition.

We find no decision of the Supreme Court authorizing such a delegation of power to an administrative officer. On the contrary, the recent decision in the Panama Refining Co. case and the Schechter Poultry Corporation case, we think, clearly condemns it as unwarranted under the Constitution.

It is not contended that the receivers have been adversely affected by these last two provisions, and is adverted to for the purpose of showing the extent to which Congress has attempted to vest legislative power in the Secretary.

It is not difficult to understand, after studying the act, why the district court concluded that "it must * * * be conceded that legislative functions are conferred upon administrative officers by the act", or that "the Agricultural Adjustment Act indubitably authorizes an executive to exercise powers of a legislative character."

The district court, however, hesitated to hold the authority vested in the Secretary was an unlawful delegation of legislative power, because no decision of the Supreme Court at the time of his decision had held any of the recent acts of Congress unconstitutional on this ground. Since that time, however, the case of Panama Refining Co. and the Schechter Poultry Corporation case have been decided.

PROCESSING AND FLOOR TAXES

Upon determining that benefit payments are to be made to the producers, the Secretary is further vested with the power to fix the amount of the processing tax on any commodity provided for in section 16 and at a rate that will equal the difference between the current average farm price for the commodity and its fair exchange value during the 5-year pre-war period, which fair exchange value is to be determined by him from statistics in the Department of Agriculture.

If the district court, however, understood the receivers as agreeing that the Secretary had correctly followed the mandate of Congress in fixing the tax in the first instance, or as waiving any claim that he had in this respect acted outside the powers vested in him under the act, then, although he appears for some reason outside of what is termed a "mathematical formula" based on the statistics of the Agricultural Department, to have fixed a tax of 4.2 cents per pound, when the mathematical application of the statistics in the Agricultural Department would establisb the rate of the tax at 4.34 cents per pound, the error cannot be taken advantage of in this court.

If Congress has invaded a field over which it has no control under the Constitution, or the Secretary has been unlawfully vested with legislative powers, the exercise of which has affected these appellants, it is not necessary to consider whether the processing and floor taxes are direct taxes or, if excise taxes, are not uniformly laid.

The decree of the district court is reversed, and the case is remanded to that court with directions to enter a decree for the appellants.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, a few moments ago, when the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] was speaking, he implied that the amount of the tariff had nothing to do with the price of flax, or something of the kind. I desire to say that, in my opinion, the amount of the tariff has nothing to do with the price of paint, either. The price of paint for a number of years has been, it seems to me, unreasonably high compared with the price of flaxseed or the price of linseed oil, which goes into the paint.

I find from the 1935 yearbook, which has just come out, that the average price of flaxseed to the farmer in 1932–33 was 88.1 cents. The year preceding that, 1931–32, the average price was $1.16 per bushel; but the price of the best grades of paint using linseed oil has been consistently, I think, about $4 a gallon. I believe the N. R. A. code put up the price of the best grades a little higher than that.

In my opinion, however, the amount of the tariff has very little to do with the price of paint; and if we are going to protect flaxseed, we should also have a compensatory tax on the substitutes which come in here and take the place of flaxseed—perilla seed, hempseed, and things of that kind.

So I hope the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota will prevail, as we need protection for our linseed oil.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	King	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Copeland	La Follette	Reynolds
Austin	Costigan	Lewis	Robinson
Bachman	Davis	Logan	Russell
Bailey	Dickinson	Lonergan	Schall

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-three Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not ask for a record vote, but I should like to have a division.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have sent an amendment to the desk, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 38, following the amendment of Mr. SHIPSTEAD, just agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following:

No tax shall be imposed under section 15 (d) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, upon tung seed or their products, including tung oil.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not believe there is opposition to this amendment, but, since it may be thought that tung oil is competitive with linseed oil, it seems to me desirable to have the amendment included in the bill, because the production of tung oil is a new industry. The planting of tung trees, which commenced about 1923 in the States of Florida, Georgia, and around the Gulf coast of Texas, has now reached considerable proportions.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. My information is that the amendment is not objectionable. That is my opinion from the information I have as to the competitive qualities of tung oil. I can see no objection to the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask the Senator whether he specifies the amount of the tax?

Mr. GEORGE. I may say to the Senator from Oregon that the amendment would prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from putting a compensatory or equalizing tax on tung oil.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Senator. I thought this was to provide a compensatory tax, not specifying the amount.

Mr. GEORGE. No; it is to relieve this new domestic industry from the possibility of an equalizing tax.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to have the amendment again stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will again state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 38, following the amendment of Mr. SHIPSTEAD, just agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following:

No tax shall be imposed under section 15 (d) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, upon tung seed or their products, including tung oil.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] has offered an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 38, line 4, in the committee amendment it is proposed to strike out the words "flaxseed, or"; in lines 8 and 9, to strike out the words "in the case of flaxseed at the rate of 35 cents per bushel of 56 pounds"; and in line 13, to strike out the words "flaxseed and".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment may be briefly stated. In New Jersey there are a number of large linoleum manufacturers. There are also many paint manufacturers and many varnish manufacturers. Those manufacturers employ thousands of workers. If the committee amendment as it now stands should be enacted into law these companies would necessarily have to throw thousands of people out of employment. There is already a tariff of 65 cents a bushel on imported flaxseed and 4½ cents a pound on imported linseed oil.

Linseed oil is the drying oil used in the manufacture of linoleum; it is used in the manufacture of varnish and in the manufacture of paint. The tariff duty is 100 percent effective and, as a result, flaxseed generally sells for 65 cents a bushel higher in the United States than in the world markets, while linseed oil today sells from 8½ to 9 cents a pound in the American market, whereas in the European market it sells for 4 cents a pound.

Notwithstanding the high tariff, the domestic production of flaxseed, which has never been quite sufficient to supply half of our requirements in America, has dwindled during the last 5 years, so that it has become necessary to import nearly three-quarters of our requirements.

The proposed processing tax would, in effect, raise the protection to the domestic producer from 65 cents to $1 a bushel. It would mean a processing tax of 1½ cents a pound on linseed oil, increasing the price on the commodity by that amount. As linseed oil is the chief raw material used in the manufacture of linoleum and also in paints and in varnishes, it would virtually make it impossible for the domestic linoleum and paint industry to compete in the world market with the British and Netherlands manufacturers. It would place a burden of $5,000,000 annually on the consumers of drying oils in America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I have before me the Agricultural Year Book for 1935, which just has been issued, and I find that the average production of flaxseed per acre for the 10-year period from 1922 to 1931—that was before the drought—was 7.3 bushels per acre, and at the prices which ranged at that time the farmers were not getting cost of production for their flaxseed.

The average production declined during the years 1933 and 1934 because of the drought throughout a large part of the flaxseed-producing area. The average yield in 1933 was only 5.2 bushels per acre, and in 1934 it was 5.4 bushels per acre. The average price for flaxseed, according to the same Agricultural Year Book, in 1931–32 was 1.16\frac{6}{10}$ per bushel to the farmers, and the average price in 1932–33 was only 88.1 cents per bushel, in spite of the fact that there was a 65-cent duty on flaxseed. So the amount of the duty is not fully effective, and according to the Department of Agriculture, has not been at any time since the duty was put on.

As I previously stated, I am satified that the amount of the duty has little to do with the prices of paint or the prices of linoleum. They are regulated by the manufacturers, who apparently make a mighty good profit. The farmers are producing their product at a loss. The farmers are entitled to more protection. This bill, dealing with agriculture, is for the benefit of the farmers and not for the benefit of the manufacturers.

Mr. President, I trust that the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will not be agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will prevail. Here is an item, inserted in this bill without any hearing, without any notice, which affects a great industry, and which comes to them as a surprise. As I said a little while ago, undoubtedly it will serve to hamper legitimate enterprises now employing thousands of men and, as I view it, it is immoral and indecent to attempt to help an industry where there is no surplus, where there are natural reasons for the decline, as pointed out by the Secretary of Agriculture. So, all in all, I hope the amendment offered by the able Senator from New Jersey will be accepted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. NORBECK. I ask for a division.

Mr. NYE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. NYE. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS].

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—49

Adams	Copeland	Hatch	Reynolds

So Mr. MOORE's amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, to the committee amendment I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, on page 38, line 4, it is proposed to strike out "and in the case of barley at the rate of 25 cents per bushel of 48 pounds"; on page 38, line 13, to strike out "and barley"; and on page 38, at the end of section 12 (b) 5, to insert the following: "Amend section 6 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, by eliminating therefrom the word 'barley.'"

Mr. GUFFEY obtained the floor.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in the committee amendment barley is the only thing left, and I cannot see any need of this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senate should amend the amendment as the Senator from Pennsylvania suggests, there would not be anything left in the amendment.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, if it should be adopted, the effect of the proposed amendment would be to eliminate barley from the list of articles on which the Secretary of Agriculture may impose processing taxes. A very large portion of the barley crop is used for feed, which under the law would not in any event be subject to processing taxes. The bulk of the barley which would be subject to processing taxes under the bill is that used in the manufacture of beer, a product already so highly taxed that no additional tax should be placed on the raw material.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, it is true that a good deal of barley is used for feed, which would not come under this provision if it should go into effect. The bulk of the barley which would be affected is that which is used by brewers in the manufacture of beer. I do not know what is the price of a barrel of beer, but I talked with a man who said he had been connected with the operation of a brewery a few years ago and was very familiar with the prices and the amount of ingredients that went into the manufacture of a barrel of 31 gallons of beer. He said there were about 1 pound of hops, 5 pounds of barley, and a little yeast, the rest being water. Five pounds of barley, at the present price, would be less than 5 cents; the yeast, I presume, would be probably 1 or 2 cents; and I do not know how much hops are a pound, but not very much.

If the Senator from Pennsylvania is more interested in having reduced the cost of beer to the brewers than he is having a fair price afforded the farmers who produce the barley, his amendment is all right.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, does the Senator think if the price of barley were cut 5 cents that beer would be any cheaper?

Mr. FRAZIER. I doubt it. Certainly this little tax on barley which might raise the price to 50 or 60 cents a bushel would not affect the price of beer, because the cost of the 5 pounds of barley which go into the manufacture of a barrel of beer is infinitesimal as compared to the sale price of the beer; and, of course, when divided up into the glass or bottle it is so small as to be, if possible, less than infinitesimal.

I was greatly disappointed by the vote as to flaxseed. About a dozen States in the Union raise flaxseed. A majority of the Senate struck flaxseed out of the bill by almost a 2-to-1 vote in order to protect the manufacturers of linoleum and paints, to the detriment of the farmers who produce flaxseed in a dozen States of this Nation. That is all right, if that is the attitude the Senate wants to take; but, Mr. President, unless something shall be done to increase the prices of products raised by the American farmer so as to give him a price that will return him the cost of production for his product, not only the farmers will go broke but the remainder of the people along with the farmers will also go broke. So if the Senate wants the Nation, including the manufacturers of the raw materials of agriculture, to go broke, they may strike from the bill the agricultural products which we are trying to protect, barley among the rest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. FRAZIER asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. KING (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]. In his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] is unavoidably detained. If present, he would vote "yea." He has a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—40

So Mr. GUFFEY's amendment to the amendment, reported by the committee, was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted the committee amendment, inserting paragraph (G), on page 18, after line 20. This amendment was adopted by two votes. Many Senators, including myself, were absent at the time. The debate was extended, and I think there is no need for further discussion. I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 18, after line 20, was adopted. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The committee amendment, as adopted, inserts, on page 18, after line 20, the following:

"(G) Fixing, or providing methods for fixing, minimum prices at which any such commodity or product thereof, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, shall be sold by the first handler thereof: Provided, That no such minimum prices shall be fixed, unless not less than 50 percent of the volume of such commodity or product is sold by an association or associations of producers, or otherwise for the account of producers, and/or by producers who are also handlers.

Mr. WALSH. I renew my request for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—48

Adams	Coolidge	Hale	Overton
Ashurst	Copeland	Hastings	Radcliffe
Bachman	Davis	Hatch	Schall

So Mr. WALSH's motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee known as paragraph (G).

Mr. WALSH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the name of Mr. ADAMS.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I wish to remind the Senate of the fact that yesterday afternoon this question was debated at length. The vote upon it has now been reconsidered. All I desire to say about the matter is that those who are familiar with the bill know that this is the one attempt in the bill to give those who produce the raw material—the farmers—an opportunity, when they secure control of at least 50 percent of any given commodity which comes under the bill, to agree upon a minimum price for it.

All those who desire to deny the farmer the privilege, through the agency of the Government, of having something like an organization to offset the organizations from which he buys, may vote against the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH. I do.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that a roll call was ordered, and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] answered to his name.

Mr. SMITH. No; I was on my feet addressing the Chair before the roll call began.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk did not hear the response of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SMITH. But, in any event, the Senator from South Carolina was on his feet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I now desire to ask the Senator if this provision does not leave it to the handlers or distributors to fix the price.

Mr. SMITH. No. If the Senator will read the provision which is in italics, he will see just what it means.

Mr. GEORGE. I have it before me, Mr. President. It says:

Fixing, or providing methods for fixing, minimum prices at which any such commodity or product thereof, or any grade, size, or quality thereof, shall be sold by the first handler thereof—

That is the distributor selling to the consumer.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. It continues:

Provided, That no such minimum prices shall be fixed, unless not less than 50 percent of the volume of such commodity or product is sold by an association or associations of producers—

That is cooperatives, I presume—or otherwise for the account of producers, and/or by producers who are also handlers.

Mr. SMITH. All through the cooperation of the producers.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator explain to me what paragraph (F) means?

Mr. SMITH. Paragraph (F) means that the minimum resale price is there fixed for the handler. After the minimum price of the producer is fixed, that is the resale price.

Mr. GEORGE. That is what I am getting at; so that the amendment we are voting on deals with the resale price to the consumer?

Mr. SMITH. No. Paragraph (F) deals with the resale price, and the Senate added paragraph (G), printed in italics—that the producer, or his agent, or an association handling 50 percent of the volume of the commodity, shall fix the first minimum price to the producer. The first paragraph provides that the producers shall have a resale price, so that some outsiders may not come in and chisel in on them.

Mr. GEORGE. So the price to the handler would be fixed, and the price at which the handler or producer must offer the commodity to the public would also be fixed.

Mr. SMITH. The minimum price.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; the minimum price.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. For years Congress has been attempting to encourage cooperative marketing among farmers in order to give them an advantage which would offset their disadvantage through the organization of almost all others from whom they buy their necessities.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. We thought so well of that that we incorporated in the Clayton Act a provision that no such organization should be regarded as a violation of the antitrust law.

Mr. SMITH. Exactly.

Mr. BARKLEY. From time to time there have been organized all over the country farmers' cooperative marketing associations. We have had them in Kentucky affecting tobacco. There have been such organizations in Virginia and North Carolina. They have also been formed in other parts of the country with respect to different farm products in order that, by cooperation, the farmers might be able to sell their own products through such associations and have some voice in the fixing of the prices received by them.

If I understand the amendment, it simply sanctions and legalizes in this proposed act what Congress and the people for years have been attempting to do through the organization of farm cooperative marketing associations.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the reason why the cooperatives have heretofore failed has been because they never could get control of a sufficient amount of a given commodity to enable them to establish a price. This is an attempt, with the cooperation of the Government, to enable them to get control of at least 50 percent, and then let them agree upon what they think is a reasonable price.

Mr. NEELY and Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I should like to read a telegram which I have just received, and I should like to have the views of the chairman of the committee with regard to it. The telegram is from Parkersburg, W. Va., and is as follows:

> Fruit growers of our State threatened with domination by more powerful Western States if price-fixing section of A. A. A. becomes law. This section allows bureaucratic control of prices on perishable fruits, which will probably be ruinous instead of helpful to West Virginia growers.

Does the chairman of the committee believe there is any basis for the fear expressed in this telegram?

Mr. SMITH. I do not, for the reason I have just stated. This amendment largely affects the two parties to the first process, the producer, and the first handler. Under this provision the producers, having control of 50 percent of the produce, will name a minimum price. Then the minimum resale price will be agreed upon by those who sell.

In addition to that, the bill provides for regional processing and marketing so that, as in the case of citrus fruits, for example, as I explained, Florida is to itself and can agree upon what it pleases. A majority of the producers of citrus fruits will determine what they shall do or whether they shall do anything. The same is true of the Rio Grande region and of California. So that these regions will be enabled to protect themselves in their marketing agreements. The regions will be established according to the will of those who consider that they are in a homogeneous section.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for one more question, is it not a fact, then, that the fruit growers of West Virginia and those in the region of which they are a part would themselves determine the price in the first instance instead of the price being determined on the Pacific coast?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I cannot permit that statement to go unchallenged.

Mr. SMITH. I think the Senator has challenged nearly every statement the chairman of the committee has made.

Mr. BYRD. This colloquy sustains what I have been contending. The Senator from South Carolina has frequently said that no marketing agreement can be promulgated without the consent of the producer, when his own bill gives the power to 50 percent of the handlers to promulgate such agreements.

I wish to refer, however, to what the Senator from West Virginia has said. There is no requirement in the bill that the marketing agreements shall be regional. In the discretion of the Secretary they may be Nation-wide, if he chooses. Therefore, the question asked by the Senator from West Virginia is whether the fruit growers of the West could impose minimum prices on the fruit growers of the East.

Mr. SMITH. Can the Senator point out in the bill a provision under which the Secretary may disregard regional agreements and have a Nation-wide set-up to suit himself?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator point out a provision under which the Secretary of Agriculture is compelled to have regional agreements?

Mr. SMITH. I will read what is in the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Very well. From what page is the Senator about to read?

Mr. SMITH. Page 23. It reads:

> No order shall be issued under this section which is applicable to all production areas or marketing areas, or both, of any commodity or product thereof unless the Secretary finds that the issuance of several orders applicable to the respective regional production areas or regional marketing areas, or both, as the case may be, of the commodity or product would not effectively carry out the declared policy of this title.

Mr. BYRD. That is the very point I make, that regional agreements are not required; they are simply discretionary with the Secretary of Agriculture. What the Senator has read sustains exactly what I said.

Mr. SMITH. When he finds that in any particular case the regional set-up does not effectuate the purposes of the act.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator made the positive statement that marketing agreements could not be made except by regions. I submit to the Senator that he has made a mistake in making that statement, because the bill provides that they shall only be regional to effectuate the declared policy of the act, and if they do not effectuate the declared policy of the act, they may be Nation-wide.

Mr. SMITH. But the agreements will be regional after it is discovered that as to any one product or commodity the object of the measure, which is to get a better price for the farm products, cannot be more effectually carried out.

Mr. BYRD. But that is in the discretion of the Secretary.

Mr. SMITH. The discretion of the Secretary would be limited by the first part of this provision, which would still leave it within the hands of the producers to determine whether or not a regional set-up was more satisfactory to them than one covering the entire scope.

Mr. BYRD. I submit to any Member of the Senate who will read the section just read by the Senator that it is left in the hands of the Secretary.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to know definitely what commodities this price-fixing provision will cover.

Mr. SMITH. I will state to the Senator from Idaho that if he will turn to page 16, he will find that it covers the products named in subsection (6), and Senators are familiar with what was stricken out yesterday.

Mr. BORAH. Let us read it. There was a great deal of dispute yesterday about what it covered.

Mr. SMITH. As I recall, the bill will read:

In the case of fruits (including pecans and walnuts but not including apples and their products, tobacco and its products, vegetables, not including vegetables for canning) and their products.

"Soybeans", I understand, is still in the bill. "Hops" is out. Bees went out through Virginia. [Laughter.] "Poultry" is out.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, it covers fruits, not including apples——

Mr. SMITH. Yes; and not including fruits for canning.

Mr. BORAH. And tobacco and its products, vegetables and their products, and then it covers soybeans.

Mr. SMITH. And naval stores.

Mr. BORAH. That is all the price-fixing proposition would cover?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I understand that paragraph (F) of the House text is a part of the bill.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Assuming, for the sake of the argument, or for any other purpose, that paragraph (F) permits the handlers of certain of these commodities, if 50 percent of the total quantity of the commodity or product covered by such order is controlled, to fix a minimum price——

Mr. SMITH. For resale.

Mr. BARKLEY. For resale.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Assuming that to be true, and it is in the bill as it passed the House, and unless stricken out by the Senate will be in the bill as it is enacted, if paragraph (G) is not agreed to the result will be that the handlers of these products, if they control 50 percent, may fix a minimum price for resale, while the producers themselves will have no voice and no power in the fixing of the price at which they sell a given product to the handlers.

Mr. SMITH. That was the reason for the Senate committee amendment, to make it entirely clear. It was rather an implication that the Department would through its dealings with the farmers about marketing agreements take care of them in the first place; and the bill was so drawn as to leave it open to the criticism that there was being put into the hands of the handlers through the bill the power of fixing the price, proceeding upon the assumption that in the original text they would through the marketing agreements deal first with the farmers, and in these agreements the handlers were included. But the Senate, to make it perfectly clear, adopted this amendment. There is another place in the bill where a similar provision occurs, and an amendment will be offered to include that so as to make it conform in this text to what is provided in the original act.

Mr. BAILEY. Before the Senator takes his seat, may I ask him if my understanding is correct that we are creating a system of marketing areas within which one may sell and one may not sell?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no.

Mr. BAILEY. What is the object of the area?

Mr. SMITH. The object of the area is more conveniently to ascertain just what the opinion is, just as we did in connection with citrus fruits in California.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator mean that the opinion in such an area would govern?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; in such an area; but it would not keep anyone else from coming in.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well. There is another matter about which I have some trouble. Am I to understand that paragraph (G), which we are now considering, provides that an association or cooperative marketing organization having control of 50 percent of the volume of a commodity may determine the price at which the first handler shall sell it—not the price at which it sells it to the handler but the price at which the first handler shall sell it?

Mr. SMITH. No, Mr. President; that provision is contained in paragraph (F). Paragraph (G) fixes the price at which the producer shall sell it; and in paragraph (F), which precedes it, there is provision that the handlers handling 50 percent may determine the resale price.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from South Carolina on the amendment has expired.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question. If the bill does not fix the areas, or if they may not be fixed under its provisions, how is it that the price may be fixed within a given area, and how is it that a uniform price would not exist throughout the country?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, a uniform price does not now exist throughout the country.

Mr. GEORGE. I know; but I am asking why it would not exist if we should establish it by law.

Mr. SMITH. Then we shall merely be conforming to the regions where perhaps the prices now differ.

Mr. GEORGE. If the bill does not establish regions, how does it follow that there can be established a price which would be nonuniform throughout the country? If one should be permitted to ship freely from one region into another, how would he be affected by the price in the region into which he was shipping his product?

Mr. SMITH. Under the terms of the bill, if he ships into a certain region he will conform to the price in that region.

Mr. GEORGE. Then the bill does establish regions?

Mr. SMITH. It does establish regions and regional prices. I did not say it did not.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly. That is what I wanted the Senator to come to—that there cannot be a regional price without establishing regions.

Mr. SMITH. That is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 18, paragraph (G). On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ADAMS (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], who is detained from the Senate by committee duties. I therefore withhold my vote. If the Senator from Alabama were present, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If a Senator desires to vote to agree to the committee amendment, he should vote "yea", and if he desires to vote to reject the committee amendment he should vote "nay"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. MOORE (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], and therefore withhold my vote. If the Senator from Pennsylvania were present, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] are detained by a meeting of the Lobby Committee.

I also wish to announce the necessary absence from the Senate of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

I desire further to announce a general pair between the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]. I wish further to announce that the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] is paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. If present and voting, the Senator from Washington would vote "nay", and the Senator from Indiana would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—41

Austin	Frazier	Murphy	Sheppard
Bankhead	Gibson	Murray	Shipstead
Barkley	Harrison	Neely	Smith
Bilbo	Hayden	Norbeck	Thomas, Okla.

So the committee amendment on page 18, being paragraph (G), was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes, and that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 17, 67, 68, 83, and 84 to the bill.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8632) to amend an act entitled "An act to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River; to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama, and for other purposes", approved May 18, 1933, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. McSWAIN, Mr. HILL of Alabama, Mr. MONTET, Mr. McLEAN, and Mr. PLUMLEY were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the amendment which was just rejected by the Senate, as I understand, proposed the insertion in the bill of paragraph (G) on page 18.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. That being true, I ask the chairman of the committee whether he proposes to leave in the bill paragraph (F), to which paragraph (G) is a clarifying amendment and in the nature of a tie-in with paragraph (F)? If paragraph (G) goes out, certainly paragraph (F) ought to go out.

Mr. ROBINSON. Paragraph (F) is in the House text, and it is entirely independent of the amendment which was just voted on.

Mr. SMITH. Whatever action the Senate may take on paragraph (F) will come after the conclusion of the consideration of the committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not in order now to move to strike out section (F) except by unanimous consent. The next amendment which has been passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, after line 16, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 15. Section 9 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) There shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid (during any period after the date of the adoption of this amendment when a processing tax is in effect with respect to cotton) a processing tax on the first domestic processing of any material which results in the production of rayon or other synthetic yarn, at the rate of 125 percent of the per pound rate of the processing tax which is then in effect on cotton.

"(1) The tax shall be measured by the yield in pounds of finished rayon or other synthetic yarn.

"(2) The term 'first domestic processing of any material which results in the production of rayon or other synthetic yarn' means that amount and degree of manufacturing or other processing of such material from the spinnerette up to the point where the rayon or other synthetic yarn is in form either to be packaged and sold as such or to be used in further manufacturing or other processing.

"(3) The term 'rayon or other synethic yarn' means yarn suitable for commercial winding of a denier size exceeding 112 deniers. The term 'rayon yarn' shall not be deemed to include rayon ropes of more than 500 filaments.

"(4) The provisions of paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 16 shall not apply in the case of rayon or other synthetic yarn or the products thereof."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there has been considerable discussion both on and off the flood regarding this amendment, which relates to rayon. Of course, personally, I should like to see it eliminated entirely from the bill, because it is very apparent to those of us who are interested in the rayon industry that it will be very sadly crippled if this amendment shall be adopted.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the Chair state what is under consideration at the moment? There has been so much confusion it has been impossible to understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators will kindly refrain from conversation to enable the clerk once more to read the amendment, so that Senators may know what is before the Senate.

The Chief Clerk again stated the amendment, on page 45, after line 16, to insert section 15.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we have discussed various ways of dealing with this problem. I do not think anyone is disposed to hurt the cotton industry, if that can be avoided; but we are equally anxious in our section of the country that the rayon industry be not injured. It is our contention that rayon does not compete with cotton in price, and it is very doubtful if it competes in style or use. I think this is so well understood by those who have studied the question that we may well decide whether we are going to eliminate the committee amendment entirely or whether we are going to accept the amendment which has been worked out by the committee.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I wish to state to the Senator that I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute, of which I think the Senator will approve, and which would include silk as well as rayon. I wanted to ask the members of the committee if, after the reading of the amendment and an explanation of it, they will not agree to it and let it be voted on; and if it should be adopted, then, if the Senator from New York is opposed to the entire section, he may vote against the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. COPELAND. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from South Carolina for the purpose of presenting his amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. To the committee amendment, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In lieu of the amendment reported by the committee, on page 45, beginning on line 17, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 15. Section 9 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(g) There shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a processing tax, on the first domestic processing of any material which results in the production of rayon or other synthetic yarn suitable for commercial winding, at the rate of 5 cents per pound standard weight thereof.

"(1) The tax shall be measured by the yield in pounds of rayon or other synthetic yarn suitable for commercial winding.

"(2) The term 'first domestic processing of any material which results in the production of rayon or other synthetic yarn suitable for commercial winding' means that amount and degree of manufacturing or other processing of such material from the spinnerette up to the point where such yarn is in form either to be packaged and/or sold as such or to be used in further manufacturing.

"(3) Rayon and other synthetic fiber waste, staple fiber, ropes of more than 500 filaments, monofilaments, and the products thereof, shall be exempt from the processing tax imposed by subsection (g) of this section 9.

"(h) During any period after the date of the adoption of this amendment when a processing tax is in effect with respect to any material which results in the production of rayon or other synthetic yarn there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid:

"(1) Upon raw silk in which the sericin content exceeds 15 percent, imported into the United States or any possession thereof to which this title applies, from any foreign country or from any possession of the United States to which this title does not apply, a compensating tax at the rate of 10 cents per pound standard weight thereof;

"(2) Upon raw silk in which the sericin content is 15 percent or less, and upon silk advanced in manufacture to and including yarn, thread, and fabrics, imported into the United States or any possession thereof to which this title applies, from any foreign country or from any possession of the United States to which this title does not apply, a compensating tax at the rate of 12 cents per pound standard weight of silk (not including other textile fibers);

"(3) Upon wearing apparel and other manufactured products wholly or in chief value of silk, imported into the United States or any possession thereof to which this title applies, from any foreign country or from any possession of the United States to which this title does not apply, a compensating tax at the rate of 15 cents per pound standard weight of silk (not including other textile fibers);

"(4) Pierced cocoons, frisons, and other silk waste shall be exempt from any tax imposed by this section 9.

"(i) In lieu of the refunds or credits authorized to be made with respect to rayon or the products thereof and silk or the products thereof, under subsection (c) of section 15 and section 17 of this title, upon the delivery to any organization for charitable distribution or use, including any State or Federal welfare organization for its use, or upon the exportation to any foreign country and/or to the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, the Canal Zone, or the island of Guam, of any rayon or silk, or any product thereof, there shall be paid out of the amounts appropriated and made available by section 12 of this title, or there shall be credited, under rules and regulations to be made by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury, an amount of money (1) in the case of rayon, equivalent to the amount of tax which would be payable with respect thereto under subsection (g) of this section 9 and (2) in the case of silk, based upon the quantity of silk by standard weight contained therein multiplied by the applicable rate of tax specified in subsection (h) of this section 9.

"(j) General provisions:

"(1) The taxes imposed by subsections (g) and (h) of this section 9 shall be at the rates fixed therein and shall not be altered by the Secretary of Agriculture, regardless of the rate of the processing tax in effect on cotton. If at any time the processing tax on cotton is wholly terminated, or if for any reason the provisions of subsections (g), (h), or (j) of this section 9 are held invalid or become inoperative, the provisions of subsections (g) to (j), inclusive, of this section 9 shall thereupon simultaneously cease to be in effect.

"(2) The provisions of section 8, subsection (d) of section 15, and paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 16 of this title shall not apply in the case of rayon, or other synthetic yarn, or silk, or the products thereof.

"(3) The provisions of subsections (g), (h), (i), and (j) of this section 9 shall become effective at 12:01 a. m. eastern standard time of the day following the date of the adoption of this amendment.

"(4) For silk and products thereof the term 'standard weight' means the moisture-free weight plus 11-percent moisture regain thereon.

"(5) The term 'moisture-free weight' means the total weight (other than moisture) of dry clean fiber plus sericin, oil, sizing, and/or loading or weighting.

"(6) For rayon or other synthetic yarn the term 'standard weight' means the dry clean fiber weight plus 11-percent moisture regain thereon in the case of synthetic products of cellulose base, or the dry clean fiber weight plus 7.5-percent moisture regain in the case of synthetic products of cellulose ester base."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Is the amendment just read an amendment to the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is an amendment, in the form of a substitute, for the committee amendment on page 45, ending at line 20, on page 46.

Mr. BYRNES. It is an amendment, by way of a substitute, for the committee amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Then I understand the language proposed to be inserted by the committee is to be stricken entirely out of the bill and the language suggested by the Senator from South Carolina is to be inserted in the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator explain his amendment?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; I desire to do so.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I inquire if the Senator expects action upon the amendment at this time without any Senator having an opportunity to read or consider it?

Mr. BYRNES. The amendment was printed and is on the Senator's desk, and I assumed he had read it. I think I can explain it.

Under the existing law the Department has held hearings at the request of cotton manufacturers in order to determine whether rayon is a competitive commodity upon which the processing tax should be levied in accordance with the authority given to the Secretary of Agriculture. The act, however, provided that the competitive tax should be levied only when there was an excessive shifting of the purchasing power to the competitive commodity, in this instance to rayon. Because of the construction placed upon the words "excessive shifting", no tax was ever levied on rayon.

The cotton manufacturers have contended that they have been subjected to unfair competition because the processing tax necessarily increased the price of their commodity and they were forced to compete with rayon.

The position of the rayon manufacturers is, of course, that they would prefer not to have any processing tax levied upon their commodity, but if a tax is to be levied, they believe it should be levied in accordance with the provisions contained in the amendment which I have offered and not in accordance with the provisions of the committee amendment.

The amendment which I have offered has been prepared as a result of conferences between representatives of the rayon industry and representatives of the Department of Agriculture and of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I may not have heard the Senator correctly, but I understood him to say the amendment is satisfactory to the manufacturers of rayon. Virginia produces one-half of the rayon produced in the United States, and our manufacturers are bitterly opposed to it.

Mr. BYRNES. The last words I uttered before the Senator rose were that the position of the rayon industry, as I understand, is that they do not want any processing tax levied, but if a processing is to be levied, they prefer that it be levied in accordance with the provisions of the amendment which I have offered, instead of the amendment which was reported by the committee. I also stated that the amendment had been prepared as a result of conferences between representatives of the rayon industry and representatives of the Department of Agriculture and of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. BYRD. Has the Senator a copy of his amendment?

Mr. BYRNES. It was printed, and a copy of it should be on the desk of the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I inquire if this proposal was ever submitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. BYRNES. No. The amendment, with the change resulting from the conference referred to, was agreed upon only yesterday when I tendered the amendment and asked to have it printed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. Would the Senator care to state what particular individuals representing the rayon industry were present at the conference?

Mr. BYRNES. I shall be glad to state that. My information from the representatives of the Department is that Mr. Little, vice president of the Franklin Rayon Corporation, of Providence, R. I., who has been connected with the code authorities on this subject as well as retaining his position as vice president of the Franklin Rayon Corporation, and others were present, but that Mr. Little was the active participant in the discussions with reference to the amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Did he have authority to speak for the rayon manufacturers?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know, and, therefore, I cannot say that he did. I have no information that he represented himself as representing all and authorized to speak for all of the rayon producers.

Mr. WAGNER. Is it not a fact that the rayon industry generally is not satisfied with this particular proposal?

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator misunderstood me. What I said was that my information is that, if there is to be a tax, the rayon producers prefer the tax provided for in the amendment which I have tendered rather than the provisions contained in the amendment reported by the committee. I desire to explain the amendment which has been presented, and with the Senator's knowledge of the situation, he can then determine whether or not it is justified.

Mr. WAGNER. My knowledge is inferior to that of the Senator from South Carolina, but what I am trying to ascertain is who was able to speak for the industry with sufficient authority to say that this amendment would be acceptable generally to the rayon industry.

Mr. BYRNES. I again think the Senator misunderstood my statement because I would not go as far as that. I say that their position, as presented to me——

Mr. WAGNER. Whose position?

Mr. BYRNES. The position of the rayon producers as represented by Mr. Little and some other gentlemen interested in the industry, whose names I do not recall, is that they prefer the amendment which I have tendered rather than the committee amendment which is contained in the bill, and that is all. I would not go further.

Mr. WAGNER. Has the Senator any information as to the extent to which Mr. Little speaks for the industry?

Mr. BYRNES. No.

Mr. WAGNER. Or what percentage of the industry he speaks for?

Mr. BYRNES. No; I have said I do not know and I would not have anything I have said to be understood to mean anything more than I have actually stated as having been stated by him.

I desire to point out the differences between the committee amendment and the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator submit to an interruption?

Mr. BYRNES. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. I have frequently had occasion to call attention to the fact that nobody, as it seems to me, ever rises in the Senate and speaks for the consumer. I should like to inquire if there were any representatives of the consumers of these products at the conference, and why it should be assumed that the wearers of rayon and of silk would want to be taxed out of existence?

I am not speaking alone for the rayon industry. I am speaking for the poorer people who cannot wear silk, but who can buy rayon. It seems to me that unless they were represented at the conference referred to their interest was entirely ignored.

It is true that Virginia produces about one-half of the rayon manufactured in this country. In that State it has come to be a great industry, employing many thousands of people. But I am not speaking altogether for the rayon industry. I am concerned about the people who wear rayon. I do not think it should be so highly taxed as that it would be a burden upon them to buy it.

Mr. BYRNES. Let me say to the Senator from Virginia that, of course, I know he represents the consumers, as every other Senator on the floor represents consumers. I am not in position to answer whether any consumer of silk or rayon or cotton was present. I mentioned that matter solely because of the technical language used in the amendment, and I would not want it to carry any significance other than my words would justify as to the attitude of the rayon manufacturer who was participating in the framing of the amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me if I ask one further question?

Mr. BYRNES. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. If it is not expected to pass the bill this afternoon, would the Senator be willing to have his amendment go over until tomorrow, so that those of us who are interested in both the industry and the consumers may have an opportunity to make some inquiry about it?

Mr. BYRNES. I have no objection at all; but, of course, I say that subject to the approval of the Senator in charge of the bill. I should like, however, to proceed to point out the differences, because thus far I have not been able to get beyond the mere statement as to the preparation of the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator had better use his time.

Mr. BARBOUR and Mr. WAGNER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield first to the Senator from New Jersey, who first rose.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I am reluctant to interrupt the Senator. I realize that he has been interrupted a number of times; but in the early part of his remarks he made reference to the competition of rayon with cotton. Do I understand that in the Department of Agriculture, as a result of their investigations, it is contended by that Department that rayon competes in any direct sense with cotton? Because, as one who has been in the textile business a great many years before I resigned and came to the Senate, I assure the distinguished Senator from South Carolina that rayon actually competes with silk, and not with cotton.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the difficulty is that it is impossible to find a manufacturer of cotton in the United States of America who would agree with the Senator from New Jersey as to that.

Mr. BARBOUR. With all due respect, I say that that is not a correct statement.

Mr. BYRNES. The manufacturers of cotton have more than once appealed to the Department of Agriculture to levy a compensatory tax upon rayon because of the belief that rayon has competed with cotton and has done great injury to the cotton manufacturers.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I do not desire to pursue the subject too far; but I can assure the Senator that in many instances—and I know it is an unwitting mistake—the Senator's statement is not correct.

Mr. BYRNES. I know that there is a difference of opinion; that every man interested in rayon has contended that it does not compete with cotton, and that every manufacturer of cotton in South Carolina—and I think I know them all—takes the other view. If the Senator from New Jersey should undertake to convince them that rayon does not compete with cotton, he would have a splendid time for the rest of his natural life in that endeavor; and I assume that the rayon manufacturers are just as strong in their position. That matter has been discussed in the Department, and they have had hearings consuming days. Lawyers have represented the rayon interests; the cotton manufacturers have appeared; and they became dissatisfied because the tax was not levied, and attribute much of their trouble to the failure of the Department to levy it.

Mr. BARBOUR. As I have said, Mr. President, I do not want to pursue this question too persistently; so let me conclude, if I may, by saying that I am correct to this extent: The company with which I was connected for 25 years before I came to the Senate uses a great deal of cotton and it uses no rayon and uses no silk. We know, from experience in our own case, that rayon competes with silk and not with cotton, except in a very remote, theoretical degree. I will admit, however, in the final sense, so to speak, it can be said that all textiles compete with one another.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, rayon competes with cotton only in the same sense that cotton competes with any wearing textile.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is what I say; in a remote or theoretical sense it can, of course, be said that any textile may be considered as competing with any other textile. But in the sense that I take it, we are all viewing competition in this whole general connection; rayon certainly competes with silk and not in the same sense at all with cotton.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I desire to ask the Senator a question which may somewhat clarify the situation. It is true, is it not, that under the present law the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has power to impose a compensatory tax in the event it is satisfied that there is competition existing between the basic commodity and the other commodity, namely, rayon?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I prefaced my remarks by making the statement, first, that that was the existing law, and that the compensatory tax could be levied only where it could be proved to the satisfaction of the administrator that there was an excessive shifting of the purchasing power to the other commodity.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. As I understand, there is a time limit on speeches, and my 15 minutes is liable to be exhausted in answering the questions of Senators, without my ever being able to explain the difference between these amendments.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator may have my time.

Mr. BYRNES. The committee amendment provides for a tax upon rayon, but by its terms it limits that tax to what, for lack of a better word, I call the "lower grades" of rayon. The rayon producers believe this would be difficult for them to handle, because it would cause some of the grades of rayon now selling cheaply, by reason of the processing tax, to demand a higher price than the finer grades of rayon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from South Carolina on the amendment has expired.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to speak on the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that I intended to give him my time in which to answer.

Mr. BYRNES. I thank the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. While I am on my feet I should like to say that I think the wise thing for those of us whose constituents are interested in the rayon business is to accept this amendment. Then we can fight out the matter on the general question of whether or not we are going to have anything on the subject in the bill. So I am sympathetic with what the Senator is trying to do.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desired to submit that suggestion to the Senate later; but at this time I wish to proceed with my remarks.

The rayon producers, very wisely, in my opinion, have considered that it would be difficult to adjust their business to the provisions of this measure; and what they would prefer is to have a flat rate, such as is provided in the amendment, because it would be easy for the manufacturers to adjust their business to the flat rate.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. I am sorry I cannot yield. My time was exhausted on the amendment, and I now have no time except upon the bill.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator has 30 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BYRNES. The rayon producers state that unless there is a tax levied upon silk they would be injured, and I agree with them; and, because I agree with them, my amendment provides for a tax upon silk which would be equivalent to the tax which is levied upon rayon, and, so far as the rayon producers are concerned, would preserve their status as to competition with silk. They further state that imposing the tax as provided in the amendment, amounting to 125 percent above the rate upon cotton, would create uncertainty in the business; that the consumer of rayon goods would hesitate to purchase at this time, believing that 6 months or 3 months later there might be a reduction of the processing tax upon cotton, and, as a result, a reduction in the processing tax upon rayon; that it would have a tendency to cause small purchases, hand-to-mouth buying, and thereby injure their business. They believe that the levy of the flat rate provided in this amendment—not based upon any fluctuating tax upon cotton—would protect their interests so long as the same character of tax is levied upon silk, their chief competitor.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. So this amendment seeks to accomplish that objective. In doing so, necessarily the so-called "experts" upon these matters have had to include many technical phrases. The phrases which are contained in the amendment are the trade language and the trade definitions. I should like to explain some of them.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, in my time, just for a question?

Mr. BYRNES. Very well. Then I will yield to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BYRNES. I do.

Mr. BARBOUR. The Senator spoke about including silk within the purview of this amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. It is included.

Mr. BARBOUR. The Senator included it because he felt it was fair in respect to what he wishes to do in connection with rayon?

Mr. BYRNES. I think so.

Mr. BARBOUR. Was anybody in the silk industry consulted?

Mr. BYRNES. No. I think I was unfortunate in making the statement that as to these technical phrases the experts of the Department permitted a representative of the rayon industry to discuss with them these trade definitions, because my language has been construed as referring to a conference to which consumers should have been invited, and to which all manner of competitors should have been invited. I regret greatly that I mentioned it. I mentioned it only to explain the presence in the amendment offered by me of technical phrases, with which I knew Senators would know I was not familiar and could not possibly be familiar.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, assuming that I am consuming my own time, and not that of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, I simply desire to make clear to the Senate that so far as I know—and I think I speak for one of the largest silk-producing centers and States in the United States—no one had any knowledge at all that this amendment was going to be forthcoming, except, as the Senator says, that it has been printed and was on the desks of Senators for the first time this morning. I do not know how many Senators saw it. I certainly did not.

Mr. BYRNES. I cannot say of my own knowledge that anyone engaged in the business knew this; but I do say that I am informed that those who are chiefly interested in the matter, the Japanese interests, have been better advised, then, than have Members of the Senate, because they have been advised; they have discussed it with officials of the Department, and have been exceedingly active in that connection.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am not speaking in terms of the interests of the Japanese. I am speaking in terms of the interests of the American manufacturers.

Mr. BYRNES. I am saying that I know the Japanese interests have been advised of it, and I know that on the floor of the Senate I have heard it said for several days that in case rayon should be included in the processing-tax section, silk should be included, and I believe it should be.

Mr. BARBOUR. The Senator and the Japanese may agree, but I do not.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from New Jersey is not going to agree with me in any respect about anything connected with this amendment, and I will announce that understanding now. [Laughter.] Just on that line, I am handed an amendment which has been pending for many days, presented by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], which proposes to include silk; and I think there is one other amendment here which proposes to include silk.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in my own time, may I ask a question of the Senator?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from South Carolina stated that the representatives of the rayon industry——

Mr. BYRNES. I said one representative, and some other gentlemen I did not know.

Mr. BYRD. One representative had agreed to this amendment, providing that if any taxation is placed upon rayon——

Mr. BYRNES. No, Mr. President; I corrected the Senator before.

Mr. BYRD. In other words, they prefer this amendment to the one in the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. That is what I have said.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this is a very complicated amendment. It so happens that Virginia produces one-half of the rayon produced in America. We have five large plants. The manufacturers of my State have not advised me that they are willing to accept this amendment in the event that any tax is imposed as provided by the bill. I desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina if it would not be agreeable to defer the presentation of the amendment until I may consult the manufacturers of my State.

Mr. BYRNES. I have already stated to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] that it will be entirely satisfactory to me to do that, provided the chairman of the committee, in charge of the bill, has no objection. It is satisfactory to me.

Mr. BYRD. How much time, then, shall I have?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Virginia knows that as well as I do, because I have not consulted the Senator in charge of the bill. I am occupying the floor. If the Senator consults him, I am satisfied to have that course taken.

Mr. BYRD. I simply wish to confirm what the Senator has said as to the amendment meeting with the approval of the manufacturers of Virginia.

Mr. BYRNES. I repeat, I have not made that statement, and I would not want the Senator to be under that impression. The only statement made to me was that the representatives of the rayon industry who were in conference said that they would much prefer this amendment, which levies a tax upon silk at a flat rate, to the language of the bill.

Mr. BYRD. That was only one representative?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. There is no intention on the part of the Senator to press for immediate consideration?

Mr. BYRNES. I have said that I do not intend to do so, and it will be entirely satisfactory to me to let the amendment go over.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in my time?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield; I am collecting a lot of time.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator can have my time, because I want to have this matter made perfectly clear.

The Senator is asking us now to accept an amendment imposing a tax upon an industry which represents an investment of $250,000,000, at least, and employs about 200,000 men, without giving that industry, before the committee originally or since, except as to one representative, a chance even to be heard upon the imposition of the tax. I think that is an extraordinary situation. I have never known such a one to exist before in this body.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, that is a most extraordinary statement of the Senator; evidently he has not been following the subject. The question of a tax upon rayon was heard before the committee. It was presented in the committee report, in any event.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from South Carolina, and the Senator from Alabama conceded to me upon the floor that the rayon industry had not been heard before the committee, and that this amendment was agreed to by the committee without giving that large industry even a chance to be heard as to whether the tax proposed was just or unjust.

Mr. BYRNES. If that be the fact, then my statement was erroneous.

Mr. WAGNER. I have followed the matter closer than the Senator thought.

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator will permit me, I will show him to what I had reference. I am not a member of the committee, and I assumed there had been some hearing and some consideration. But I think a most extraordinary attitude is taken by those who say they are interested in the rayon industry, when they have before them a bill which provides for a tax upon rayon and no tax upon silk, which is the committee amendment, a tax upon rayon which is unsatisfactory to the rayon producers.

The amendment I have offered is a substitute for the committee amendment, and provides for a tax upon rayon, a tax which has been prepared carefully, and which is more satisfactory, I know, to anyone who has studied the question, than is the tax upon rayon proposed by the bill. In addition, with the tax upon silk, it certainly is more acceptable to the rayon producer.

If it were adopted, then the question would come upon the adoption of the committee amendment as amended, and the Senator from New York and any other Senator who feels as he does about it, if not satisfied with the tax upon rayon in connection with the tax upon silk, would have an opportunity to vote against that, with the knowledge that if he lost he would at least have the protection granted by the tax upon silk. If this amendment is not adopted and he votes upon the adoption of the committee amendment without the tax upon silk and loses, then he has no compensatory tax for the competitor who he says is a cheap competitor, the silk manufacturer.

I think it ought to be clear that anyone who is interested in rayon producers, when confronted with the choice of having to vote for the committee amendment without any tax on silk, or my substitute, ought to vote for the substitute, which seeks to protect them. They should vote for this amendment, and then, on the next vote, which will be on the adoption of the committee amendment, they can vote against the entire proposal if they see fit to do so.

Mr. President, I do not wish to consume any more time in detailed explanation of the amendment. Because it is indicated that a number of Senators desire that this amendment go over, instead of consuming the time, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a statement that I have which will give a detailed explanation of the various sections of the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Is the compensatory tax on rayon, proposed in what I will call the Senator's amendment, the same as the tax on rayon carried in the bill? I am disregarding the compensatory tax on silk for the moment.

Mr. BYRNES. No. The tax on rayon in the bill—

Mr. WHITE. Is 125 percent of the cotton tax?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; and is objected to by the rayon manufacturers for the reason that it is levied only on some grades, which would disturb their entire price structure, and for the further reason that it is based upon 125 percent of the tax levied upon cotton. They fear that if that were adopted there would be uncertainty in the trade as to what the tax would be, and purchasers would withhold purchases from month to month, hoping that there would be a reduction in the processing tax upon cotton, which would be followed by a reduction in the processing tax upon rayon. They believe that with the certainty of a rate which is the equivalent of the tax now levied upon cotton, and with the knowledge that it will continue so long as there is a tax levied upon cotton, it would be advantageous to their industry.

No one interested in the cotton manufacturing industry desires to hurt the rayon manufacturers, and it is only because I believe it is fair to them, because I am convinced that it is a wise thing to do, that I am offering the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. Let me see if I understand it. The Senator's contention is that the compensatory tax proposed in the committee amendment is an uncertain amount, while the tax proposed by him in the amendment we are now considering is of a definite amount?

Mr. BYRNES. That is exactly the point, and because it is of a definite amount it would be of great advantage to those engaged in the industry, in addition to the further fact I have mentioned, that in the committee amendment the tax is levied only upon certain grades, and the processing tax is levied upon those grades, which necessarily will increase the price, so that they will have to sell for a higher price than grades now selling in the market in excess of those lower grades. That was the other point.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to give me some information?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Under the law as it is now, if there is any commodity which is a competitor with a basic commodity, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has the right and the power to impose a compensatory tax.

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct, and, as I have said, the position of the cotton industry is that because the requirement is that the proof shall show an excessive shift, the department has been overcautious, because it involves the levying of a tax, and in its interpretation of the word "excessive" it has refrained from levying a tax, even though those charged with the decision were of the opinion that the competition was such as to justify the levying of a tax.

Mr. WAGNER. But compensatory taxes have been levied upon other commodities, have they not, when the Department of Agriculture or the Administration have discovered that there is a competitive condition?

Mr. BYRNES. I know of one instance.

Mr. WAGNER. Why is it that in this case cotton is picked out to be treated in a method different from that applied to every other basic commodity under the Adjustment Act?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know as to what other commodities there have been hearings and where the question has been raised. In respect to that I know only what I have heretofore stated; that the cotton industry of New England and of the South, according to every manufacturer from whom I have heard during the last year, has contended in the hearings that, because of the interpretation placed upon the word "excessive" in connection with the shifting, the tax has not been levied; and that rayon, certainly of the lower grades, has been doing great injury and great harm to the cotton industry. I know that is a most controversial point; there is no question about it being so.

The purpose of my amendment, and what I hope to do, is to perfect the committee amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. I rather take the view of the Senator from Virginia that if there is no justification under the A. A. A. for imposing this tax, we are simply adding a burden on the consumers of the country.

Does it not amount to this, that we are asked to impose this compensatory tax because the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has refused to impose a tax, after a hearing lasting a year, where all of the facts were presented? Indeed, without any knowledge of the subject, without any hearing before a committee, we are asked to substitute our judgment, blindfolded, as it were, because we cannot know the subject, for the judgment of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and impose this tax.

I think we ought to stand by the law as it now is. Then if, after a proper hearing, where all the facts are presented to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, they are satisfied that there is a competitive condition which requires a compensatory tax, then it ought to be imposed; but I do not think we ought to be asked to act blindly in this way and impose a tax upon the consumers of the country when there may not be any justification for it.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not think it could be said that we would be acting blindly. I think the Senator knows just as well as I do that rayon is a competitor of the finer grades of cotton goods.

Mr. WAGNER. No; I have been examining the records and the statistics, and I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. BYRNES. Then the Senator and I cannot agree on that point. All the evidence which has been presented to me by the manufacturers of cotton is to the contrary. They may be wrong. I have been convinced, however, that they are right; and, therefore, I do not think that by reason of the attitude of the Department and its interpretation of the burden of proof which is required in order to establish excessive shifting the cotton manufacturer should be denied the relief which would be granted by levying an equivalent tax on rayon.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a short statement in explanation of the pending amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

DISCUSSION OF PROPOSED SECTION 15 OF H. R. 8492, AMENDING SECTION 9 OF THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT, AS AMENDED

The significant differences are as follows: The amendment as reported out by the Senate committee imposed a tax on rayon at the rate of 125 percent of the cotton-processing tax rate which at present would be 5.25 cents per pound. The difference between a rate of 5.25 cents per pound on rayon and the rate of 4.2 cents per pound net weight of cotton is an allowance for waste occurring in the production of cotton yarn. In other words, a rate of 5.25 cents per pound on rayon yarn is essentially the same as the amount of tax paid on the amount of raw cotton required in the manufacture of a pound of cotton yarn of the type most nearly comparable to rayon yarn. In this amendment the rate of tax on rayon is rounded to 5 cents per pound and is not to be altered on the basis of variations in the cotton-processing tax rate.

In both drafts of subsection (g) the rayon tax was to be measured by the yield in pounds of rayon or other synthetic yarn suitable for commercial winding. By the Senate committee draft, however, the tax would be confined to the coarser rayon yarns, and the finer rayon yarns would be exempted from the tax. The coarser rayon yarns as defined in the Senate committee draft would include about two-thirds to three-fourths of all the rayon yarn produced, and would include those sizes of rayon yarns which may be considered as being most highly competitive with cotton, although there is no definite line of demarcation between that rayon which is competitive with cotton and that which is competitive with silk. The amendment would tax all rayon yarns. If silk is to be taxed, obviously all sizes of rayon yarns should be taxed.

Paragraph 3, subsection (g), of the attached proposed draft of section 15 lists the synthetic products and byproducts which would not be subject to the processing tax on rayon. Rayon and other synthetic fiber waste would include waste occurring in the production of rayon and in the production of rayon products. Staple fiber is rayon filaments which have been cut up into uniform lengths, usually less than 2 inches, and is used in manufacturing spun rayon, which in turn is used largely in conjunction with or in substitution for woolen and worsted yarns. Ropes are the filaments from which staple fiber is produced. Monofilaments include such products as artificial horsehair and artificial straw, which are used in the millinery trade and which apparently do not compete with cotton.

Subsection (h) of section 15 would impose an import tax on silk and silk products to compensate for the tax on rayon. The proposed rate of tax on raw silk with sericin content or gum content in excess of 15 percent is 10 cents per pound. This is twice the rate on rayon and takes into consideration the fact that a pound of silk will go farther than a pound of rayon in producing cloth and textile articles. For example, a hundred yards of a given rayon fabric might weigh 20 pounds, whereas a competing silk fabric, before being degummed, loaded, or weighted with tin, might only weigh 10 pounds per 100 yards.

On raw silk with a sericin or gum content or 15 percent or less, and upon thread yarns and fabrics the proposed rate of tax is 12 cents per pound, standard weight of silk. Nearly all of the raw silk coming into the United States has a sericin or gum content in excess of 15 percent. A higher rate of tax on silk having a sericin content of 15 percent or less would tend to prevent removal of part of the sericin before importation as a means of minimizing tax payments. By fixing the rate of tax on yarns, threads, and fabrics as provided in the amendment it would be possible to eliminate most of the complexities and uncertainties that would be met in formulating regulations and conversion factors for silk products. In manufacturing silk the gum content is removed and loading or weighting is added. The amount of this loading or weighting may vary from a negligible percentage up to 100 or 150 percent of the original weight of raw silk. Figures are not available as to the average amount of weighting, but in the case of silk products imported from Japan it is said to be low. Since the average gum content is around 20 percent, the removal of all the gum and the failure to add any weighting or loading would make necessary a compensatory tax from this factor of 12.5 cents per pound on fabric in order to fully compensate 10 cents per pound on raw silk. In addition there is some loss in manufacture up to the cloth stage. The proposed rate of 12 cents per pound on yarns, threads, and fabrics would be slightly low for such products if they contain little or no weighting. In the case of heavily loaded fabrics, however, a tax at the rate of 12 cents per pound would be somewhat greater than the amount of tax that would be paid on raw silk required in their manufacture. While there would be some slight inequities, it appears that a rate of 12 cents per pound would be a reasonable average.

Because of cutting losses in manufacturing garments and other fabricated products a compensating rate of tax at the rate of 15 cents per pound is suggested for these products.

By making a compensating tax on silk and silk products apply at the time of importation rather than at the time of the first domestic processing, the collection of the tax would be greatly simplified.

No tax will be imposed under subsection (h) on silk waste defined in paragraph 4 as pierced cocoons, frisons, and other silk waste. Pierced cocoons are damaged, unwindable cocoons, which are considered as waste. Frisons are brushings or tangled, unwindable silk filaments, considered as waste.

Subsection (i) specifies the rates at which refund payments would be made on silk and silk products exported from the United States or delivered to an organization for charitable distribution or use. These payments would be made on any such articles exported or delivered to organizations for charitable distribution or use after the effective date of this amendment, even though a compensatory import tax had not been paid thereon. This would avoid the confusion which would be involved in determining at the time of exportation or delivery to such an organization whether a tax had been actually paid with respect to a particular product. In the absence of the provisions of subsection (i), it would be several months after the effective date of the compensatory import tax on silk before all or the major part of the silk products exported or delivered to a charitable organization would be subject to refund payments. During this long period of adjustment some articles would be subject to refund payments and others would not. The rates of refund payments provided for in subsection (i) are the same as the rates of compensatory import taxes imposed by subsection (h).

The proposed subsection (j) contains general provisions that are consistent with the compensatory tax aspects of the proposed amendment.

The most important of these general provisions are as follows:

It is provided that no adjustment be made in the rates of tax on rayon and silk and silk products irrespective of any changes that may be made in the rate of tax on cotton except that when the cotton tax is wholly terminated the taxes on rayon and silk will terminate also.

It is also provided that in the event that the tax on either rayon or silk or the general provisions of subsection (j) become inoperative the taxes on both rayon and silk and silk products will cease simultaneously.

The general provisions contain definitions applicable to the weight of rayon and silk which are in conformity with trade practice and would therefore appear to be beneficial in the administration of the proposed taxes.

In connection with the definition of standard weight of rayon it might be noted that the synthetic products of cellulose base are those which are produced by the viscose and the cuprammonium processes of rayon manufacture. Synthetic products of a cellulose ester base are those made by the cellulose acetate process of rayon manufacture.

The proposed amendments appear to be satisfactory as compensatory tax provisions applicable to rayon and silk. The benefits of simplicity obtained by fixing the rates of tax on semimanufactured and manufactured silk products should greatly outweigh the benefits of more precise equivalents that could be arrived at only through cumbersome and complex conversion factors. In this connection it should be kept in mind that for commodities of high value, such as silk and its products, variations of a fraction of a cent in the rate of tax would have little importance from the standpoint of protecting cotton or rayon or influencing the course of trade in silk products. Therefore, it is highly desirable that impractical refinements be eliminated for the sake of simplicity and certainty.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I am indebted to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] for agreeing to let this particular amendment go over. The more I have heard him speak on the subject the more nonplused I have become. Of course, South Carolina is a great cotton-manufacturing State. Virginia also is to some extent. I think we have in Virginia the largest cotton mill in the world.

It was not my purpose to imply that the Senator from South Carolina had not very clearly stated the case from his point of view; but what puzzles me is that I have not heard from a single cotton mill in Virginia, and, as I said, I think we have in Virginia the largest cotton mill in the world. I have not received from them a single communication on this subject. There has been no complaint whatsoever that rayon is in competition with their product; and if such competition is so clearly established, it seems almost incredible that the Virginia cotton mills should not have communicated with either one of the Virginia Senators about a problem which so greatly interests them.

For that reason I am obliged to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] for letting the amendment go over until we may make some inquiry about it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, of course, the bill came to us from the House. In the Senate committee we had no communication from the Department on this subject, and, so far as I know, the House had no communication from the Department. However, prior to the time the bill came over from the House there was complaint as to the encroachments of certain rayon manufactured goods upon the marketing of certain cotton goods. When the parties interested—namely, the cotton manufacturers—made that complaint, it was suggested to them that they prepare an amendment which in their opinion would meet the situation. They did so, and that was the one which was presented to the committee and was adopted by the committee. To what actual extent articles composed of rayon affect the cotton market I have no way of knowing, except through the complaint of the cotton manufacturers.

When the amendment was adopted by the Senate committee and the bill was reported to the Senate, certain of those interested in rayon appeared; and, as the result seems to be, they, in conjunction with certain cotton manufacturers, have prepared the substitute amendment which my colleague has here presented.

There is language in the original text of the bill which I desire to call to the attention of the Senate. It has been referred to; but, after reading it, I cannot understand why the Department of Agriculture has not availed itself of the complaints of the cotton manufacturers and ascertained what are the facts.

I desire to read the provision to which I refer. It is found on page 21 of the compilation of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, as of June 29, 1934. It reads as follows:

> The Secretary of Agriculture shall ascertain from time to time whether the payment of the processing tax upon any basic agricultural commodity is causing, or will cause, to the processors thereof disadvantages in competition from competing commodities by reason of excessive shifts in consumption between such commodities or products thereof. If the Secretary of Agriculture finds, after investigation and due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties, that such disadvantages in competition exist, or will exist, he shall proclaim such finding. The Secretary shall specify in this proclamation the competing commodity and the compensating rate of tax on the processing thereof necessary to prevent such disadvantages in competition.

As I see it, that is an ample provision, and under it if there is a question as to competition existing to the disadvantage of the taxed article, or it is likely to exist to the disadtage of the taxed article, then, after due hearing and the ascertainment of the facts, if the Secretary finds that this menace exists, or is likely to exist, he shall put a compensating tax on the competing article to the point where the disadvantage will disappear.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true that the Department of Agriculture has held hearings in accordance with the provisions of this act, and has certified that there is no competition in this instance, and has refused to impose the tax provided for in the amendment?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I think the real fact is that the relation to cotton of rayon and rayon yarns and the commodities into which they are converted is so complex, and there are so many uses to which the rayon and rayon yarns are put, that I do not think it really could be decided definitely whether they were invading the domain of cotton or whether they were competing with silk.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Department acted in this matter? I have not been advised, and I ask the Senator whether he has been advised on that point?

Mr. SMITH. The Department has not acted in this matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. They were instructed to act in the matter, and undoubtedly they held hearings; and if they have not acted, it seems to me the present law is complete in that behalf; so I see no reason for an amendment of any kind.

Mr. SMITH. As I stated, the cotton interests have complained, and complained bitterly.

Mr. McKELLAR. They had a forum to which they could go. They have gone before the Department of Agriculture, and evidently the Department of Agriculture has not sustained them. After leaving it to the hearing and decision of the Department of Agriculture, and the Department not having imposed the tax, why, in that situation, should the Congress step in and impose a tax, anyway?

Mr. SMITH. There is an implication in the complaint of the cotton manufacturers that they have not been fairly dealt with by the Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was there testimony to that effect before the Senate committee?

Mr. SMITH. The committee did not hold a hearing on this matter. The committee members have received communications upon the subject, as have, perhaps, the Senator from Tennessee and other Senators. The complaint has continued for more than a year.

Just to what extent the Department of Agriculture went into the matter, and to what extent they thought the complaint was justified or not justified, I am not in a position to state. However, I was amazed when the cotton manufacturers said that nothing had been done, when they complained so bitterly about the competition and brought to my attention certain articles and compared those which were made out of cotton with those which were made out of rayon, and showed how the price of rayon was now under the selling price of cotton with respect to articles used for the same purpose, being certain articles of clothing and underclothing. They said: "We pay a tax, and by reason of that tax we are excluded from the market which has been entered by rayon, which does not pay a tax." I asked if they had applied for a compensatory tax, and they said they had.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I may say, as the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] said a few minutes ago, that there are a great many cotton mills in my State, and I have not received a communication from a single cotton mill complaining that they were being discriminated against in this matter. On the other hand, there are a number of rayon mills in my State, and they are complaining very greatly because of the proposed tax, for they say they are not in competition with cotton, but are in competition with silk.

Mr. SMITH. Personally I have had quite a number of complaints from cotton mills located not only in my State but in other States that the competition is very severe. One manufacturer, I remember, came in and showed me the articles to which I have just referred.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to the further fact as to cotton linters, which is, of course, a form of cotton, and quite a valuable form, as it now turns out, that 15 percent of all the cotton linters, or about 75,000,000 pounds, is used every year in the manufacture of rayon.

That largely has brought about the increased price of linters from about one-half cent a pound to something like 5½ cents a pound. In other words, as it seems to me from the standpoint of the cotton grower, to take away this market for linters might work a very great hardship on the producer of cotton. I hope it will not.

I have made a study of the matter in the last few days, and I believe there is no great degree of competition between cotton and rayon. I expect to vote against the amendment, but if we cannot get that much, manifestly the next best thing is to accept the amendment of the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] or something along that line, because in the absence of striking out the committee amendment the next best position for the rayon manufacturers is to accept that amendment with a compensating tax.

Mr. SMITH. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the use of linters in rayon is of no benefit to the cotton producer at all. That is the short fiber taken off the seed after the farmer has had his lint taken off. When he sells his seed and they are delinted by the oil mills, that is something which goes to the benefit of the mills and not to the benefit of the farmer.

Mr. McKELLAR. I regret to have to differ in any form with such high authority on cotton as is the Senator from South Carolina, but in my section of the country the cash crop of the colored people is the seed cotton. The increased price of linters has largely influenced the increased price of cottonseed. Just 2 or 3 years ago cottonseed sold on the market for something like $11 a ton. Today it is selling for more than $40 a ton. It seems to me we ought not to do anything to destroy or to endanger the market for linters and for cottonseed, which is of very great importance to our section of the country, as the Senator knows.

Mr. SMITH. The price of the seed resulted from the extremely low production of cotton. Only 9,000,000 bales were produced, as against 15,000,000 bales previously.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is one of the factors.

Mr. SMITH. Some of the seed buyers will deduct from the seed in proportion as they seem not to be closely ginned, for the reason that they say they have to go through a double ginning on a very fine machine which takes the lint from the seed. In any event, I have never known the seed to be influenced in the slightest degree by the linters that are on them, because the quantity of linters depends upon whether or not the breast of the gin is open or shut. Some gins gin very closely and others gin not so closely, but the price of the seed has nothing to do with the amount of linters on the seed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Under the old philosophy that "the proof of the pudding is in the eating" we know that linters have gone up in price with seed. Cottonseed has increased more than four times and linters have increased a little more than that. They go up and down together.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from South Carolina on the amendment has expired.

SOCIAL SECURITY—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HARRISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment-compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 18, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 61, 65, 70, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 86, 90, 92, 105, and 108.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 9, 16, 20, 21, 28, 39, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 60, 62, 63, 64, 66, 69, 71, 72, 82, 88, 89, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 102, 103, and 109, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: " : Provided, That the State plan, in order to be approved by the Board, need not provide for financial participation before July 1, 1937 by the State, in the case of any State which the Board, upon application by the State and after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State, finds is prevented by its Constitution from providing such financial participation"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "or such other agencies as the Board may approve"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 8 of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out line 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "welfare services (hereinafter in this section referred to as 'child-welfare services') for the protection and care of homeless, dependent, and neglected children, and children in danger of becoming delinquent" and a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax interest (except in the case of adjustments made in accordance with the provisions of sections 802 (b) and 805) at the rate of one-half of 1 per centum per month from the date the tax became due until paid"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "together with a statement of the additional expenditures in the District of Columbia and elsewhere incurred by the Post Office Department in performing the duties imposed upon said Department by this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to advance from time to time to the credit of the Post Office Department from appropriations made for the collection of the taxes imposed by this title, such sums as may be required for such additional expenditures incurred by the Post Office Department"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 85: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following "EIGHT"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "or such other agencies as the Board may approve"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "eight"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 99: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"APPROPRIATION

"SECTION 1001. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance, as far as practicable under the condition in such State, to needy individuals who are blind, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $3,000,000, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Social Security Board, State plans for aid to the blind."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 100: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"STATE PLANS FOR AID TO THE BLIND

"SEC. 1002. (a) A State plan for aid to the blind must (1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them; (2) provide for financial participation by the State; (3) either provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer the plan, or provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to supervise the administration of the plan; (4) provide for granting to any individual, whose claim for aid is denied, an opportunity for a fair hearing before such State agency; (5) provide such methods of administration (other than those relating to selection, tenture of office, and compensation of personnel) as are found by the Board to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan; (6) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Board may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Board may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports; and (7) provide that no aid will be furnished any individual under the plan with respect to any period with respect to which he is receiving old-age assistance under the State plan approved under section 2 of this Act.

"(b) The Board shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a), except that it shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for aid to the blind under the plan—

"(1) Any residence requirement which excludes any resident of the State who has resided therein five years during the nine years immediately preceding the application for aid and has resided therein continuously for one year immediately preceding the application; or

"(2) Any citizenship requirement which excludes any citizen of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 101: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with the following amendments: On page 24 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 19, strike out "permanently", and on page 25 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 16, strike out "permanently"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 1006. When used in this title the term 'aid to the blind' means money payments to blind individuals."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "XI"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 107: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "1101"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "1102"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following "1103"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 112: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following "1104"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 113: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following "1105"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on the following amendments: Amendments numbered 17, 67, 68, 83, and 84.

PAT HARRISON,
WILLIAM H. KING,
WALTER F. GEORGE,
HENRY W. KEYES,
ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, JR.,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

R. L. DOUGHTON,
SAM B. HILL,
THOS. H. CULLEN,
ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
ISAAC BACHARACH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think it would be quite worth while and informative if the Senator would discuss the conference report.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I was about to make a statement with reference to it. The conferees on the social-security bill have reached an agreement on all differences except the so-called "Clark and Black amendments." The Black amendment went with the Clark amendment—providing for continuation of private pension plans. The conferees were unable to agree on that matter.

The conferees met many times, I think having more than a dozen meetings. Throughout the Senate conferees tried to carry out the wishes of the Senate as required by the record vote on the so-called "Clark amendment." The House conferees were adamant as to the Clark amendment, though they were able to agree on all the other differences between the House and the Senate. As soon as this part of the report shall be adopted, as I hope it may be, I expect to ask that the Senate further insist upon the so-called "Clark and Black amendments" and that a further conference be had with the House on those matters.

I may say in that connection, however, that when the House conferees reported today the report was overwhelmingly adopted and the House disagreed to the Clark amendment by a vote of 269 to 77.

There were several amendments of some importance on which we were able to agree. The so-called "Russell amendment", for instance, which was designed to take care of those States which, because of constitutional inhibitions, would be unable to participate in the matter of old-age assistance, was modified to some extent, but will carry out the general purposes of the original amendment, in that the States may participate without appropriations of funds by the State. The aggregate of amounts the political subdivisions of each State put up for old-age assistance plans will be matched by the Federal Government, just as if the State were financially participating. The objective of the Russell amendment was thus achieved in substance, and the House has agreed to it.

The House receded on the so-called "La Follette amendment", on which the sentiment of the Senate was practically unanimous. That was an amendment giving the option to States to adopt various plans with reference to unemployment insurance, whether the pool system or the separate reserve system, and permitting additional credit against the Federal tax where State contributions are reduced because of stabilization. The wishes of the Senate prevailed in that matter.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the Senator what was done about the amendment in which I was interested, which was proposed and adopted when the bill was before the Senate, relating to noninterference by Federal officials with parental control of children?

Mr. HARRISON. That was taken care of. The House receded on part of the Senator's amendment, and the Senate receded on the other part. Of course, the Senator will recall that we invited him before the conference committee to explain the amendment, and I think the wishes of the Senate largely prevailed in that matter.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] had an amendment with reference to pensions for Indians. I may say that the Senate conferees fought valiantly in behalf of the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota, but our wishes did not prevail, and at the very last moment the Senate conferees finally yielded on that amendment.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, does the Senator feel that if the Senate should take a definite stand for a pension for Indians the House might go along in regard to it?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senate conferees did take a definite stand.

Mr. NORBECK. No; I mean, if the Senate, by vote of the Senate, should take such a stand, does the Senator feel that that would have any influence on the situation in the House?

Mr. HARRISON. If we were to take a vote now?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator is fully cognizant of the rules of the Senate, because he has been here a long time, and has handled many bills. In order to do that, we should have to vote down the entire report; and while I share the sympathy which the Senator has for the Indians, I hope we shall not have to go to the extreme measure of voting down the entire report in order to secure another vote on that one amendment.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator thinks the Senate amendment would be rejected in the House even if we should do that?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I feel sure that there is no way to put the amendment in this bill after what has occurred.

Mr. NORBECK. I very much regret, indeed, the way we treat the Indians, because they are so helpless. Whole families of them have been living on a dollar a week. We have now begun to recognize that we took away their lands from them without just compensation and have passed 80 or 90 statutes providing that they may sue. One statute, affecting a certain tribe of Indians, was passed during the Wilson administration. The case has not as yet been tried; but the House, in handling an appropriation bill last week, put in a proviso that the suits might be started all over again. That is, they provided that different counterclaims might be made, but they did not make any distinction between suits which permitted counterclaims and those which did not. In fact, the representative of the Department of Justice said there were 24 of these cases where the act was broad enough to admit all counterclaims.

I am pleased to say that the Senate Appropriations Committee did not take the view of the House; but we know that the House is going to insist on its proviso. The Senate committee felt that it was legislation on an appropriation bill, and therefore improper. They felt that it was entirely too broad, too unfair in its basis, so the proviso was stricken from the appropriation bill by the Senate committee. Whether or not we are going to yield on that, too, I do not know; but I hope that even the Indians may be given a little consideration. The older Indians, who have lost their hunting grounds and their opportunity to make a living by agriculture, and who are living on reservations that do not produce, have simply been told to starve; and even now in this bill they are simply told, "We shall take care of everybody else but not of the Indians."

I regret that the Senate had to yield on this amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senate conferees were in sympathy with the views of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to say, for the benefit of the Senator from South Dakota, that as one of the Senate conferees I was very much interested in his amendment. My interest was not only because of the fact that the Senator from South Dakota had sponsored the amendment, but because as a member of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs I was somewhat familiar with the problem which the Senator's amendment tried to reach; and I was very much in sympathy with its objective.

I desire to say, in support of what the chairman of the Senate conferees has had to say, that it is my opinion that we could not prevail upon the House conferees to accept that amendment even if we should vote down the conference report and have another conference. The House conferees were absolutely adamant upon the subject. I also desire to assure the Senator from South Dakota that I shall be glad, as one Member of the Senate, to help him in attempting to have this matter taken care of in a separate piece of legislation.

Mr. NORBECK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there are just two other matters I wish to mention which were in difference between the two Houses.

One of these was whether the Social Security Board should be an independent agency or under the Department of Labor. It will be recalled that the Senate placed it under the Department of Labor. The Senate was forced to yield on that matter.

As to the other matter, the amendment to take care of the blind, the Senate's views on that subject prevailed, with an amendment.

I shall be glad to answer any further questions in regard to the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments in disagreement, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
July 17, 1935.

Resolved, That the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 17, 67, 68, 83, and 84 to the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on the four or five amendments still in disagreement, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KING, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. KEYES, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference with the House of Representatives.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, is it the purpose of the conferees to have a vote in the Senate on the Clark amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. That amendment has gone back to conference.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word about this amendment.

I am very much distressed over the situation. The rayon people of my State are opposed to any legislation relating to the subject of rayon; but, if there must be legislation on the subject, they prefer the amendment which was offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

It will be unfortunate for us if we have any division of sentiment in this matter, or division as regards procedure. My own thought is that we might better accept the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, and then do our best to defeat the amendment as amended. There is a difference of opinion here, however, among those of us whose States are interested in the rayon business; and I am only sounding a note of warning, hoping that overnight we may reach some conclusion as to strategy.

Once more, however, I desire to say that so far as I am concerned, I think the best strategy is to accept the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, and then do the best we can to throw the amendment as amended out of the window.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator from New York find any sentiment among the industrialists in his State in favor of levying a processing tax upon rayon because it is an injustice to the cotton industry to have a processing tax on cotton without one on rayon, which is in competition with cotton?

Mr. COPELAND. There is no desire in my State to have any such legislation enacted here.

Mr. WALSH. Is the reason why there is now agitation for a processing tax on rayon because there is such a tax on cotton goods, and because it is not fair to the cotton industry to have a processing tax on cotton without having one on rayon, with which it has to compete?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Very well. Now, the rayon manufacturer asserts, "If you are going to put a processing tax on us, we want one on silk." Is not that true?

Mr. COPELAND. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. "Because it is an injustice to the rayon industry to have a tax on rayon unless there is one on silk."

Mr. COPELAND. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. To what absurdity does such taxing power go? What further proof do we desire to be convinced of the unsoundness of this proposed legislation. If we adopt this measure, we shall be for all time adding new taxes to help remove injustices which processing taxes bring to a particular product upon which such a tax is levied.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, I am 100 percent with the Senator in what he says.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very much impressed by the questions of the Senator from Massachusetts; but we had the same predicament about fruits and canned fruits. We have already established the precedent. This amendment seeks to continue that precedent in uniform fashion throughout the bill. We included fruits and left canned fruits out. Would not that be just the same as leaving one of these products in and the other out, even though they do compete with each other? The Senate has already done that.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. I should like to ask unanimous consent to strike out on page 49 section 19, beginning in line 19, so as to make the bill conform with an amendment already agreed to, offered by my colleague, the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], which eliminated from the bill on page 38 the section beginning with line 3, affecting flaxseed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When that is reached, the Senate will have a chance to vote upon it. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I should object to unanimous consent, because the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] called my attention to this, and he has been called out to a committee meeting, and would like to have it await his return.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is perfectly agreeable.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. In placing a processing tax upon cotton, it is done upon the theory that the producers of cotton are to be benefited by the proceeds of the tax. Why in the world the producers of rayon should be taxed to help the producers of cotton, as the Senator from New York says, is beyond understanding. Certainly rayon is a separate thing from cotton.

I should like to ask the Senator if he knows upon what ground the committee has attempted to tax some product which has nothing to do with cotton in order to pay a particular benefit to the cotton farmers?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me to answer?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Texas covets the opportunity to make the answer.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not covet it, but I knew the Senator from New York was not going to answer, and I thought I would answer the question for him.

Let me say to the Senator from Maryland that, as I understand, one of the components of rayon is low-grade cotton, and it is a competitor of cotton. The man who makes the cotton cloth in New York and Massachusetts has to pay the processing tax because he manufactures cotton. The rayon man, on the other hand, pays no processing tax on his rayon.

Mr. TYDINGS. If he had cotton in the rayon, he would certainly pay a processing tax on it.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from South Carolina says he does not.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from South Carolina, with all due respect, must be misinformed on that subject.

Mr. SMITH. No; it was brought out, in the absence of the Senator, if the Senator from New York will allow me, that what they use in the manufacture of rayon is what is called "linters", and that is not produced when the cotton is ginned for the farmer. It is short lint taken off the seed after the ginning.

Mr. CONNALLY. But it is cotton just the same.

Mr. SMITH. It is cotton, but it is that which does not go into cotton manufacture. It goes into explosives, and it is the base of cellulose, but it does not go into the ordinary manufacture of cotton. Therefore it does not pay any processing tax.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yet it goes into an article which competes with cotton, to wit, rayon.

Mr. TYDINGS. The point I wished to make, and to which I addressed myself, was that we do not tax rayon on the quantity of cotton in the rayon, but we treat the whole rayon as if it were made out of cotton.

Mr. SMITH. I should like to call attention to the act that was passed 2 years ago, which provided:

> In the case of cotton, the term "processing" means the spinning, manufacturing, and other processing, except ginning, of cotton, and the term "cotton" shall not include cotton linters.

That is in the act, and, therefore, no processing tax is paid.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield further?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. What I am complaining about is that the amount of cotton in rayon is not taxed. The proposal is to tax the rayon as if it were all cotton.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. It is not upon the ground that we are taxing rayon for the benefit of cotton; we are taxing rayon because we have taxed cotton; and rayon is competing in the textile market; and the goods made out of rayon are coming in without a tax and taking the place of similar cotton goods which cannot go in on account of the tax.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina in his answer has been very frank, and I wish to thank him. In other words, we are not taxing rayon because of the amount of cotton in rayon.

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. TYDINGS. We are taxing rayon because having taxed cotton for the benefit of the cotton farmer we cannot afford to have something else which might compete go untaxed, and therefore, though it is in no respect cotton whatsoever, we are to tax that product, not for the benefit of rayon, not for the benefit of anyone connected with the operation of producing rayon, but to take this remote quantity, tax it, and then turn part of that tax back to the cotton farmer. If that is government, and if that is the policy of taxation that is to be introduced in this body, I think the sooner we adjourn and go home and get a good night's sleep and come back and learn how to levy taxes the better off the Nation will be.

Mr. SMITH. Under that doctrine we should have adjourned when the Hamiltonian idea of high protection came in, for we have been taxing with a compensatory tax everything that competes in the market with the thing that has the blessing of the high protective tariff.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the fact that the Jeffersonian party is now in power, why not repeal the Hamiltonian policy?

Mr. SMITH. I will vote "aye."

Mr. BORAH. I know the Senator will, but he will be very much alone. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. Yes; very much alone; that is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield again?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think the analogy of tariff taxes is a good one. The idea of taxing one product for the benefit of another may at times avail to help the other, but basically, as I understand, back of the tariff is the idea of protecting the standards of labor and standards of living generally. In this case, however, there is no effort to protect rayon, which is certainly a commodity indigenous to the United States. We might at least say, through a compensatory duty, that the purpose back of levying the duty is to protect all of the industries of the United States equally, but in this case the proposal is to tax, for the benefit of cotton, something which has nothing to do with cotton.

Mr. President, I have often heard the farmer complain that he had to sell his goods in the world market, where the tariff does not apply, and pay taxes on everything else that he has to buy; but, lo and behold! at last we have the good old farmer right here in the United States Senate doing the very thing of which he complained. Such is principle.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAYDEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. In the interest of historical accuracy, I wish to say that Thomas Jefferson was a high-tariff man. Read his 16 unanswerable letters urging a high tariff. He was one of the great leaders of the high protective tariff. He was in Washington's Cabinet. We know that Washington was a protectionist. We know that James Madison piloted through the House of Representatives the first tariff bill ever passed in the United States. In its preamble it declared for the protection of infant industries of the United States. When Jefferson became President he appointed the same Madison Secretary of State. Nearly all the protagonists of the high protective tariff in the West used the 16 letters of Thomas Jefferson to prove that he was a protectionist.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. Will not the Senator from Arizona state in that connection the background of those letters? Does the Senator recall the fact that this was then an infant Nation and that the proposal was to protect infant industries in order not to be dependent upon European industries?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. Are there any longer any infant industries in this country except rayon?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; Mr. President, during the depression nearly all of them have been reduced to the status of infants.

Regarding the background, it will be remembered that when James G. Blaine was preparing his book, Twenty Years in Congress, America waited with some degree of impatience to read what that brilliant man would say about the tariff, knowing that he was the great champion of a protective-tariff system. He simply wrote that all that could be said and all that ever would be said in behalf of the protective tariff was said in the House of Representatives in 1789 when James Madison piloted through the House the protective-tariff bill. Blaine almost dismisses the subject with those words.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is there now, or has there ever been, any difference between political parties in the United States on the tariff question?

Mr. ASHURST. In theory; no.

Mr. BORAH. In practice, then?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes. Mr. President, for a while our southern brethren followed the leadership of John C. Calhoun, who himself began his public life as a high-tariff advocate.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I have just entered the Senate Chamber. Did the Senator state the rates of duties proposed in the first tariff act of 1789?

Mr. ASHURST. The rates varied. There were ad valorem rates and specific duties, if I remember correctly. It has been some years since I have read that law. There was also a preferential allowed to importers who brought goods into the United States in American bottoms, which I heartily approve.

Mr. GORE. But those were regarded as protective rates. Does the Senator think they would be acceptable now?

Mr. ASHURST. Those rates might not be particularly acceptable at this time.

I wish to make the point that in the House of Representatives in 1789 they were protecting the United States against the cheap, forced, slave, and underpaid labor of certain foreign countries. The real reason why I believe in a protective tariff is not because the founder of the Democratic Party believed in it. That is not my real reason for believing in it, but it is a reason. I believe that the United States will not survive as against the cheap, the forced, and the underpaid labor of certain foreign countries. I do not, for example, believe that the mills of New England or of any other industrial State will long survive in competition with the cheap labor of Europe. I know—I do not guess, but I know—that the copper, the manganese, and other enterprises, for example, will not survive as against the cheap, the forced, and the underpaid labor of certain foreign countries, which is paid some 40 or 50 cents a day, and works 12 hours a day. This I say with particular reference to copper producing.

It is useless to resort to our old prejudices and predilections. I came to the Senate a flaming low-tariff man. I stood for years and hurled my delicate, fine, and exquisite porcelain theories against a solid, hard, concrete wall of fact; and it was only my porcelain which was shattered—never the wall of fact. I became tired of throwing porcelain against that adamantine wall.

The free-trade, low-tariff idea is the most beautiful, symmetrical theory in the world. Low tariffs will not function in this brass-tack, matter-of-fact, workaday world, if we expect our workmen to live and subsist as becomes the dignity of an American workman.

I beg the Senate's pardon for introducing the tariff question into this subject; but Senators know that the stoutest apostle of a faith is the convert. Whether his zeal arises from a feeling that he should be apologizing for past errors or he is enthused by the light which has come upon him I do not know; but I do know that the stoutest apostle of a doctrine anywhere is a man who has been converted from the opposite side. That is the position I occupy on the tariff.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. My recollection is that the tariff issue in recent years was raised in about the year 1887. President Cleveland was urged to send a message to the Congress in December 1887 proposing a reduction in the tariff; and to me the curious thing about it is that the real reason for urging it was that the Democratic Party did not know what to do with the surplus which was being created by the tariff rates. It seems to me they had a different condition in 1887 than that which they have today.

I merely desired to call attention to the fact that what brought on in 1887 the effort of the Democrats to reduce the tariff was the fact that they did not know what to do with the surplus. However, I take it that the Democratic Party during the present administration would know what to do with a surplus if they could find one.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have no remark to make in answer to the production of the pungent intellect of my friend from Delaware.

Daniel Webster went to Congress from New Hampshire a pronounced free-trader. It is known to every Senator that he became a great protective-tariff champion, a tower of protection in New England, because he found, forsooth, that his constituency could not exist without a protective tariff. John C. Calhoun, educated in Yale or Harvard—I forget which; my friend from South Carolina knows——

Mr. GORE. Yale.

Mr. ASHURST. Calhoun began his public life as a protectionist. He found that his section at that time would be better served by low tariffs or free trade. We draw our opinions—and it is not to our disgrace that we do—and we derive many of our ideas from our environment, from our experience in life, and usually from the sections whence we come. It was natural, proper, and logical that John C. Calhoun should swing over from the position of a high-tariff advocate to that of a low-tariff advocate, a free-trader. It was natural that Daniel Webster—he of the imperial intellect, the expounder of the Constitution, whose voice boomed like a golden bell hung in the canopy of the skies—it was natural that he should turn from a low-tariff, free-trade man to become a high protective-tariff advocate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly. I am always glad to yield to my able friend from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. With reference to the background, does not the Senator believe, from reading the history of both Calhoun and Webster, that one of the principal reasons for their change was Andrew Jackson, of Tennessee?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes. The able Senator from Tennessee is quite correct. In the old Senate Chamber, which is to be a repository of memorials of past greatness, Jackson and Van Buren sat side by side as Senators. Jackson had not as yet been stung by the Presidential bee. That was probably in 1822 or 1823. Jackson sat side by side with Van Buren, the low-tariff advocate, and their friendship became very close. The circumstance is so well known to history that it is not necessary to descant upon it.

However, they had a serious dispute over the tariff. Van Buren was for low tariff and Jackson for high tariff; and when Clay, great leader of the protective-tariff system, asked Jackson what, in the mind of Clay, was an embarrassing question, how high a tariff ought to be, Jackson replied, "It ought to be a judicious tariff." This answer angered Clay, so that he replied with an oath, "Well, by ———, I am for a tariff, judicious or injudicious."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Arizona has expired.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield the floor to the able Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to make a suggestion. The Senator from Arizona in his historical summary is correct with one exception. He is exactly correct about Mr. Jackson and Mr. Van Buren sitting side by side in the Senate and becoming great friends, which friendship lasted all their lives; but Andrew Jackson came to the Senate in 1822 for the very purpose of furthering his Presidential candidacy.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I would not presume to question the historical accuracy of the statement of the Senator from Tennessee. I have learned to depend upon the Senator from Tennessee for historical information, particularly with reference to Tennessee. But let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that it was not Tennessee which first proposed Jackson for the Presidency, though doubtless many of his friends in Tennessee thought he would be a good candidate. It was the high protective State of Pennsylvania which first seriously proposed Andrew Jackson for the Presidency.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is entirely correct in that statement.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, in the detailed historical recital the Senator from Arizona has omitted to say whether the bee which stung Andrew Jackson was a "queen" bee or some other kind of a bee. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I am concerned for the reputation of Thomas Jefferson, who was a Virginian. In his maturer life he wrote one sentence which has been more vividly remembered and oftener repeated than anything that was ever written in his so-called "tariff letter", which advocated a species of retaliation against Great Britain. The sentence was this: He declared for "equal rights to every man and special privileges to none." How anybody can get a high protective tariff out of that declaration is beyond my conception.

Moreover, I challenge any Senator here to point to a single platform declaration of the Democratic Party since the end of the Civil War that even so much as squinted at a high protective tariff, except the one in 1928 at Houston. We went from one end of the country to the other in the campaign of 1932 denouncing the Smoot-Hawley bill and declaring for its abrogation or modification. If there ever was a time on the face of God's earth when the Democratic Party had an opportunity to adopt a Democratic tariff bill, it has been since 1932 when it had a two-thirds majority in both Houses of Congress and had the President as well.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator grant me a moment to reply to his question?

Mr. GLASS. My question about the queen bee? [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. If I had an hour granted to me I would not make myself so ridiculously presumptive as to attempt to engage in a debate with the able Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] regarding Thomas Jefferson more than to say that what the Senator said is probably true. But after the fever and sensation and heat of the forum had subsided and after he retired from the Presidency, Thomas Jefferson became a contemplative philosopher and no longer an active statesman. No doubt Jefferson, as I hope we all shall do when we reach that stage, became more or less of a philosopher.

Notwithstanding the justly recognized scholarship and learning of the Senator from Virginia, I assert here and elsewhere that during the time when Thomas Jefferson was a responsible statesman, charged with responsibility for the destiny of the young Republic, grasping the nettles of fact daily, he was a protectionist.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senate recalls the fact that we barely escaped a civil war in 1828 and in 1832, when my State, led by Calhoun, matchless in his logic and interpretation of the Constitution, rebelled against the tariff of 1828. How anyone in this body with the facts of history so tragically written can forget that fact is beyond me. Had it not been for Clay, doubtless at that time we would have been in the war which subsequently came, precipitated by Calhoun's declaration, "You have no constitutional right to do this", namely, to pass a protective tariff. He said, "We might pass a tariff for revenue, but no one can find constitutional authority to pass a tariff for the special benefit of one class as against another class." Hence we had the ordinance of nullification. Subsequently the very same principle precipitated us into a civil war.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina said that Mr. Clay prevented that catastrophe at that time. My recollection of history is very different. The man who prevented the catastrophe at that time was again Andrew Jackson.

Mr. SMITH. No. If Andrew Jackson had had his way he would have hanged Calhoun and plunged us into civil war, but Clay came in and through a series of amendments brought about a reduction of tariff over a period of time which would ultimately bring the tariff back to where it would be tolerable.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the series of amendments which Clay offered and which were accepted still left the tariff a protective tariff.

Mr. SMITH. It did leave it a protective tariff, but brought it back to a point where it was not the enormously intolerable thing it was at that time. Of course it was very mild compared to what we have now. As the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has said, we wrote our platform denouncing that which unquestionably was one of the causes of the catastrophe into which we have been plunged, and yet here we are, Democrats, so called, and not a word either here or at the other end of the Avenue suggesting that we should carry out the pledges which we solemnly made to the people.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, with the exception of myself, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has the best tariff record of any Democrat in the Senate. That will be attested by the Vice President, who reminded me of the fact a while ago. But now the Senator from South Carolina is departing from the philosophy of Calhoun and is so rabid that he wants to levy a compensating tariff duty to keep rayon from its alleged competition with cotton. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I am carrying out the edict of my committee and following the example of the distinguished Senator from Virginia who sat right here and swallowed his own words in relation to another bill, or at least turned it over to someone else. I am trying as loyally as I can to carry out the edict of my committee, but I am not going to vote for any form of protective tariff, not even in this bill.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Virginia did not stultify himself on that occasion. He stood here and defended every single, solitary provision of that bill but one, because he believed in every provision of it but one; and when we got to that one provision he voted his convictions.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; and the Senator from South Carolina will do the same thing if the Senator from Virginia will just keep quiet. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, as I understand, the question is on substituting the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina for the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BULKLEY. That will not incorporate the amendment in the bill?

Mr. SMITH. As I understand the parliamentary situation, Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. BYRNES] has offered a substitute for the Senate committee amendment. That is now pending. I hope we may have a vote on that question.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the author of the amendment has agreed to wait until tomorrow.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. In the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina from the floor, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], and the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] asked me if it would be agreeable to me to let the amendment to the committee amendment go over until tomorrow. I told them that it would be, but that I could not speak for the chairman of the committee, who was in charge of the bill, and was not on the floor at the time. That is the situation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, all I am asking is that we may make some progress. Senators have made up their minds how they are going to vote on this amendment. They know now how they will vote just as well as they will know tomorrow morning; and if they are like I am, and try to read the technical terms which are employed in connection with rayon, they will know less tomorrow morning than they now know.

If it would aid to reach a conclusion, if I thought any Senator would take these amendments and study them and then govern himself accordingly, whether it would influence him for or against the substitute amendment, I should not hesitate; but I have been here a quarter of a century. I know what all this means.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to enable me to ask a parliamentary question?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is before the Senate a committee amendment which many of us are going to vote to reject. The junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has offered an amendment in lieu of the committee amendment, as a substitute for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the nature of a substitute.

Mr. McKELLAR. Naturally, I think the case for rejection would be stronger if we were voting on the committee amendment than if we were voting on the substitute amendment of the Senator from South Carolina. Is there any parliamentary method by which that could be accomplished, whereby the vote would first come on the committee amendment? I do not know whether there is or not, and, therefore, I am asking the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule, the vote must first be taken upon the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. SMITH. That is what I thought.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If that should be agreed to, then the committee amendment, as amended, would be voted upon.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I think those of us who represent States largely interested in the manufacture of rayon presented a very reasonable request to the junior Senator from South Carolina in the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina to whom the request could not then be presented. That request was that this particular amendment go over until tomorrow in order that we might communicate with those who are vitally concerned about this matter, and determine our action upon it.

I do not know this afternoon how I shall vote. I may know tomorrow how I shall vote. I do not wish to delay the bill. God knows I have been sitting around here for 8 days waiting for this bill to be passed in order that I may bring before the Senate a bill with the conduct of which I am charged. I do not wish to delay the matter for a minute; but we presented what I thought was a very reasonable request, and the junior Senator from South Carolina agreed to it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I did not hear the Senator. I was out of the Chamber at the time he made the explanation. It was the intent of those who desire the delay to communicate with those who are interested. I have no disposition to deny any Senator any opportunity to inform himself about a matter with which he is charged.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, does the chairman of the committee oppose the pending amendment as a substitute for the committee amendment?

Mr. SMITH. I have not made up my mind about it; but I might just as well declare now as at any other time that I am not going to vote for any measure which has in it the element of a protective tariff. This one has—both of them have—and I will not vote for it. I did not do so before, and I will not do so now; but I am doing my best to discharge my duty to my committee. Individually, I am opposed to it. I have been opposed to it. I refused to vote for the other bill when it had incorporated in it, as part I, a bill which I had favored. I refused to vote for it because had I done so I should have had to vote for the protective-tariff system.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I respect the Senator's candor, and I respect his position. What I was leading up to was this: Can we not agree to accept the amendment offered by the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] as a substitute for the committee amendment, and then let the vote on the adoption of the committee amendments go over until tomorrow?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] does not wish to have that done.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]?

Mr. GLASS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from Ohio suggested that we act upon the substitute offered by my colleague [Mr. BYRNES], and then let the committee amendment, if it shall be amended, or if the amendment to it shall be voted down, go over until tomorrow. The point was made that the Senator from Virginia and others desire time to investigate and ascertain the attitude of their constituents who are interested in the substitute as well as in the committee amendment. If that is the attitude the Senator takes, I am perfectly willing to have the Senate take a recess at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before that is done, would the Senator from South Carolina be willing to depart from the usual parliamentary procedure and vote first on the amendment of the committee; and then, if it should be adopted, vote secondly on the substitute amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]?

Mr. SMITH. That would be a rather complicated thing to do, because if we should adopt the committee amendment, we should be estopped from voting on the substitute amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not if it were done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. I desire to add my request to that made by the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to have this whole matter go over until tomorrow. The senior Senator from South Carolina was not in the Chamber when his colleague [Mr. BYRNES] offered the amendment and made an explanatory statement with reference to it. Among other things we understood him, at least, to say that the rayon industry generally would prefer the amendment offered by him to the present amendment. Personally, I am opposed to both, and I shall continue to be opposed to both, no matter what attitude the rayon industry may take in the matter, because I think the proposal is an injustice to the consumer; but we desire to inquire to what extent there is unanimity of opinion among the rayon industries of our respective States. I thought that was a rather reasonable request.

Mr. SMITH. That matter has been gone into and explained so far as the chairman of the committee is concerned. It is a matter of absolute indifference to me personally which amendment the Senate takes, or whether it takes either. The Senate may be governed by its judgment in the premises.

Mr. WAGNER. Let us now take a recess.

Mr. SMITH. I was making that proposition when the Senator from New York rose.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is it the desire of the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill that we recess now, or that we have a vote on the rayon substitute?

Mr. SMITH. Under the request made by the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from New York, as they desire to communicate with those who are interested, I think perhaps it would be well to take a recess now, and take up this matter tomorrow.

May I ask the Senator from Arkansas if it would not be a very good idea if we could meet earlier tomorrow?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I was just about to suggest that in view of the slow progress that is being made the Senate now take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow. I hope the Senator from Oregon will find it consistent to agree to that.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, of course I am anxious to cooperate in the disposition of the bill, but I am informed that some work is set for tomorrow morning, and I think we can get along pretty well if we meet at 12 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator indicates he will object, I will not submit a request, but I wish to make the statement that unless more rapid progress shall be made it will be necessary for the Senate to hold longer sessions, and if we cannot meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning, it may be necessary to continue in session tomorrow, as well as during the remainder of the week, much later than has been the recent practice.

I wish to add that it seems to me we should cooperate to conclude the consideration of the bill by some hour Friday. Unless we do that, it will probably be necessary to have a session on Saturday. The pending bill has been before the Senate for a long time, the discussion has taken a very broad range, and while a limitation on debate has been agreed upon, the progress that has been made today is rather disappointing; we have not disposed of very many matters.

If the Senator from Oregon wishes to maintain his attitude, I will give notice that the Senate will remain in session tomorrow until a later hour than has been the practice heretofore.

ADDRESS BY GENERAL M'ARTHUR BEFORE RAINBOW DIVISION VETERANS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD an address delivered by Gen. Douglas MacArthur, Chief of Staff, United States Army, before national meeting of the Rainbow Division, World War, at Washington, D. C., July 14, 1935.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Rainbow Division, I thank you for the warmth of your greeting. It moves me deeply. It was with you I lived my greatest moments. It is of you I have my greatest memories.

It was 17 years ago—those days of old have vanished, tone and tint; they have gone glimmering through the dreams of things that were. Their memory is a land where flowers of wondrous beauty and varied colors spring, watered by tears and coaxed and caressed into fuller bloom by the smiles of yesterday. Refrains no longer rise and fall from that land of used to be. We listen vainly, but with thirsty ear for the witching melody of days that are gone. Ghosts in olive drab and sky blue and German gray pass before our eyes; voices that have stolen away in the echoes from the battlefields no more ring out. The faint, far whisper of forgotten songs no longer floats through the air. Youth, strength, aspirations, struggles, triumphs, despairs, wide winds sweeping, beacons flashing across uncharted depths, movement, vividness, radiance, shadows, faint bugles sounding reveille, far drums beating the long roll, the crash of guns, the rattle of musketry, the still white crosses!

And tonight we are met to remember.

The shadows are lengthening. The division's birthdays are multiplying; we are growing old together. But the story which we commemorate helps us to grow old gracefully. That story is known to all of you. It needs no profuse panegyrics. It is the story of the American soldier of the World War. My estimate of him was formed on the battlefield many years ago and has never changed. I regarded him then, as I regard him now, as one of the world's greatest figures—not only in the era which witnessed his achievements but for all eyes and for all time. I regarded him as not only one of the greatest military figures but also as one of the most stainless; his name and fame are the birthright of every American citizen.

The world's estimate of him will be founded not upon any one battle or even series of battles; indeed, it is not upon the greatest fields of combat or the bloodiest that the recollections of future ages are riveted. The vast theaters of Asiatic conflict are already forgotten. The slaughtered myriads of Timour and Ghengis Khan lie in undistinguished graves. Hardly a pilgrim visits the scenes where on the fields of Chalons and Tours the destinies of civilization and Christendom were fixed by the skill of Aetius and the valor of Charles Martel.

The time indeed may come when the memory of the fields of Champagne and Picardy, of Verdun and the Argonne shall be dimmed by the obscurity of revolving years and recollected only as a shadow of ancient days.

But even then the enduring fortitude, the patriotic self-abnegation, and the unsurpassed military genius of the American soldier of the World War will stand forth in undimmed luster; in his youth and strength, his love and loyalty, he gave all that mortality can give. He needs no eulogy from me or from any other man; he has written his own history, and written it in red on his enemy's breast, but when I think of his patience under adversity, of his courage under fire, and of his modesty in victory I am filled with an emotion I cannot express. He belongs to history as furnishing one of the greatest examples of successful and disinterested patriotism. He belongs to posterity as the instructor of future generations in the principles of liberty and right. He belongs to the present—to us—by his glory, by his virtues, and by his achievements.

The memorials of character wrought by him can never be dimmed. He needs no statues or monuments; he has stamped himself in blazing flames upon the souls of his countrymen; he has carved his own statue in the hearts of his people; he has built his own monument in the memory of his compatriots.

The military code which he perpetuates has come down to us from even before the age of knighthood and chivalry. It embraces the highest moral laws, and will stand the test of any ethics or philosophies ever promulgated for the uplift of mankind. Its requirements are for the things that are right, and its restraints are from the things that are wrong. Its observance will uplift everyone who comes under its influence. The soldier, above all other men, is required to perform the highest act of religious teaching—sacrifice. In battle and in the face of danger and death he discloses those divine attributes which his Maker gave when he created man in his own image. No physical courage and no brute instinct can take the place of the divine annunciation and spiritual uplift which will alone sustain him. However horrible the incidents of war may be, the soldier who is called upon to offer and to give his life for his country is the noblest development of mankind.

On such an occasion as this my thoughts go back to those men who went with us to their last charge. In memory's eye I can see them now—forming grimly for the attack, blue-lipped, covered with sludge and mud, chilled by the wind and rain of the fox hole, driving home to their objective, and to the judgment seat of God. I do not know the dignity of their birth, but I do know the glory of their death. They died unquestioning, uncomplaining, with faith in their hearts and on their lips the hope that we would go on to victory.

Never again for them staggering columns, bending under soggy packs, on many a weary march from dripping dusk to drizzling dawn. Never again will they slug ankle deep through the mud on shell-shocked roads. Never again will they stop cursing their luck long enough to whistle through chapped lips a few bars as some clear voice raised the lilt of Madelon. Never again ghastly trenches, with their maze of tunnels, drifts, pits, dugouts—never again, gentlemen unafraid.

They have gone beyond the mists that blind us here and become part of that beautiful thing we call the spirit of the Unknown Soldier. In chambered temples of silence the dust of their dauntless valor sleeps, waiting, waiting in the chancery of heaven the final reckoning of Judgment Day. "Only those are fit to live who are not afraid to die."

Our country is rich and resourceful, populous and progressive, courageous to the full extent of propriety. It insists upon respect for its rights, and likewise gives full recognition to the rights of all others. It stands for peace, honesty, fairness, and friendship in its intercourse with foreign nations.

It has become a strong, influential, and leading factor in world affairs. It is destined to be even greater if our people are sufficiently wise to improve their manifold opportunities. If we are industrious, economical, absolutely fair in our treatment of each other, strictly loyal to our Government, we, the people, may expect to be prosperous and to remain secure in the enjoyment of all those benefits which this privileged land affords.

But so long as humanity is more or less governed by motives not in accord with the spirit of Christianity, our country may be involved by those who believe they are more powerful, whatever the ostensible reason advanced may be—envy, cupidity, fancied wrong, or other unworthy impulse may direct.

Every nation that has what is valuable is obligated to be prepared to defend against brutal attack or unjust effort to seize and appropriate. Even though a man be not inclined to guard his own interests, common decency requires him to furnish reasonable oversight and care to others who are weak and helpless. As a rule, they who preach by word or by deed "Peace at any price", are not possessed of anything worth having, and are oblivious to the interest of others including their own dependents.

The Lord Almighty, merciful and all-wise, does not absolutely protect those who unreasonably fail to contribute to their own safety, but He does help those who, to the limit of their understanding and ability, help themselves. This, my friends, is fundamental theology.

On looking back through the history of English-speaking people, it will be found in every instance that the most sacred principles of free government have been acquired, protected, and perpetuated through the embodied, armed strength of the people concerned. From Magna Carta to the present day there is little in our institutions worth having or worth perpetuating that has not been achieved for us by armed men. Trade, wealth, literature, and refinement cannot defend a state—pacific habits do not insure peace nor immunity from national insult and national aggression.

Every nation that would preserve its tranquillity, its riches, its independence, and its self-respect must keep alive its martial ardor and be at all times prepared to defend itself.

The United States is a preeminently Christian and conservative nation. It is far less militaristic than most nations. It is not especially open to the charge of imperialism. Yet one would fancy that Americans were the most brutally blood-thirsty people in the world to judge by the frantic efforts that are being made to disarm them both physically and morally. The public opinion of the United States is being submerged by a deluge of organizations whose activities to prevent war would be understandable were they distributed in some degree among the armed nations of Europe and Asia. The effect of all of this unabashed and unsound propaganda is not so much to convert America to a holy horror of war as it is to confuse the public mind and lead to muddled thinking in international affairs.

A few intelligent groups who are vainly trying to present the true facts to the world are overwhelmed by the sentimentalist, the emotionalist, the alarmist, who merely befog the real issue which is not the biological necessity of war but the biological character of war.

The springs of human conflict cannot be eradicated through institutions but only through the reform of the individual human being. And that is a task which has baffled the highest theologians for 2,000 years and more.

I often wonder how the future historian in the calmness of his study will analyze the civilization of the century recently closed. It was ushered in by the end of the Napoleanic Wars which devastated half of Europe. Then followed the Mexican War, the American Civil War, the Crimean War, the Austro-Prussian War, the Franco-Prussian War, the Boer War, the opium wars of England and China, the Spanish-American War, the Russo-Japanese War and, finally, the World War—which, for ferocity and magnitude of losses, is unequalled in the history of humanity.

If he compares this record of human slaughter with say the thirteenth century when civilization was just emerging from the Dark Ages, when literature had its Dante; art its Michelangelo and Gothic architecture; education, the establishment of the famous colleges and technical schools of Europe; medicine, the organization of hospital systems; and politics, the foundation of Anglo-Saxon liberty, the Magna Carta—the verdict cannot be that wars have been on the wane.

In the last 3,400 years only 268—less than 1 in 13—have been free from wars. No wonder that Plato, that wisest of all men, once exclaimed, "Only the dead have seen the end of war!" Every reasonable man knows that war is cruel and destructive. Yet, our civilization is such that a very little of the fever of war is sufficient to melt its veneer of kindliness. We all dream of the day when human conduct will be governed by the Decalogue and the Sermon on the Mount. But, as yet it is only a dream. No one desires peace as much as the soldier, for he must pay the greatest penalty in war. Our Army is maintained solely for the preservation of peace—or, for the restoration of peace after it has been lost by statesmen or by others.

Dionysius, the ancient thinker, twenty centuries ago uttered these words: "It is a law of nature, common to all mankind which time shall neither annul nor destroy, that those that have greater strength and power shall bear rule over those who have less." Unpleasant as they may be to hear, disagreeable as they may be to contemplate, the history of the world bears ample testimony to their truth and wisdom. When looking over the past, or when looking over the world in its present form, there is but one trend of events to be discerned—a constant change of tribes, clans, nations, the stronger ones replacing the others, the more vigorous ones pushing aside, absorbing, covering with oblivion the weak and the worn-out.

From the dawn of history to the present day it has always been the militant aggressor taking the place of the unprepared. Where are the empires of old? Where is Egypt, once a state on a high plane of civilization, where a form of socialism prevailed and where the distribution of wealth was regulated? Her high organization did not protect her. Where are the empires of the East and the empires of the West which once were the shrines of wealth, wisdom, and culture? Where are Babylon, Persia, Carthage, Rome, Byzantium? They all fell, never to rise again, annihilated at the hands of a more warlike and aggressive people, their cultures memories, their cities ruins.

Where are Peru and old Mexico? A handful of bold and crafty invaders destroyed them, and with them their institutions, their independence, their nationality, and their civilization.

And saddest of all the downfall of Christian Byzantium. When Constantinople fell, that center of learning, pleasure, and wealth—and all the weakness and corruption that goes with it—a pall fell over Asia and southeastern Europe which has never been lifted. Wars have been fought these nearly five centuries that have had for at least one of their goals the bringing back under the cross of that part of the world lost to a wild horde of a few thousand adventurers on horseback whom hunger and the unkind climate of their steppes forced to seek more fertile regions.

The thousand years of existence of the Byzantine empire, its size, its religion, the wealth of its capital city were but added incentives and inducements to an impecunious conqueror. For wealth is no protection against aggression. It is no more an augury of military and defensive strength in a nation than it is an indication of health in an individual. Success in war depends upon men, not money. No nation has ever been subdued for lack of it. Indeed, nothing is more insolent or provocative, or more apt to lead to a breach of the peace than undefended riches among armed men.

And each nation swept away was submerged by force of arms. Once each was strong and militant, each rose by military prowess, each fell through degeneracy of military capacity, because of unpreparedness. The battlefield was the bed upon which they were born into this world and the battlefield became the couch on which their worn-out bodies finally expired. Let us be prepared, lest we, too, perish.

"They will tell of the Peace Eternal—
And we would wish them well!
They will scorn the wrath of war's red path,
And brand it the road to Hell.
They will set aside their warrior pride—
And their love for the soldier sons—
But at the last they will turn again
To Horse and Foot and Guns.

"They will tell of the Peace Eternal—
The Assyrian dreamers did—
But the Tigris and Euphrates ran
Through ruined lands. And mid
The hopeless chaos loud they wept,
And called their chosen ones
To save their lives at the bitter last
With Horse and Foot and Guns.

"They will tell of the Peace Eternal—
And may that peace succeed:
But what of a foe that waits to spring?
And what of a Nation's need?
The letters blaze on history's page—
And ever the writing runs—
God and Honour and Native Land—
And Horse and Foot and Guns."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAYDEN in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nomination of Hoffman Philip, of New York, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Chile.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, Jr., of Pennsylvania, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Norway.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JULY 17, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord God, in the noontide light of Thy perfection we humble ourselves and pray Thee to make us wise to know the right and give us courage to perform it. We beseech Thee to illuminate, inspire, and fortify us against the blighting power of evil; this strength is found in the consciousness of divine favor, in the enjoyment of the divine presence, and in living a truly godly life. Bring our whole land to the realization that Thou art the basis for morals, the guaranty of public order, and the blessed inspiration of civilization and progress. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 884. An act for the relief of Lt. Comdr. G. C. Manning; and

S. 2532. An act to amend an act entitled "An act setting aside Rice Lake and contiguous lands in Minnesota for the exclusive use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota", approved June 23, 1926, and for other purposes.

THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House today and Thursday and Friday and Saturday of this week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order today on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the business on Calendar Wednesday today be dispensed with.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the motion was agreed to.

RESIGNATION

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 17, 1935.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby respectfully submit my resignation as a member of the following committees: Committee on Claims, Committee on Patents, Committee on Roads.

Yours very truly,

SCOTT W. LUCAS.

THE MILITARY DISAFFECTION BILL

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, the Military Affairs Committee, of which I am a member, has recently reported out or ordered to report out, without a quorum, and without reading the bill, what is known as the "military disaffection bill" and which, in my opinion, is one of the most outrageous invasions of human rights ever attempted on the American people. It gags the press; it gags every liberty given in the Constitution of the United States. It violates every precedent of American liberty and adopts the philosophy of communism and fascism—that is, that the civilian population shall be subject to the military instead of our civil government controlling the military. It is a dangerous bill and I shall have plenty to say about it later.

It should be known as the "Stalin-Hitler bill." It is the first time any such attempt has been made in peace time; I consider it one of the most dangerous bills ever reported out of a committee.

Strangely enough, the newspapers did not at first pay any attention to it, although it primarily violates the right of freedom of the press.

The first newspaper to give it any attention was the Newark Evening News, in a special article by Mr. Walter Karig, their able representative in Washington, of that newspaper. This newspaper deserves great credit for giving this news, and I am not complimenting the newspaper, or Mr. Karig, because they happened to put the story on the front page.

As a result of this article, it has now become pretty well known over the Nation, and the rest of the newspapers are taking it up. Also, due to the fact that the bill was pushed through the Senate almost entirely by accident and by unanimous consent, this article has brought the matter to the attention of many Senators, and many Senators are outraged over it.

The article in the Newark Evening News, which was printed on Monday, July 15, 1935, is as follows:

CENSORSHIP BILL NEAR ADOPTION—WOULD GIVE MILITARY PEACE-TIME POWER OVER PRESS—SILENTLY PUSHED

By Walter Karig

WASHINGTON.—Insidious assaults on the constitutionality guaranteed freedom of the press have been suspected from time to time in the last 2 years, but the first bill seriously to threaten Federal interference with the publication of newspapers, magazines, and books has just been favorably reported in the House after slipping through the Senate without a record vote.

Camouflaged as a patriotic measure to prevent distribution of radical propaganda in the Army and Navy, the bill gives the Military and Naval Establishments broad powers to censor and punish the press. It is a delegation of authority over civilians unprecedented in peace time, and if the bill becomes law—it stands excellent chance of passage—soldiers or sailors may invade any home or office to confiscate written or printed matter held suspect, with warrants issued under the old war-time Espionage Act.

PLENTY OF LAWS NOW

The bill originated in the Senate as S. 2253 and is without sponsorship there, although Senator TYDINGS (Democrat of Maryland) of the Naval Affairs Committee, which favorably reported it, declared that the War and Navy Departments wanted it. It is not an administration measure in the sense of having White House endorsement, however.

The bill was labeled no. 5845 in the House, where it was sponsored by Representative MCCORMACK (Democrat, Massachusetts), Chairman of the Special Committee on Un-American Activities. The House Military Affairs Committee toned the Senate measure down somewhat.

Representative MCLEAN (Republican, New Jersey), a member of the Military Affairs Committee, thinks the proposed law at least unnecessary. He said he voted to report it because he thought the House amendments removed most of the vicious qualities from the Senate bill, but that his belief is there are "plenty of laws" now to take adequate care of the situation the bill ostensibly attacks. MCLEAN said the bill was scarcely complimentary to the soldiers and sailors of the Nation. "If everybody was as patriotic as these men are", he said, "we could do without a lot of laws."

LIKE RUSSIA

Representative MAVERICK (Democrat, Texas) did not vote to report the bill, but in an unofficial minority report termed it "hysterical", "unconstitutional", and akin to the press-destroying laws of Soviet Russia and Fascist Germany.

"As the bill stands", MAVERICK later declared to this bureau, "it means 2 years in jail and a heavy fine for any newspaper editor who publishes and any newspaper reporter who writes stories critical of the Army and Navy or military equipment. A newspaper which gets information leading it to suspect that certain military airplanes are untrustworthy, or that a new ship was jerry-built, and publishes that information lays itself open to suppression, confiscation, and imprisonment of its editor and writers. The latitude of interpretation of the law is so great there is practically no limit."

The Senate bill made it a crime subject to imprisonment, fine, and confiscation for any individual or corporation to "advise, counsel, urge, or solicit" members of "military and naval forces" to disobey the laws and regulations of the military forces. Amendments in the House committee specify the Army and the Navy, eliminating the National Guard and the Marine Corps, and wrote in the phrase that the offending writer must have had "intent to incite disaffection." Under the Senate bill newspapers or the publishers and authors of books or pamphlets could be punished for criticizing the use or behavior of National Guardsmen on strike duty, for instance.

CRITICISMS OF CAMPS OUT

However, the "intent to incite disaffection" clause injected by the House committee takes away with one hand what concessions were made by the other to limit the application of the law.

It is held by critics of the bill, including legal authorities, that a writer or publisher could be held to have had "intent to incite disaffection" through criticism of naval intervention by the United States in Cuba or Haiti or Nicaragua. Editorials or newspaper accounts criticizing the management or conditions at civilian military training camps, at Army or Navy maneuvers, or in forts and naval bases would fall under the ban.

Accounts and opinions taking exception to the loss of life through ship collisions and airplane failures such as marked the recent Pacific Fleet games could, under the terms of the bill, subject the publishers to confiscation of their newspapers or magazines. Even if found not guilty after trial, the damage would have been done.

DOUBTING WAR'S VIRTUES

These, however, are specific examples of the intended law's possible effects. There is no inhibition in the bill to prevent the military authorities from taking action against any newspaper or magazine article or book which in their opinion would, if read by a soldier or sailor, make him doubt the virtues of war. Any book or article preaching nonaggression, or treating warfare too realistically, might offend some admiral or general, whereupon the whole edition could be confiscated and impounded until court action determined the application of the law.

The bill goes beyond constructions upon the freedom of the press. It is not required that the military offensive matter be printed or even circulated. Manuscripts may be seized under the enabling Espionage Act. A man might tell a friend he was writing a book or article which, upon report, sounded offensive to the authorities and find his house raided as a result. Even letters are brought under ban, and a mother writing to a run-away son in the Army or Navy, innocently deploring his environment, his companions, or his imminent transfer to China, would be subject to 2 years in jail and $1,000 fine.

Senator SCHALL, Republican, of Minnesota, who has consumed hours in tirades against the Roosevelt administration for more or less imaginary assaults on the freedom of the press, was mutely present in the Senate when the bill was read and adopted. So was Senator VANDENBERG, Republican, of Michigan, a newspaper publisher and leading contender for the Republican Presidential nomination, but he was paying attention to other matters at the time of the Senate's action. It was a session devoted to the Consent Calendar, when personal bills, almost always of minor importance, are called up and mechanically adopted.

Despite the quietness attending the bill so far, a silence broken only by MAVERICK's criticism accompanying the report, the proposed law is one of the most sweeping and potentially disruptive of American tradition yet seen in Congress, the several revolutionary new-deal bills not excepted.

THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY BILL

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 8632, the Tennessee Valley Authority bill, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. MAVERICK. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from South Carolina inform this House how many conferees there will be?

Mr. McSWAIN. I do not mind stating to the gentleman that I have recommended to the Speaker to appoint five.

Mr. MAVERICK. The Senate has appointed three conferees, and the gentleman who is chairman of my committee recommends five. The other day the Republicans objected to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] having six conferees when the Senate had five, and Mr. RAYBURN agreed to this for a Republican member of his committee. Why should we in this case have a different number from the Senate? There must be some peculiar reason. I do not know what the general custom is but I do not see why we should not have the same number as the Senate; this seems reasonable and equitable. I do not see why we should not do the same for the Democrats as we did for the Republicans, I do not believe the T. V. A. should be discriminated against. The House has spoken. Let us not hold this program up any longer.

Mr. McSWAIN. I think the gentleman from Texas has the information that he seems to be asking for. He has that in his own breast. There is no need for bringing it out here.

Mr. MAVERICK. I do not know about my breast, but I have something very clearly in my head. Since the gentleman knows what is in my breast, I am sure he knows what is in my head about this long-drawn-out T. V. A. affair. I think it ought to be brought out, if we are going to have unfriendly Members on the conference. The T. V. A. has suffered enough obstruction.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There are instances where the Senate has had five and even seven conferees, and in one instance the Senate had nine.

Mr. MAVERICK. Undoubtedly the gentleman is technically correct. But there may be reasons for this. We ought to have a clear understanding.

Mr. McSWAIN. We all know that conferees for each House only have 1 vote. It makes no difference how many there are on the conference committee. They are all bound to support the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, an agreement was made by certain Members of the Military Affairs Committee to have five conferees, with unfriendly people on this committee. As one of the friends of the T. V. A., I was not invited, and as far as I know Mr. THOMASON, of Texas, and Mr. WILCOX, of Florida, and Mr. HILL of Alabama, also friends of the T. V. A., were not there. I think it is wrong. I think this is a bad precedent to put unfriendly men on the conference committee; it may hold things up, and it does not appear to me as fair—I will not be a party to any agreement unfriendly to the purposes of the great T. V. A. program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is this conference agreeable to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN]?

Mr. McSWAIN. I have spoken to Mr. RANSLEY twice, and the conferees I propose to nominate are entirely satisfactory to him.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. EKWALL. Does the gentleman know what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] means by the term "unfriendly"? Does he mean unfriendly to his particular ideas?

Mr. MAVERICK. I mean unfriendly to what the House decided on. I am talking about the bill as passed in the House. It happens that I am with the majority, with the President, and with the Democratic Party, and for the great T. V. A. program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask this question: I would like to see the personnel of the conference committee appointed according to the way the majority of the House voted, and the personnel should be so appointed so that a majority of the committee will favor the majority position of the House. Take the first three members on the conference committee, based on their vote on this question, and on the different administration amendments in the different issues voted on in the House. How would their known position on this legislation stand up with the opinion of the majority of the House on the legislation?

Mr. McSWAIN. The three members on the majority side whom I have nominated to the Speaker voted for the bill and voted against the motion to recommit. As I have stated time and time again, I am for whatever the House does; and I state again that I am for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. After all, the Chair appoints the conferees. The Chair is always willing to accept the suggestions made by the chairman of the committee which has charge of the bill, assuming that the members who are appointed will stand for the House measure because they represent the House in the conference.

Mr. MAVERICK. One of the members of the conferees has been one of the three bitterest opponents on the committee of the bill the President wants, and that is the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MONTET]. As I understand it, he is one of those to be appointed. Yes; Mr. MONTET finally voted for the bill, but he has consistently fought the bill from the very beginning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would certainly not assume that the gentleman from Louisiana would accept a position as a conferee and not stand for what the House wants, because that is what the House conferees are expected to do, consistent with any proper compromises that are necessary in order to put the measure through. On the contrary, the Chair has complete confidence in the gentleman in every sense of the word. That is a matter which should appeal to the conferees when they go into session, and, after all, when the matter is reported to the House, the House has its opportunity to express its approval or disapproval of the conference report.

Mr. MAVERICK. I have respect for the traditions by which the Speaker is bound, and I hope he is correct in believing that the T. V. A. bill will get sympathetic treatment according to the will of the House. I hope the House conferees will show their good faith and report promptly. I am frank to say that I do not like the situation.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, still further reserving the right to object, a policy has been announced in the other body of appointing all conferees based upon the record of their votes in determining the number that shall be appointed from the majority and the minority, as to legislation. That policy was announced early this session. I hope the Chair will bear that in mind when the conferees are appointed, based on the differences between the amendments to the bill as it came to the House and the amendments as we rewrote the bill on the floor of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is a prerogative of the Chair and we have nothing to do with it.

Mr. MAVERICK. I withdraw my objection, but I want the RECORD to show my protest. I will wait and see. I am willing to withdraw this objection on the theory that I will never do anything to obstruct the T. V. A.—and I hope the conferees will take the same attitude. This bill should have been finally settled and adopted long, long ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. McSWAIN, Mr. HILL of Alabama, Mr. MONTET, Mr. McLEAN, and Mr. PLUMLEY.

SOCIAL SECURITY BILL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a social security board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina calls up the conference report upon the bill 7260, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is this the conference report that has to do with the social security bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Then I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry. Will the reading of the statement, rather than the reading of the report, preclude Members from having an opportunity to vote for the approval or disapproval and to be heard upon the report of the conferees?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. As to the reading of the statement, it is up to the House to adopt the report, the time for debate being in control of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. NICHOLS. I am just a little green on the parliamentary procedure, and I wanted to know that this would not foreclose the House on any rights in considering the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Not at all. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment-compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 18, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 61, 65, 70, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 86, 90, 92, 105, and 108.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 9, 16, 20, 21, 28, 39, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 60, 62, 63, 64, 66, 69, 71, 72, 82, 88, 89, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 102, 103, and 109, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That the State plan, in order to be approved by the Board, need not provide for financial participation before July 1, 1937, by the State, in the case of any State which the Board, upon application by the State and after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State, finds is prevented by its constitution from providing such financial participation"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "or such other agencies as the Board may approve"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 8 of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out line 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "welfare services (hereinafter in this section referred to as 'child-welfare services') for the protection and care of homeless, dependent, and neglected children, and children in danger of becoming delinquent" and a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax interest (except in the case of adjustments made in accordance with the provisions of sections 802 (b) and 805) at the rate of one-half of 1 per centum per month from the date the tax became due until paid." and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "together with a statement of the additional expenditures in the District of Columbia and elsewhere incurred by the Post Office Department in performing the duties imposed upon said Department by this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to advance from time to time to the credit of the Post Office Department from appropriations made for the collection of the taxes imposed by this title, such sums as may be required for such additional expenditures incurred by the Post Office Department"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 85: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following "EIGHT"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "or such other agencies as the Board may approve"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "eight"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 99: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"APPROPRIATION

"SECTION 1001. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, to needy individuals who are blind, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $3,000,000, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Social Security Board, State plans for aid to the blind."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 100: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"STATE PLANS FOR AID TO THE BLIND

"SEC. 1002. (a) A State plan for aid to the blind must (1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them; (2) provide for financial participation by the State; (3) either provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer the plan, or provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to supervise the administration of the plan; (4) provide for granting to any individual, whose claim for aid is denied, an opportunity for a fair hearing before such State agency; (5) provide such methods of administration (other than those relating to selection, tenure of office, and compensation of personnel) as are found by the Board to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan; (6) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Board may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Board may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports; and (7) provide that no aid will be furnished any individual under the plan with respect to any period with respect to which he is receiving old-age assistance under the State plan approved under section 2 of this Act.

"(b) The Board shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a), except that it shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for aid to the blind under the plan—

"(1) Any residence requirement which excludes any resident of the State who has resided therein five years during the nine years immediately preceding the application for aid and has resided therein continuously for one year immediately preceding the application; or

"(2) Any citizenship requirement which excludes any citizen of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 101: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with the following amendments: On page 24 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 19, strike out "permanently", and on page 25 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 16, strike out "permanently"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 1006. When used in this title the term "aid to the blind" means money payments to blind individuals."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "XI"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 107: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "1101"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "1102"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following "1103"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 112: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following "1104"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 113: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following "1105"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on the following amendments: Amendments numbered 17, 67, 68, 83, and 84.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment no. 1: The House bill, with reference to the appropriation authorized for grants to States for old-age assistance, stated that the appropriation was for the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance assuring, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, a reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health to aged individuals without such subsistence. The Senate amendment states that the appropriation is for the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, to aged needy individuals. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 2 and 3: The House bill required the State plan for old-age assistance to provide that if the State or any of its political subdivisions collects from the estate of any recipient any amount with respect to old-age assistance under the plan, one-half of the net amount so collected shall be promptly paid to the United States. The Senate amendments provide for the repayment to the United States in such cases, instead of one-half of the net amount so collected, a portion of the net amount collected proportionate to the part of the old-age assistance representing payments made by the United States. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 4: This amendment provides that in order to assist the aged of States, who have no State system of old-age pensions, until an opportunity is afforded the States to provide for a State plan, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State for each quarter until not later than July 1, 1937, in lieu of the amounts payable under the House bill which were to be matched by the States, an amount sufficient to afford old-age assistance to each needy individual within the State who at the time of such expenditure is 65 years of age or older, and who is declared by such agency as may be designated by the Social Security Board to be entitled to receive the same, old-age assistance not in excess of $15 a month.

The House recedes with an amendment, in lieu of the Senate amendment, which provides that the State plan for old-age assistance, in order to be approved by the Board, need not provide for financial participation before July 1, 1937, by the State, in the case of any State which the Board, upon application by the State and after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State, finds is prevented by its constitution from providing such financial participation.

On amendment no. 5: The House bill provided that the Board, before stopping payments to a State for old-age assistance on the ground that the State plan is not being complied with, should give notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency. The Senate amendment provides that the notice and opportunity for hearing must be "reasonable." The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 6, 7, and 8: The House bill, with reference to the "Old-age reserve account" for the payment of Federal old-age benefits under title II, provided that the amount of authorized appropriations should be based upon such tables of mortality as the Secretary of the Treasury should adopt; that the Secretary of the Treasury should submit annually to the Bureau of the Budget an estimate of the appropriations to be made to the account; and that he should include in his annual report the actuarial status of the account. The Senate amendments transfer these duties to the Social Security Board. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 9: This amendment provides that for every month during which the Board finds that an aged person, otherwise qualified for Federal old-age benefits under title II, is regularly employed, after he attains the age of 65, a month's benefit will be withheld from such person, under regulations prescribed by the Board, by deductions from one or more payments of old-age benefits to such person. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 10 and 11: The House bill excepted from the term "employment", as used in title II relating to the payment of Federal old-age benefits, service performed as an officer or member of the crew of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States or of any foreign country. The Senate amendments strike out this exception and expressly include within the definition of "employment" service performed as an officer or member of the crew of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States. The Senate recedes.

On amendments nos. 12, 13, and 14: These amendments make changes in paragraph numbers. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 15: The House bill in defining the term "employment", as used in title II relating to the payment of Federal old-age benefits, excepted service performed in the employ of a corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual. The Senate amendment adds to the list of purposes "or hospital" as a clarifying amendment. The Senate recedes, the conferees omitting this language as surplusage, based on the fact that the Internal Revenue Bureau has uniformly construed language in the income-tax laws, identical with that found in the House bill, as exempting hospitals not operated for profit, and also on the fear that the insertion of the words added by the Senate amendment might interfere with the continuation of the long-continued construction of the income-tax law.

On amendment no. 16: This amendment excepts from the definition of "employment", as used in title II, relating to the payment of Federal old-age benefits, service performed in the employ of a corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation organized and operated exclusively for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 18 and 19: The House bill provided that the Social Security Board should not certify for payment to any State under title III amounts for the administration of the State unemployment-insurance law unless such law provides for payment of unemployment compensation solely through public employment offices in the State. The Senate amendments require that the State law must provide for payment of unemployment compensation through public employment offices in the State to the extent that such offices exist and are designated by the State for the purpose. The Senate recedes on amendment no. 18, and the House recedes on amendment no. 19 with an amendment changing the language of the amendment. The effect of the action of the conferees is to provide that the State law cannot be approved by the Board unless it provides for the payment of unemployment compensation solely through public employment offices in the State or such other agencies as the Board may approve.

On amendment no. 20: The House bill provided that the Board, before stopping payments to a State for grants for unemployment-compensation administration on the ground that the State plan is not being complied with, should give notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency. The Senate amendment provides that the notice and opportunity for hearing must be "reasonable." The House recedes.

On amendment no. 21: The House bill, with reference to the appropriation authorized for grants to States for aid to dependent children, stated that the appropriation was for the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance assuring, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, a reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health to dependent children without such subsistence. The Senate amendment states that the appropriation is for the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, to needy dependent children. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 22 to 27, 29 to 38, and 40 to 44: The House bill placed the administration of title IV, relating to grants to States for aid to dependent children in the Social Security Board. The Senate amendments transfer these functions in part to the Secretary of Labor and in part to the Chief of the Children's Bureau, and make clerical changes to carry out this policy. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 28: The House bill in title IV, relating to grants to States for aid to dependent children, provided that no State plan should be approved which imposes as a condition for eligibility for aid to dependent children a residence requirement which denies aid to any child residing in the State who was born in the State within 1 year immediately preceding the application. The Senate amendment permits the State plan to deny aid to such a child if its mother has not resided in the State for 1 year immediately preceding the birth. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 39: The House bill provided that the Board, before stopping payments to a State for aid to dependent children on the ground that the State plan is not being complied with, should give notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency. The Senate amendment provides that the notice and opportunity for hearing must be "reasonable." The House recedes.

On amendment no. 45: This amendment adds to the definition of a "dependent child" for the purposes of title IV, giving aid to dependent children, a requirement that the child must have been deprived of parental support or care by reason of the death, continued absence from the home, or physical or mental incapacity of a parent. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 46: The House bill in defining the term "dependent child" for the purposes of title IV, relating to grants to States for aid to dependent children, contained a requirement that the child must be living in a "residence" maintained by one or more of certain relatives as his or their own home. The Senate amendment clarifies the meaning of the word "residence" by making it certain that it is not confined to a separately maintained house but refers to any place of abode, whether a separate house, an apartment, a room, a houseboat, or other place of abode. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 47 and 48: Under the House bill the allotments to each State from appropriations made for maternal and child-health services were made on the basis of the live births in such State as compared with the total number of live births in the United States. The Senate amendments provide that the proration shall be made on the basis of figures for the latest calendar year for which the Bureau of the Census has available statistics. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 49: This is a clarifying amendment. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 50: The House bill provided that the methods of administration required in the State plan for maternal and child-health services should be such as are "found by the Chief of the Children's Bureau to be" necessary for the efficient operation of the plan. The Senate amendment strikes out the matter above quoted so that the final judgment as to what methods are necessary in the State rests with the courts rather than with the Chief of the Children's Bureau. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 51: This is a clarifying amendment. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 52: This amendment requires the report filed by the State with respect to estimated expenditures for maternal and child-health services to include amounts appropriated or made available by political subdivisions of the State. The House bill required only amounts appropriated or made available by the State. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 53: The House bill provided that the Secretary of Labor, before stopping payments to a State for maternal and child health services on the ground that the State plan is not being complied with, should give notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency. The Senate amendment provides that the notice and opportunity for hearing must be "reasonable." The House recedes.

On amendment no. 54: This is a clarifying amendment. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 55: The House bill provided that the methods of administration required in the State plan for services to crippled children should be such as are "found by the Chief of the Children's Bureau to be" necessary for the efficient operation of the plan. The Senate amendment strikes out the matter above quoted so that the final judgment as to what methods are necessary in the State rests with the courts rather than with the Chief of the Children's Bureau. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 56: This is a clarifying amendment. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 57: This amendment requires the report filed by the State with respect to estimated expenditures for services to crippled children to include amounts appropriated or made available by political subdivisions of the State. The House bill required only amounts appropriated or made available by the State. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 58: The House bill provided that the Secretary of Labor, before stopping payments to a State for services to crippled children on the ground that the State plan is not being complied with, should give notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency. The Senate amendment provides that the notice and opportunity for hearing must be "reasonable." The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 59 and 60: The House bill authorized an appropriation of $1,500,000 and provided that the money so appropriated should be allotted among the States for payment of part of the cost of county and local child welfare services in rural areas. The purpose of the section was stated to be the cooperation with State public welfare agencies in establishing, extending, and strengthening, in rural areas, public welfare services for four types of children—homeless, neglected, dependent, and those in danger of becoming delinquent. Senate amendment no. 59, besides clarifying the language of the House bill, provided that in making allotments there should be taken into consideration plans developed both by the State welfare agency and the Children's Bureau. The areas in which child welfare services were to be encouraged were extended from "rural areas" to those "predominantly rural", and "other areas in special need" were included in the work of developing the work of State services for encouraging adequate support of child welfare organizations. The classes of children to be aided, however, were limited to those who were homeless or neglected. Amendment no. 60 prescribes the method of making payments. The House recedes on amendment no. 60, and recedes on amendment no. 59 with an amendment, to the effect that the classes of children to be cared for will include children who are homeless, dependent, neglected, or in danger of becoming delinquent.

On amendment no. 61: The House bill authorized additional appropriations for the administration of the Vocational Rehabilitation Act of June 2, 1920, as amended, by the "Federal agency authorized to administer it." The Senate amendment provides that the authorized appropriation should be for the administration of such act by the Office of Education in the Department of the Interior. The Senate recedes.

On amendments nos. 62, 63, and 64: These are clarifying amendments. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 65: The House bill established a Social Security Board for the administration of certain portions of the act. This amendment provides that the Board shall be established in the Department of Labor. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 66: This amendment provides that no member of the Social Security Board during his term shall engage in any other business, vocation, or employment, and also that not more than two of the members of the Board shall be members of the same political party. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 69: This amendment provides that appointments of attorneys and experts by the Social Security Board may be made without regard to the civil service laws. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 70: This amendment provides that the report of the Social Security Board to Congress, required by the House bill, shall be made through the Secretary of Labor. The Senate recedes.

On amendments nos. 71 and 72: The House bill provides that if more or less than the correct amount of tax under title VIII is paid with respect to any wage payment, then proper adjustments should be made in connection with subsequent wage payments to the same individual by the same employer. The Senate amendments provide that such adjustments shall be made without interest. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 73: This amendment provides that if the tax imposed by title VIII is not paid when due there shall be added as part of the tax interest at the rate of one-half of 1 percent per month from the date the tax became due until paid. Under the House bill the rate was 1 percent a month. The House recedes with an amendment correcting a clerical error.

On amendment no. 74: This amendment provides that the Postmaster General shall each month send a statement to the Treasury of the additional expenditures incurred by the Post Office Department in carrying out its duties under this act, and that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be directed to advance, from time to time, to the credit of the Post Office Department, "from appropriations made for the collection and payment of taxes provided under section 707 of this title", such amounts as may be required for additional expenditures incurred by the Post Office Department in the performance of the duties and functions required of the Postal Service by the act. The House recedes with clarifying amendments.

On amendments nos. 75 and 77: The House bill excepted from the term "employment", as used in title VIII imposing certain excise taxes, service performed as an officer or member of the crew of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States or of any foreign country. The Senate amendments strike out this exception and expressly include within the definition of "employment" service performed as an officer or member of the crew of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 76: The House bill excepted from the term "employment", as used in Title VIII relating to certain excise taxes, service performed by an individual who has attained the age of 65. The Senate amendment strikes out this exception. The Senate recedes.

On amendments nos. 78, 79, and 80: These are amendments to paragraph numbers. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 81: The House bill in defining the term "employment", as used in title VIII imposing certain excise taxes, excepted service performed in the employ of a corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual. The Senate amendment adds to the list of purposes "or hospital" as a clarifying amendment. The Senate recedes in conformity with the action on amendment no. 15.

On amendment no. 82: This amendment excepts from the definition of "employment", as used in title VIII relating to certain excise taxes, service performed in the employ of a corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 85: This is a change in a title heading. The House recedes with an amendment to conform to the action on amendment no. 91.

On amendments nos. 86 and 87: The House bill provided as one of the conditions for the approval of a State law for unemployment compensation that the law must provide that all compensation is to be paid through public employment offices in the State. The Senate amendment changes this requirement so that compensation must be paid through public employment offices in the State to the extent that such offices exist and are designated by the State for the purpose. The Senate recedes on amendment no. 86 and the House recedes on amendment no. 87 with an amendment changing the language of the amendment. The effect of the action of the conferees is to provide that the Board shall not approve any State law unless the law provides that all compensation is to be paid through public employment offices in the State or such other agencies as the Board may approve.

On amendment no. 88: The House bill provided that the Social Security Board shall certify each State whose unemployment compensation law is approved, except that it shall not certify any State which, after notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency, the Board finds has changed its law so that it no longer contains the provisions specified in the bill or has failed substantially to comply with such provisions. The Senate amendment provides that the notice and opportunity for hearing must be "reasonable." The House recedes.

On amendment no. 89: This amendment provides that if the excise tax imposed by title IX is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax interest at the rate of one-half of 1 percent per month from the date the tax became due until paid. Under the House bill the rate of interest was 1 percent a month. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 90 and 91: The House bill provided that the term "employment", as used in title IX, should not include any person unless on each of some 20 days during the taxable year, each day being in a different calendar week, the total number of individuals who were in his employ for some portion of the day (whether or not at the same moment of time) was 10 or more. The Senate amendments reduce the number of days from 20 to 13 and the number of individuals from 10 to 4. The Senate recedes on amendment no. 90 and the House recedes on amendment no. 91 with an amendment fixing the number of individuals at eight.

On amendment no. 92: The House bill, in defining the term "employment", as used in title IX relating to certain excise taxes, excepted service performed in the employ of a corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual. The Senate amendment adds to the list of purposes "or hospital" as a clarifying amendment. The Senate recedes in conformity with the action on amendment no. 15.

On amendment no. 93: This amendment excepts from the definition of "employment", as used in title IX imposing certain excise taxes, service performed in the employ of a corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation organized and operated exclusively for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 94: Under the House bill in title IX, providing for a tax on employers with a credit against the tax of contributions paid into an employment fund under a State law, the term "unemployment fund" was defined as a fund "all the assets of which are mingled and undivided and in which no separate account is maintained with respect to any person"; in other words, requiring a "pooled" fund. The Senate amendment strikes out this requirement, leaving it to the State to define the character of its special fund. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 95: This is a clerical amendment. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 96 and 97: Amendment no. 96 provides that a taxpayer under section 901 (unemployment excise tax) may, for 1938 or any taxable year thereafter, obtain an additional credit against his tax under certain conditions. A taxpayer carrying on business in a State will credit against the tax the amount of his contributions under the law of that State; and, under this new section, he will also credit the amount by which his contributions are less than they would have been if he had been contributing at the maximum rate in the State. The additional credit, however, is limited by not allowing it to exceed the difference between the actual amount paid and the amount he would have paid at a 2.7 percent rate; and the amendment also provides for limiting the additional credit to the proper difference allowed by the State law, diminishing it if the employer has failed to make any of the contributions required of him. In figuring what contributions the employer would have paid at the maximum rate, the highest rate applicable to any employer each time when contributions are payable is the rate considered. The amendment also provides that even if an employer is getting credit under section 902, and additional credit under this section, he shall never credit against tax more than 90 percent of the tax. Amendment no. 97 places restrictions on the allowance of the additional credit.

(1) A taxpayer who has been contributing to a pooled fund, and is allowed a lower rate than that imposed on other employers in the State, will get the additional credit only if he has had 3 years' compensation experience under the State law, and only if the lower rate is fixed as a result of his comparatively favorable experience.

(2) The taxpayer may have guaranteed the employment of his employees, and be contributing to a guaranteed employment account maintained by the State agency. In this case, if he claimed the additional credit under section 909, he would get it only if his guaranty had been fulfilled, and only if his guaranteed employment account amounted to at least 7½ percent of his guaranteed pay roll.

(3) The taxpayer may be contributing to a separate reserve account, from which benefits are payable only to his employees. If he claims the additional credit under section 909, it would be allowed only if, in the preceding year, those of his employees who became unemployed and were eligible for compensation received compensation from the reserve account. Furthermore, the additional credit would be allowed only if the reserve account amounted to 7½ percent of his pay roll, and was at least five times larger than the amount paid out from it, in compensation, in that year (among the 3 preceding years) when the greatest amount was thus paid out from it.

The amendments also defines terms used in this section:

(1) "Reserve account" is defined as a separate account in a State unemployment fund, from which compensation is payable only to the former employees of the employers contributing to the account. The account may be maintained with respect to one employer or a group of employers.

(2) "Pooled fund" is an unemployment fund (or part of such a fund, if some employers are maintaining separate accounts in the fund) in which all contributions are mingled and undivided. Compensation is payable from it regardless of whether the claimant was formerly in the employ of an employer contributing to the pooled fund; but where some employers in the State have reserve accounts, their former employees get compensation from the pooled fund only if the reserve accounts are exhausted.

(3) "Guaranteed employment account" is, like a reserve account, a separate account in an unemployment fund, but it can be maintained only with respect to certain employers. Compensation is payable from it to those of such employer's employees who, having been guaranteed employment, nevertheless become unemployed due to a failure to fulfill the guaranty, or become unemployed at the end of the year for which the guaranty was made, due to the nonrenewal of the guaranty. To be a "guaranteed employment account", such separate account would have to be maintained with respect to an employer who had guaranteed the wages of all of his employees (or if he maintains more than one distinct business establishment, of all the employees in at least one such establishment) for at least 40 weeks in a 12-month period. The wages guaranteed should be for at least 30 hours a week; but if 41 weeks, for instance, were guaranteed instead of 40, the weekly hours guaranteed could be cut from 30 to 29; and if 42 weeks were guaranteed, only 28 hours wages per week would need to be guaranteed. While ordinarily all the employees would have to be covered, the employer would not have to extend the guaranty to any new employee until the latter had served a probationary period of not more than 12 consecutive weeks.

(4) "Year of compensation experience", used only in relation to an employer, is defined as any calendar year during which, at all times in the year, a former employee of such employer, if there was one who was eligible for compensation, could receive compensation under the State law.

On amendments nos. 98 to 104: These amendments insert a new title to provide for grants to States for aid to the blind, authorizing $3,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the title. Aid to the blind is defined as money payments to permanently blind individuals and money expended for locating blind persons, for providing diagnoses of their eye condition, and for training and employment of the adult blind. The payments are to be made on an equal matching basis, the machinery for the payments being modeled on the provisions of title I relating to old-age assistance. The administration of the title is placed in the Social Security Board. The State plan in order to be approved must, in addition to similar requirements as in the case of title I, provide that no aid will be furnished an individual with respect to any period with respect to which he is receiving old-age assistance under a State plan approved under title I. The State plan must also provide that money payments to a permanently blind individual will be granted in direct proportion to his need and the plan must also contain definitions of "blindness" and "needy individuals" which meet the approval of the Board. There is no age requirement, and the Federal contribution in the case of any individual is not to exceed $15 a month. The House recedes on this new title with amendments striking out the provisions relating to the expenditure of moneys for locating blind persons, for providing diagnoses of their eye condition, and for training and employment of the adult blind; providing for money payments to blind persons in lieu of persons who are "permanently" blind; and omitting the requirements that the State plan must provide that money payments will be granted in direct proportion to the need of the individual and that the plan must contain definitions of "blindness" and "needy individuals."

On amendment no. 105: This amendment provides pensions for heads of families and single persons of Indian blood over 65 years of age, payable from the Federal Treasury. The pension is $30 a month, reduced in the amount of the annual income. The amendment also provides for a pension of $10 a month for persons of Indian blood under 65 years of age but permanently blind, and also a pension of $10 a month for persons of Indian blood crippled or otherwise disabled. Indians and Eskimos of Alaska are to receive pensions in one-half the amounts above provided. The Senate recedes.

On amendments nos. 106, 107, 110, 111, 112, and 113: These amendments make changes in title and section numbers. The House recedes with the necessary amendments.

On amendments nos. 108 and 109: The House bill provided that nothing in the act should be construed as authorizing any Federal official, in carrying out any provision of the act, to take charge of a child over the objection of either parent or of the person standing in loco parentis to the child "in violation of the law of a State." Senate amendment no. 108 added State officials to the officials affected by the amendment and Senate amendment no. 109 struck out the language above quoted, "in violation of the law of a State." The Senate recedes on amendment no. 108 and the House recedes on amendment no. 109.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill.

On amendments nos. 17, 67, 68, 83, and 84 (dealing with the exemption of private pension plans in titles II and VIII) the conferees are unable to agree.

R. L. DOUGHTON,
SAM B. HILL,
THOS. H. CULLEN,
ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
ISAAC BACHARACH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL].

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, the conferees on the social-security bill have agreed on all of the amendments in controversy except the so-called "Clark amendments", plus an amendment to that amendment known as the "Black amendment."

There were 113 Senate amendments. There are five of those amendments constituting a group known as the "Clark amendments" and to which the House conferees disagreed in conference, and we have brought them back to the House without including them in the conference report. Of the remaining 108 Senate amendments, about 50 percent of them were agreed to by the House, and the Senate receded on about the other 50 percent, with some amendments to certain of those Senate amendments.

Most of the amendments are purely clarifying.

You will appreciate the fact that the drafting service which serves the House also serves the Senate. We pass a bill first, and they have a little more time when they go before the Senate committee to improve the language. Many of the amendments are simply to improve the language. In other words, they are clarifying amendments. I am not going to take your time with those.

There are certain outstanding Senate amendments upon which the conferees of the House have agreed and to which I wish to call your attention. The first of these is the so-called "Russell amendment." You will recall that under the old-age assistance plan, as passed by the House, the Federal Government contributes dollar for dollar to State pension funds to the extent of $15 per person per month. In order for a State to get any of this Federal contribution, the State must have a State-wide pension plan and must put that plan into operation, and then the Federal Government matches whatever amount the State puts up, to the extent of $15 per person per month.

The Russell amendment grew out of the fact that certain States have constitutional prohibitions against a State pension plan. So the Senate adopted amendment no. 4, on page 5 of the bill. That amendment, in brief, provides that any State, for a period of 2 years, which does not have a pension plan approved by the social-security board and under which it can secure Federal contribution or Federal assistance, may receive from the Federal Government during that first 2 years, $15 per person for qualified citizens of a State, qualified under the provisions of the act to receive old-age pensions. For instance, the so-called "Russell amendment" provides that the Federal Government shall contribute the entire amount of pensions to needy aged persons in those States that are not under a State pension plan, and that the amount so paid shall be $15 per month to each person in such States who can qualify under the provisions of this act.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. In just a moment. States that can qualify within that period get only so much, not exceeding $15 per person, as the States contribute. A State with an approved pension plan may pay to its pensioners or its aged needy a total of $20 per month. The State in that case would pay $10 and the Federal Government would pay $10; but under the Russell amendment, where a State has no plan, the Federal Government would pay the $15 per month per person in such State.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. TERRY. Under the Russell plan is it the gentleman's idea that those States which are financially unable to contribute to an old-age-pension plan would get the benefit of the Federal allowance up until 1937?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That was the effect of it, but it grew out of the fact——

Mr. TERRY. It grew out of that fact, but does not the gentleman feel that the people in those States which cannot contribute at this time on account of the depression should be allowed until 1937?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It simply comes down to a question of whether you are going to have a purely Federal pension fund or a Federal-aid pension fund. If you once adopt that policy you will never get out of it. It is a question for the Congress to determine, as we did determine in passing the original bill, that we would have a Federal assistance plan and not a Federal plan.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is it the gentleman's interpretation of the provision agreed upon by the conferees that only those States can participate under that clause which have in their constitutions prohibitions again a pension fund?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes. The amendment that we bring back here is to that effect. In other words, it is applicable only to those States.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is applicable only to those States which have a flat prohibition in their constitutions against a pension plan?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Now, may I ask the gentleman this question: Suppose States have in their constitutions tax limitations which forbid the raising of sufficient funds to pay pensions, will States in that category be able to participate?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Not under this amendment, as I understand it. In fact, they ought not to. They ought to come in with every other State. We have a number of States throughout the United States that will have to enact legislation in order to come under the provisions of this act.

This Russell amendment, as amended at the conference and brought back to you, simply places the State which has a constitutional prohibition against State pension plans on the same basis as all other States which can, under their constitutions, participate in such a plan.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. I should like to ask the gentleman if his interpretation of the amendment finally placed in the bill by the House conferees in place of section 4 does not do simply this: That if a State has a constitutional prohibition against its legislature enacting legislation to bring the State within the purview of this bill, that under this amendment the State may participate provided some subdivision or subdivisions of the State government match the Federal grants without the State doing it itself.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The gentleman has stated it very correctly and very concisely.

Mr. NICHOLS. That being true, then this language does not mean that if there is a constitutional prohibition against the legislature passing a law to bring the State within the purview of this bill, that the Federal Government will make these grants without any contribution from the State for a period of 2 years, does it?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It does not; no.

Mr. NICHOLS. And that is exactly what the Russell amendment did, was it not?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is what it did, not only to that class of States but to all other States for a period of 2 years—States which had no State pension plan.

Mr. NICHOLS. In the event the State constitution was silent as to whether the legislature could pass old-age-pension legislation, and assuming the attorney general of the State should hold that by reason of the constitution being silent on the subject that legislation could not be had touching it until such time as the constitution was amended, does the gentleman think that the other subdivisions of the State government down to the county and city could raise the money with which to match the Federal funds?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That would be a matter left to the interpretation of the board upon the presentation of the law and constitutional provisions.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman place in the RECORD the names of the States involved?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes; I think I can do it. The gentleman means involved by reason of some State constitutional prohibition?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I am not certain that I have all the names of the States in mind; there are three or four of them. I understand that Georgia, Florida, and possibly Oklahoma and Texas are the States in question.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. It is necessary for these county and city units to make the contribution in order to receive the benefits?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Oh, yes. Without contribution from within the States there is not going to be any payment of Federal money under this act, as amended.

Mr. GREEN. It must be matched dollar for dollar?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes; dollar for dollar.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Do I understand that for the next 2-year period the States affected would have to put up any money, or would they get $15 a month?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The Federal Government will not pay $15 to them unless they come through with $15 either from the State government or some subdivision of the State. They must first put up pension money to be matched by the Federal Government. They will not get any Federal money otherwise.

Mr. GREEN. I mean before this becomes effective.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is true.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. But as to the State which already has an old-age-pension law which may not conform to the Federal requirement, they would have to change their law before they could qualify.
